It seems to me that everything depends upon the answer we give to this one question: "In granting or withholding the benefit of its ordinances, is the Church dealing with its own?" If it is, then it is tyranny for any power to step in and impose limitations on its action in regard to these ordinances. Supposing some wealthy man, whose custom is of the greatest importance to some struggling tradesman, says to the latter: "If you do so and so, I shall withdraw my custom from you;" would that be intimidation in the eye of the law? The Church says to its members: "You are at perfect liberty to withdraw yourselves from communion with us if you like; only, if you do so, you will be eternally lost. While you remain with us, however, you must obey ecclesiastical authority." I cannot see that there is a shadow of legal intimidation in this, any more than when a doctor tells his patient that, if he does not quit a certain neighborhood, he will surely contract a fatal disease. The Church may be an impostor, and the doctor may be a quack. Each gives its opinion for what it is worth; and only according to the individual conviction of the person addressed can either opinion have any practical result. You cannot possibly legislate away the belief that people have in their priests or in their doctors, and if the proposed Rhode Island law is ever entered on the Statute Book, I do not hesitate to predict that it will be little else than a dead letter.

Believe me, yours very truly,

WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, March 20, 1876.

[If no threatnings or intimidations are made, of course no penalty could be imposed. So far we are all agreed. But the question whether a Catholic parent shall or shall not send his child to the public school is not a question between the Church and "its own," but between the citizen and the State; and if the State has no right to protect its citizens from priestly interference with their civil rights, then it is powerless to protect its own existence from the ill-disguised treason of the Church. If we err not in this matter (which we confess to be a difficult one), the State has a right to say that any intimidation which is calculated to curtail individual liberty in the enjoyment of civil privileges is a crime against the person, and to punish it accordingly. This does not seem to us to be equivalent to commanding the Church to do this or that; it is only prohibiting it from "dealing with its own" in such a way as to violate the latter's personal rights. Why should not the Church be permitted to "deal with its own" by burning them, if heretical, at the stake? Simply because the free State will not and cannot concede that any man is the "Church's own"; it holds that property in man is abolished, whether the pretended "owner" is a Southern planter or a Catholic Church; and it holds that its own right to protect the citizen is paramount to any pretended right of the Church to oppress him. On no other ground can the State hinder the Church from reestablishing the Inquisition; and we do not see why the same principle does not require it to hinder the Church from preventing, by force or intimidation, the exercise of the Catholic's right to send his child to such a school as he freely prefers.—ED.

NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, March 23, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

There is nothing, I think, in this Centennial year, calculated to impress one more strikingly with the progress of our country during the century than what is presented to the eye in passing along Tenth Avenue, in this city, from Christopher Street to the Battery. For the whole distance, a couple of miles, or more, the bank of the Hudson is crowded with buildings, inscribed with large letters, denoting the places of departure of railroads and of steamers, not only to all parts of our own country, near and distant, north, south, east, and west, but also to the most remote countries of the globe. One has only to step on board, directly from the street, to find himself en route for almost any point of either hemisphere. The entrances are all thronged, with men and teams jostling against each other, and all intently at work like ants upon their hill.

But the best part of this evidence of progress comes from the impression that thus the whole world is brought into neighborhood, not only in the exchange of commodities, but in personal intercourse, in the knowledge of each other, and that, as a natural result, the best in the old civilizations and the new must be brought to the surface, and its worth mutually appreciated and adopted. And so it seems the means of bringing into brotherhood all the nations of the earth, of breaking down the prejudices of race and of religion, of exposing the superstitions of the Christian as well as of the so-called Pagan world, and of finally establishing a free, natural, and universal religion out of the best elements of all that have existed, and exempt from the narrowness and superstition of each. Is it not possible that our next Centennial may behold a result so magnificent for the race of man?

I lately met a young lady belonging to a family noted for its zeal and activity in carrying forward missionary and various other Christian enterprises. It has been a difficult thing to keep her in the Orthodox traces. She has had a great tendency to think for herself; and, although at the college in this State at which she was educated, she said it was the rule that, if possible, no one should graduate without being able to answer in the affirmative to the oft-repeated question, "Do you love Jesus?" she came away, still ungathered into the fold. But a new minister, she said, came to the church her family attended. The society was in a low state, and he wished to signalize his presence by building it up. As the best means of doing this, he concentrated his efforts upon the young people. She was again and again the subject of admonition and entreaty. The Church was one of the old Calvinistic type. She told the minister she could not join a Church where she was required to believe that people were elected to be saved or to be lost. Oh, he said, the Church did not believe in that doctrine, and she need not trouble herself about it. She finally consented to enroll herself among its members, and presented herself publicly to make her profession of faith. And what was her astonishment, she said, as the articles were read to her by her minister, to hear him enunciate, "You profess to believe that from all eternity God, in his good pleasure, elected some to everlasting life, and others to everlasting death!" But what could she do? There she stood before the congregation; she had not the courage to withdraw to her seat, or to speak out her denial. And so, she says, "I was got into the Church under false pretences."

A few weeks since, I attended worship at the magnificent synagogue of the Reformed Jews on Fifth Avenue. The service is, on their alternate Sabbaths, in German and in English. The subject of a succession of discourses, as it appeared, had been in answer to the question, "Why are we Jews?" The portion of the answer chiefly dwelt upon that day was, "Because of the freedom given us by our religion." This was a little surprising to me, as I had supposed they were strictly bound by their Hebrew Scriptures. I would like to have illustrations of the grounds and the operations of this freedom. The "frozen music" of the architecture, and the fluent music of the powerful choir, which moved steadily on in its grandeur, as it were "the sound of many waters," were enough of themselves to enwrap the attention, and to thrill the soul. And then the ruddy and brilliant illumination of the cabinet, wherein are kept the Books of the Law, and the crimson, ever-burning light of the temple, suspended high above the altar, were striking features of the gorgeous ornamentations. The congregation was large, and seemingly devout. The evidences of wealth were apparent, not only in the elegance of the edifice, but in the richness of dress of many of the women. And I have never noticed, in an assembly of its size, so many beautiful faces as were presented by the brilliant coloring and fine features of many of the young Jewesses. A. H.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Standing beneath the dome of the Capitol at Washington, I looked upon those great pictures which are supposed to represent eras in our country's history, like the "Landing of Columbus," etc. Among them is the "Baptism of Pocahontas." Does that represent an era in our history? Upon no other supposition than that our nation is Christian. On that supposition it has vast significance, and is worthy of a place in the nation's dome. But if our nation is not Christian, as Washington and Congress have decisively declared by a solemn treaty, then such a picture in the dome of the Capitol is an impertinence; it has nothing at all to do with the development of the American idea. If it was a fine work of art, we might keep it for that reason; but being only a daub, the quicker it is rubbed out the better. The dome of the Capitol should be consecrated to the pure expression of our nation's life, and to put into it the representation of a mere ecclesiastical ceremony is a wrong. It gives a feeling of discord, and it seems to me that liberals should protest against it as much as they do against the Bible in the schools; for the impressions of art are as enduring as those of mere teaching, and here is a continual impression made upon every visitor to the Capitol that our nation is a "Christian" nation. I, for one, protest against it. The pictures in the Capitol should cultivate simply a national feeling, an American feeling. Let ecclesiasticism withdraw its officious symbols.

The whole Capitol, after all, is but a poor expression of our national life. It has too much the air of a grand hotel. It is gaudy, and is but a reflex of European art, and a mere photograph at that, and not a copy made by a living soul. But we want no copies, however grand, but the strong and simple product of our own soil, something massive and magnificent as our own hills, light, and airy, and brilliant as our skies, vast as our hopes. We have had our Washingtons, and Lincolns, and Websters; we now want some Angelos and Raphaels. But, alas! we see not even the dawn of one as yet.

A RADICAL LOOKER-ON IN WASHINGTON.

MASONRY.

This ancient institution has kept its purity, notwithstanding all the assaults, insults, and misrepresentations which have been made against it. Its secrets are similar to the secrets of Nature after we have ascertained them. We are not afraid, and do not think, as some people do, that they are bad, or the products of Beelzebub. Masonry is as broad as humanity. Special religions and politics have no place here; but some members will bring their private notions into it. On the 23d of March, A. L. 5876, we had a public installation and banquet in Belknap Chapter, Dover, N. H. The ceremonies are very impressive, and the charges given to the several officers are broad and excellent. Every man, Jew, Mohammedan, Christian, and Radical, can accept them. But in one of the charges the phrase "Christian charity" has been put in. With due respect for all good endeavors in any church, we must say this is a gross mistake, and anti-masonic. We hope that it may be taken out and carried to one or the other of the Christian churches where it belongs. We have here, like the Free Religious Association, no offensive Christian, Jewish, or Mohammedan charity; but every good Mason, just as well as every good man, ought to practice human charity,—that is, charity to all human beings. Just as "all men are created free and equal," so ought all men to be charitable to each other. Specifications or special claims imply or manifest partiality and assumption, which we find in the Church and among ecclesiastics; but when our mind is developed to common sense and common honesty, we must have common charity and common virtue. CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N. H., March 26, 1876.

I GOT to chatting with a German acquaintance, and asked him what he was doing. He replied, "Shoost now nodings, but I haf made arranchments to go into pizness." "Glad to hear it. What are you going into?" "Vell, I goes into partnership mit a man." "Do you put in much capital?" "No, I doesn't put in no capital." "Don't want to risk it, eh?" "No, but I puts in de experience." "And he puts in the capital?" "Yes, dat is it. We goes into pizness for drie years; he puts in de gapital, I puts in de experience. At the end of drie years I will have de gapital and he will have de experience."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON, has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	3.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Science and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.50
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Friest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
COONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Bomola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.00
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	3.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	1.00
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.25
Studies for Stories.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Boy.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy. A Story.....	.50
Poor Matt; or, The Cloned Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versifications, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Hooks.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	3.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kickos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Dogmatism and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLXV. A Christmas Story.....	.40
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMER:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	3.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 8 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snake, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Man.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTEK'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homofield.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

PEROT BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DRINK PINE GROVE

MINERAL SPRING WATER!

The best Alkaline Chalybeate found in twenty-eight years' practice of medicine, and diligent search for the best remedies for disease. It contains alkaline matter and iron in such proportions as to promote the circulation in the portal veins, regulate the secretions, remedy constipation, and give a good appetite. The iron reproduces the red globules in the blood, and invigorates the nervous system. No experienced physician and no well-informed person can deny the good effects of the ingredients.

For Invalids, arrangements have been made with the proprietor of the New Hampshire House, and with several farmers near the Springs, for good and cheap board.

AGENCIES:

WM. H. VICKERY, Apothecary, Dover, N.H.

Z. FOSTER CAMPBELL, Apothecary, Manchester, N.H.

SULLIVAN & LOTZ, Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

SCRIPPS & PARKER, 31 and 33 Court Square, Boston.

For Circulars, Agencies, and Information, address

Office Pine Grove Mineral Springs, DOVER, N.H.

DR. J. EDWARD BRUCE

Is prepared to lecture before Lyceums, and other societies desiring his services. He offers the following list of Lectures:—

1. The Education Question, considered as the Coming Crisis in American Politics.

2. Christian versus Chamo-Civilization.

3. The Place of Spiritual Phenomena in a Right Philosophy of Man.

4. The Origin and Development of the Spiritual Element in Man.

5. Christianity and Free Religion.

6. The Religious Outlook.

7. Supernatural Selection.

8. English Labor and English Laborers as I saw Them.

Address

J. EDWARD BRUCE, M.D.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 25 cts. each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 6, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1876. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States.

All of these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them, and everything connected with them, will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in The Sun.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by The Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of GRANT's administration, and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this The Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.

The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon GRANT's aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read The Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting, and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence, and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year, postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to Clubs, Agents, Postmasters, or anyone.

The Daily Sun, a large, four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55c. a month, or $6.50 a year. Sunday edition extra, $1.20 per year. We have no travelling agents.

Address THE SUN, New York City.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876.

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expense of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars.

This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and head-quarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

ALEXANDER LOOS,

ISAAC RHEN,

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,

H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1876.

WHOLE No. 329.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

SAYS THE New York Graphic: "The Hippodrome Moody meetings have cost $125,000, and the managers are $60,000 in debt. And yet there is some suffering among the poor."

THOMASSEN, the "dynamite fiend," turns out to be really Alexander Keith, Jr., and was born at Halifax, Nova Scotia. This is the statement of the second official report made at Bremen, and makes the accusations of "American civilization" on his account look foolish enough.

A PUBLIC MEETING of the Boston Liberal League will be held at Parker Memorial Hall, in this city, on Friday evening, April 14, at half-past seven o'clock. Rev. Minot J. Savage will give an address on "State Secularization." Important matters will be brought before the League. All persons interested are cordially invited to attend.

N. P. WILLIS, according to Dr. Edward Beecher, having joined the church in a revival, wanted to get out after the excitement was cooled. Dr. Beecher told him he would have to do something bad, and get excommunicated. So Mr. Willis went to the theatre! Sure enough, he got his release in consideration of such unpardonable wickedness.

POPE PIUS IX. granted a special dispensation to allow the marriage of Miss Edith Story (daughter of the well-known sculptor) to the Commendatore Peruzzi, a member of the King's household. She is a Protestant, and could not in Catholic estimation be legally married to a Catholic without the Pope's permit; and this is the first time the present Pope has ever granted it.

It is quite evident that Mrs. Besant is rapidly making friends among INDEX readers by her very interesting "English Sketches." Many have expressed to us their great satisfaction in these weekly letters. Her present letter is full of instruction for American Liberals, pointing out as it does the protective power of a national organization in cases where the individual rights of freethinkers are invaded. It should be remembered that one chief object of the Centennial Congress of Liberals is to pave the way for such an organization in this country.

BISHOP FERRETTE addressed the following inquiry to us on the first of April: "Do you not think that, in present circumstances, it would be well to drop the fifth 'Demand of Liberalism'—so far as it objects to the appointment of days of public humiliation and prayer, at any rate"? If the date of his note can safely be disregarded, we would answer that it would be "well" to omit the Demand referred to, provided the practice it specifies does not, in any degree, connect the State with the Church; and the consideration of this point we would respectfully refer back to the Bishop.

MR. OLIVER JOHNSON has just taken charge of the Orange, N. J., Journal. He avows himself a "Republican Reformer," and declares that to seek reform through the Democratic party would be like jumping into a morass to avoid the mud of the highway. Per contra, a deacon in Cleveland who is one of the uncounted army of independent voters, being twitted by a party man with being on the fence, retorted: "Yes, I am on the fence, and there I propose to stay as long as it is so confoundedly muddy on both sides." Everybody seems to have a profound consciousness of "mud" in politics; why is there no resolute movement to macadamize the road with a good civil service system?

THE PHILADELPHIA Christian Statesman is exulting over the adoption and proclamation of its own Christian Amendment ideas by Rev. A. P. Putnam, D. D., a prominent Unitarian clergyman of Brooklyn, N. Y. In a recent "Centennial sermon," he is quoted as saying: "Such was the priceless legacy which the builders of our American republic received from the colonists. Not that obnoxious idea of 'Church and State,' which is only too often made use of in our day to prejudice unthinking men against a reasonable and legitimate recognition and influence of religion in our civil government and public affairs, but that better idea of a free and unsectarian commonwealth which, while it respects the right of private judgment, and tolerates and protects all denominations and communions in the exercise and enjoyment of their faith and worship, yet acknowledges its allegiance to and dependence upon the God of nations, and seeks to make the general truths and principles of Christianity the law of its life." The Statesman, after further quotations of the same drift, says: "The principles and demands of secularists are next met with deserved ridicule and indignation. The 'Demands of Liberalism' are quoted in full, and their logical outcome clearly shown." We have not seen this sermon of Rev. Dr. Putnam, and should be glad to republish his argument against the "Demands of Liberalism," if we could obtain a copy.

IN AN editorial article which attempts (with greater labor than success) to be sarcastic, the Brooklyn Catholic Review criticises our late lecture on the school question, but can discover no argument against it except the intimation that "the State is as directly and even more imperatively called on to assist in providing bread and butter [for children] as in furnishing spelling-books." It is such cheap sophistries as this that alone fill the arsenal of Catholic logic on this question. The State does provide "bread and butter," in its almshouses and orphan asylums, for such children as are thrown upon its care; but the parents who have made themselves responsible for the child's existence have thereby made themselves responsible for continuing it until the child is able to provide for his own necessities, and the State is under no obligation to assume this responsibility until the parents are dead or helpless. The "bread and butter" thus furnished by the parents is an immediate daily want of the child during his minority, and the parents' duty to furnish it ends with his minority; beyond that period, the child is bound to provide for himself by his own labor. But the education to which the child is as much entitled as he is to "bread and butter" is not an immediate daily want, but rather a provident provision for future wants sure to be felt alike by himself, by his parents, and by society. Who gets the benefit of the "bread and butter"? The child and the parents alone, from day to day; and, the child being helpless, the parents must furnish it. But who is to get the benefit of the education? The child, the parents to some degree, and the State to a still greater degree; and, the child being helpless, the parents and the State should divide the expense. The child's need of "bread and butter," being an immediate want, constitutes a claim on the parents alone; but his need of education, which is simply provision for future wants after the parental responsibility has ceased, constitutes a joint claim on the parents and the State, and the State's just and wise response is the public school system. One would think all this sufficiently obvious even to an ordinary comprehension; but the comprehension of the Catholic Review is so very extraordinary that it is perhaps well enough to state it in plain English.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VERMONT, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Massey, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—E. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; G. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruachko.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUSTIN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAG CLAIR, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zuning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSTOWN, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Woman and Politics.

AN ESSAY READ BEFORE THE CHESTNUT STREET CLUB, BOSTON, MARCH 27, 1876.

BY REV. E. S. ELDER.

The woman's movement is of such magnitude, and is advocated by so many intelligent men and women, that its claims can no longer be ignored by those who heretofore have been indifferent. If the arguments in its behalf are valid, if a wrong is done to women by withholding the ballot, it is the imperative duty of every lover of justice to exert his influence in behalf of the rights of woman. On the other hand, if the woman's movement in its most prominent features is the product of unnatural and temporary conditions, partial and ill-considered conclusions, if it is one of the most conspicuous manifestations of an unhealthy tendency, if its success threatens more harm than it promises good, it is the no less imperative duty of every one interested in the social and moral welfare of the individual and the State to oppose the movement. In short, be the character of the woman's movement what it may, it should no longer be ignored by the vast majority of intelligent men and women.

The advocates of the woman's movement have been so much in earnest, so persuasively eloquent, and in the absence of all dignified opposition have made their case so clear, that many have been convinced, or I should say converted, by the earnestness of others' convictions without having given any independent thought to the subject. Many there are who in a mild way take it for granted that, if Mrs. Lucy Stone, Mrs. Livermore, or Mrs. Howe wish to vote, they ought to be allowed to. They do not stop to inquire if there are any objections to all that is implied in the extension of suffrage to women.

Nearly all that is said concerning the woman's movement is in its favor. Those who are opposed or indifferent to the movement, those who are not yet fully convinced of the validity of its claims and the conclusiveness of the arguments in its behalf, have but little, if anything, to say upon the subject. Hence it happens that the real objections to the extension of the franchise to woman, the objections to her participation with man in public and political life and duties, as seen by those who are in a condition to feel their force, are seldom, if ever, stated. It is true that objections are alluded to on the woman's suffrage platform, but not by those who feel their force, nor in a manner to make others recognize and appreciate their importance. And by many, particularly the advocates of the woman's movement, it is taken for granted that there are no real objections whose considerations can for a moment stand in the way of the recognition and acknowledgment of woman's right to vote, and the expediency and necessity of allowing her to vote and to share with man the honor and responsibilities of political life. In brief, only one side of this subject has been presented to the public with any degree of rigor and vigor. It has occurred to me that the other side should be set forth. It is not expected that the faith of a single advocate of woman's suffrage will be shaken in the least. On the contrary, the convictions of the woman suffragist will in all probability be strengthened and deepened by all that is said in opposition to the movement. Our idols are never so dear to us as when some rude iconoclast tells us that they are idols and not gods. It is confidently hoped that those who have not given the subject any attention, and who are inclined to allow the claims of the suffragists without any question as to their validity, will, at least, be made to perceive that there are two sides to the question, both of which need to be considered before they commit themselves to either.

It will be the purpose of this essay—

First. To examine the reasons urged in behalf of the extension of the franchise to woman, and of her participation with man in the functions of government.

Second. To state a few of the principal objections to the proposed change, and all it includes and stands for.

It is freely admitted in the outset that, if it can be shown that woman needs the ballot to secure and preserve her natural rights—namely, the right to personal security, the right to personal liberty, the right to private property, and the right to remedies for wrongs done to her,—if this can be shown, woman may properly demand the ballot as a matter of right. I should lay it down as a principle of law that whatever is essential to the enjoyment of a natural right may itself be demanded as a secondary right. If the withholding the ballot from woman precludes her from the most complete enjoyment of any one of her natural rights, she is defrauded, she is wronged. But before this secondary right can be demanded as a right, it must be shown to be essential to the enjoyment of the natural right.

It is admitted that, if it can be shown that the welfare of the State would be advanced by woman's participation in political life, that participation may be urged on grounds of expediency.

Even if a majority of the intelligent women of a State feel and believe that they suffer from their inability to vote, and otherwise participate with man in public life, or if they believe that woman's vote would secure any good to women or to the State that will not or cannot be secured by man, this fact would constitute a violent presumption in favor of such participation.

Indeed, if it could be shown that men are indifferent to the interests of women, or from any reason incompetent or unwilling to promote those interests as well as woman herself, then most certainly woman should be encouraged in her efforts to share in those privileges by which alone her highest welfare can be secured.

The advocates of woman's suffrage claim and endeavor to show that woman is entitled to the franchise as a matter of natural right, and also as a matter of what I have termed secondary right; that is, as the means essential to the enjoyment of the universally-admitted natural rights.

It is asserted that the laws in their relation to women are unjust and cruel; that just laws will not be enacted until women vote; that wages of men and women respectively are unequal, and that woman's vote is necessary to the establishment of justice.

The woman suffragists insist that the assessment of taxes upon the property of women who cannot vote is tyranny.

Again, woman suffragists claim that the welfare of the State would be promoted by woman's participation in the functions of government.

Natural right, unjust laws, unequal wages, taxation without representation, political expediency,—these are the claims put forth in behalf of woman's suffrage.

Let us examine these claims. If they are valid, there can be no question but woman is entitled to political equality with man. An examination of the criticisms by woman suffragists of one law will serve to illustrate the character of their objections to nearly all laws from whose operation they believe women to suffer.

The woman suffragists criticize those provisions of law by which a widow is entitled to only a life interest in one-third of the husband's unencumbered real estate. The one case always cited on the suffrage platform to illustrate the injustice of man-made laws is this: a man dies leaving a widow and real estate, or other property accumulated by the joint and perhaps equal labors of the husband and wife. The brothers of the husband—on the woman's suffrage platform it is always brothers or other male heirs—take the two-thirds of the estate, leaving the widow nothing but the income of the other third. To give force to the argument, it is usually asked, if this widow had a vote or voice in the making of the laws, would she not desire to change this one by whose provisions she has been wronged? All who judge of the law by its operations in one case very naturally desire to change it, and are easily convinced that, if women helped to make the laws, this law that works so unjustly would be repealed.

Before we assume that this law is unjust, and before we attribute its assumed injustice to the fact that it was enacted by man, and before we decide that woman's participation in the making of the laws will do away with the assumed injustice of this one, let us determine the reasons for the law.

The laws regulating the settlement of estates and the inheritance of property do not and cannot regard the interests of any one class exclusively; neither can a law be judged by its operation in any one case.

The laws which determine the disposal of estates have in view many separate and oftentimes conflicting interests. There are the rights of the creditors of the estate; there are the rights of the children; and in the absence of children there are the interests of other relatives who are quite as liable to be women as men; there are also the rights of the widow. Now it is no easy matter to devise a uniform rule of law that shall work absolute justice to all in every case.

Let us take the case as stated on the suffrage platform, and make such changes as will show the operation of the law in many cases. Suppose the estate is insolvent—that is, suppose that the husband owed ten dollars for every dollar of assets,—will the creditors say that it is just for the widow to take one-third of that property that actually belongs to the creditors? Yet this law allows her the third, even though it is the property of the creditors.

Suppose the property is inherited by the husband, or accumulated by the joint labors of the husband and a former wife whose children are the only children of the husband. The widow may have been the wife of a year or month, yet the law gives her the one-third during life.

Is it true to say that this law is unjust to woman? No doubt a case can be found in which the uniform rule does not promote absolute justice as regards the widow; but the one benefited by the injustice is as likely to be a woman as a man. It is not, as is always represented on the woman's suffrage platform, a question between man and woman. It is a question between the widow on the one hand, and creditors and heirs on the other. The law must be considered in its relations to all classes if we would determine its character. This same law, whose operation in one case is so often cited as an illustration of man's injustice to woman, and of the meanness of man-made laws, is seen, when its entire scope and purport are fairly considered, to be generous in its provisions for woman. It endows every woman at the moment of her marriage with a life-interest in one-third of her husband's estate. But if this law of inheritance, or any other law, operates unjustly as regards woman, man is as ready to repeal the injustice as woman herself can be, and for the obvious reason that the interests of men and women are identical. Injustice to one is equal injustice to the other. It is by arraying the interests of the one sex in antagonism with the interests of the other that a false issue is raised.

The history of legislation during the last twenty-five years demonstrates the fact that legislators are able and willing to enact laws as just as any suggested by women themselves. This one law of inheritance has been dwelt upon for the purpose of showing the character of the claim for woman's suffrage based upon the assumed injustice of the laws toward woman. An examination of this law reveals the fact that there is not the most remote probability that woman's vote would change it, or that woman's interest would be promoted by any important change in its provisions.

A second argument in behalf of woman's suffrage and woman's participation in the making of the laws is based upon the inequality of the wages of men and women respectively. It is claimed that great injustice is done to women by this inequality of wages.

It is confidently asserted that with the ballot in her hand woman would be able to make the wages of woman equal to those of men. Here are two assumptions that deserve notice: first, it is assumed that wages can be determined by legislation. Secondly, it is assumed that all, or at least a majority of, men would favor an increase of woman's wages. Have these assumptions any basis in fact? Is this inequality of wages to be attributed to the character of legislation? Can the Legislature legitimately determine the rate of interest, or of wages, save in the absence of agreement between the contracting parties? As regards this assumption, it is sufficient to say that it is becoming the generally-established principle that it is not a function of the State to determine the rates of interest and wages. Citizens are left at liberty to obtain as much labor for their money, and as much money for their labor as they can. The inequality between the wages of men and those of women is to be attributed to the fact that there is a greater demand for the labor of men than for that of women. The army and navy are filled with men; commerce is carried on exclusively by men. More than four-fifths of men are engaged in work that women have no desire to do, work that women are not fitted to do. Men build cities, construct railroads. Fishing, lumbering, farming, and the mechanical pursuits require the muscular power of men. In short, the heavy work of the world is, and must be, carried on by men, by that sex that has the ability of uninterrupted labor. Again, there is a continual exodus of young men from the East. They leave a great inequality in the sexes. In the State of Massachusetts there are 63,000 females in excess of males.

Another fact to be taken into consideration in this connection is the great change that has taken place during the last thirty years in woman's relation to manual labor. No longer than thirty years ago the cotton and woollen mills, and many other manufactories, were filled by the farmers' daughters of New England. Thirty years ago a young woman could leave her comfortable home in the country and engage in any labor—in housekeeping, in the manufactories—without losing caste. Honest labor was honorable. The divorce between manual labor and intelligence had not then taken place.

Within the last thirty years a revolution has taken place. The mills are filled with French Canadians, the kitchens are infested with imported stupidity.

A large portion of labor formerly performed by intelligent American girls is now poorly done by a very ignorant class, mostly foreign. What is the result? An army of intelligent American girls have nothing to do.

Many have found employment in teaching, in stores, in printing-offices, and in many places to which women were strangers thirty years ago. It is safe to say that for every one who has found employment there are half-a-dozen needing it. Some of the better educated are pressing forward toward other and higher callings,—literature, art, science. Philanthropies promise opportunity; for every one who succeeds scores are struggling for success. This intelligent, oftentimes refined, class of women, dependent upon the work of their hands for subsistence, constitutes the suffering class. Their lives are silent tragedies.

Beneath them are the ignorant, the coarse, the brutal, the vicious. Above them is the upper millstone, the intelligent, cultured, refined, virtuous, the well-to-do, and the wealthy, whose indifference to the silent suffering so near to them is as pitiless, as heartless, as God's stars in the heavens.

It is obvious that no one is responsible for this condition of things. In the presence of this army of intelligent American women, each individual of which is competing with every other, it is not difficult to perceive why women receive less wages than men, even for the performance of the same labor. If a merchant is obliged to pay a man $1,200 a year, and half-a-dozen women are anxious to obtain the situation for half that sum, what can be done to prevent the merchant from preferring the man, or employing one of the six women at the lower rate? Other things being equal, the merchant will prefer to have the man to keep his books or sell his goods. Merchants and others who employ men to do what women can do, have more confidence in the ability of men for uninterrupted labor than they have in women. The marriage of the man in no way interferes with his labor. The marriage of the woman does.

But be the causes what they may, those who carry on business prefer men to women in those cases where both can do the work.

Here are two causes operating against women: the inequality of the sexes, and the still greater inequality between the competitors for that kind of work that each sex can do nearly as well as the other; the marked preference of employers for men. In short, here is the inexorable and inevitable law of supply and demand. Now the advocates of woman's suffrage are not the only people who are unwilling to recognize the uniform and inexorable law. Very many wise people have flattered themselves, in all ages of the world, that they could in some way control the inevitable. Most of us have outgrown all hope of changing the law of gravitation; but there are other laws no less uniform that many sensible and sentimental people expect to abrogate with the magic wand. Strange as it may seem, there are those to-day who fondly hope to determine the relations of labor, and the product of labor, that is, capital, by a vote.

The fact is that the uniform laws of gravitation, of supply and demand, are far more beneficent, far more philanthropic, than any of the proposed amendments.

An examination of the second assumption, regarding woman's wages, will make manifest one of the characteristic fallacies of the woman's movement. It is confidently assumed that all, or a majority of, women would favor an increase of woman's wages. It is obvious that all women who receive a salary are interested in its increase; but in the consideration of this subject all the women of the State are not to be identified with those who work for wages. There are women who pay wages. Nearly all women indirectly contribute to the payment of wages to women. It is assumed that the question of wages is a question between men on the one hand, and women on the other. It is also assumed that woman is more friendly to woman than man is. What are the facts? Do women pay larger salaries to their employees than men pay for the same service? Do those women who work for wages prefer women for employers? Are all of the women of a town in favor of paying the lady teachers the same salaries that are paid to the gentlemen?

Instead of this matter of wages being a question between men and women respectively, it is a question between producers and consumers, between the vast majority both of men and women who are interested in cheap production on the one hand, and the producing minorities on the other, who favor high prices for their labor.

Let this be stated in a concrete form. The woman who teaches school is in favor of high salaries for teachers. She is equally desirous of buying her books, her wearing apparel, at the lowest price. She is indirectly interested in small salaries for the woman who helps to make the paper, for her who sets the type, for the woman who binds the book, for the saleswoman, for the lady bookkeeper in the store in which she buys her books,—in brief, she is benefited by low wages for every one beside herself. Many women's wages or salaries enter into the cost of nearly everything which she consumes. On the suffrage platform, and in the suffrage literature, it is always the cruel, selfish men who alone are benefited by the cheap labor of women. In view of the foregoing considerations, is there any reason for believing that woman could, if she would, increase woman's wages with a vote, or by legislation? Is there any reason for believing that woman would, if she could, increase the wages of women? Is there the remotest probability that woman's vote, or woman's participation in the making of laws, will solve the problems involved in the relation of labor to capital? Is the claim in favor of woman's suffrage based upon the inequality of wages a valid one? The third ground upon which the claim in behalf of woman's suffrage is urged, with much appearance of reason and justice, is the fact that property owned by women is taxed; though it is usually insisted that women are taxed but not represented, and that taxation without representation is tyranny. I am free to admit that our present method of taxation, or any other that has been devised, does not work absolute justice to all persons. It is assumed by woman suffragists that it is woman alone who suffers from our present system of taxation. It is unnecessary to state that persons are not taxed with the exception of the poll-tax. Taxes are assessed upon property with no reference to the owner. The owner may be a man, a woman, a child, a non-resident, a corporation. That amount of property contributes so much toward the support of schools, roads, and the payment of other expenses. The property, be it much or little, owned by man or woman, is not represented. If it be urged that the woman whose property is assessed for $100 or $1,000 ought for that reason to be allowed to vote, that injustice is done by denying her the privilege, it may with equal propriety be maintained that a corporation that pays one-half the tax of the town, as in many instances they do, ought to be allowed more than one vote. What are the objections to what appear to be the demands of justice? Simply this: the proposed change is opposed to the fundamental principle of republican government; namely, persons, not property, constitute the basis of representation; and property, not persons, is the basis of taxation. There are nearly 34,000 women whose property is taxed in Massachusetts. It is doubtful if 2,000 of these feel themselves aggrieved by the operation of the law. Is their need of the ballot so urgent as to justify so momentous a change in the fundamental principle of our government?

The moment that pecuniary considerations or qualifications confer the privilege of suffrage, our democracy becomes an oligarchy, or at best a moneyed aristocracy. In no easier way can the advocates of woman suffrage defeat their cause than by putting a vote into the hands of the 34,000 women who are taxpayers in this State. It is not the wealthy who will favor the proposed indiscriminate extension of suffrage.

The ballot is claimed for woman on grounds of expediency, of public need. It is the conviction of the advocates of the woman's movement that woman's vote and woman's influence in politics would be highly beneficial.

There can be no question but American politics are notoriously and disgracefully corrupt. Chief among America's contributions to the Centennial will be the official corruption of the one hundredth year of American Independence. A low phase of personal ambition constitutes the animus of the average politician. What may be termed the fourth estate of the realm—namely, the lobby,—exerts a controlling influence over that portion of national legislation that has reference to finance and moneyed corporations. The better class of citizens, the more intelligent, moral, and refined, are unwilling to compete with the opposite class for public office.

A low type and quality of men are most prominent, most successful, and most influential in political affairs. The advocates of the woman's movement insist that woman's participation in politics would change all this.

It is assumed that all the women in the State or nation, considered as a unit, are morally superior to all men, considered as a unit.

It is perfectly natural that the many intelligent and highly-cultivated advocates of the woman's movement should believe that, were they allowed to vote, and in other ways to participate in the business of government, they could as legislators enact wise laws, as jurors they could find a righteous verdict, as judges they could render a just decision. There is, can be, no question but the women who advocate woman's suffrage are more moral, more intelligent, more capable of performing the various functions of government than the mob of men who fill the ballot-boxes with votes. If the question of woman's suffrage had reference only to those exceptionally intelligent and public-spirited women, it is highly probable that politics would be improved by woman's participation. The question, as each woman suffragist states it to herself, is this: Can I not vote and legislate more wisely than the ignorant men who vote and make laws? But the actual question is this: Is there any reason for believing that the 370,000 women who would become voters in Massachusetts would in any respect excel the 351,000 men voters? Unless women as women are superior to men, more capable, more moral, less susceptible to temptation than men, the State or politics has nothing to hope for from this increase in the number of voters. On the contrary, does not the one great danger that threatens most harm to the American experiment of self-government lie in the direction of excessive democracy,—an inevitable result of the reaction from the despotism of monarchies and aristocracies? While the most intellectual and highly-cultivated men find their equals among women, it is well to bear in mind, at least in connection with this subject, that the most ignorant, unscrupulous, immoral, and dehumanized of men, and classes of men, have their equals among these women. For every man whose influence or vote threatens the corruption of politics, whose ignorance or indifference allows and favors the opportunity for the politician to subordinate the interests of the country to his personal aggrandizement, one or more women can be found whose indifference, ignorance, or dishonesty will threaten equal, if not greater, harm. The most seductive and dangerous persons in the national lobby are women. Is it highly probable that woman's presence and influence will improve the character of political life? The suffragists are ready to cite particular cases where the influence of women has been elevating and purifying; but in the cases usually cited it is a superior class of women who exert this influence. All classes, the ignorant, the selfish, the immoral as well as the superior, are not to be identified with the intelligent and public-spirited minority; nor is the influence which the latter exert to be attributed to all women. It is maintained by not a few of the advocates of woman's suffrage that woman has a natural right to vote, and consequently if her demand for the ballot is not conceded she is wronged. There is not time to enter into a comprehensive discussion of this subject of natural rights. It may be remarked in passing, that upon no subject of equal importance is there greater misconception than upon this. The actual state of the case can only be hinted at in this paper.

The individual, the person, has a natural right to exist, a right to everything essential to existence. The natural rights as enumerated by jurists are, 1. The right to personal security; 2. The right to personal liberty; 3. The right to private property; 4. The right to remedies for wrongs,—that is, protection by the State or government.

These are personal rights. They pertain to all persons, regardless of age or sex. The object of government is to secure each person the full enjoyment of these natural rights. The State owes protection to every individual. It derives its authority from the consent, express or implied, of the governed, or a majority of them.

Now it is found that a literal democracy is impossible; that is, every man, and woman, and child cannot participate in the business of government. All that is possible is a representative democracy. For instance, the interests of all persons less than twenty-one years of age are represented and secured by those above that age. The young do not suffer because they do not participate in making the laws by which they are governed. After a government is created it has something to do,—it has duties to perform. It derives its power not primarily from the consent of the governed, but from the wish of the vast majority to be protected in the enjoyment of their natural rights.

An illustration will make this distinction obvious: the State of Massachusetts does not derive its authority to govern the criminals of the State from their consent, either express or implied; on the contrary, it derives its authority from that class of people who are interested in the security of natural rights. Government is eminently moral in its nature and purpose; but, what is more to the purpose in this connection, the State or the Government has a right to determine how and by what means it will perform its function and duty of protection as regards the individual, or to state the same principle in a concrete form. If in a community of one hundred seventy-five agree upon the means and methods by which the community shall be governed—that is, the means and methods by which the natural right of every individual shall be secured and protected,—it will be perfectly competent for them to do so. No individual can have a cause of complaint so long as his rights are secured to him. But suppose the individual insists (and in a community of one hundred persons there will be one who will insist) that he has a right to participate in this business of government. The all-sufficient answer (sufficient for every one but him) would be this: we seventy-five, or sixty, as the case may be, find that we can better secure the ends of government without your participation than with it; and suppose, further, that the sixty can better perform the functions of government than the sixty-one, what becomes of the natural right of that one, or ten, to participate in the government? It is found that even the ideal government, by the people, for the people, and of the people, must be representative. Each man, woman, and child can claim its protection as a matter of right; but every man, woman, and child cannot participate in that government. It is for it to determine who shall do so. Inasmuch as absolute democracy is impossible, the practical question is, To whom shall the privilege of participating in the government be restricted? Were it possible, participation should be restricted to the intelligent and moral, to those interested in the objects of government; for the ignorant and immoral can neither govern themselves nor aid in governing others. Practically the two classes cannot be separated. Something, however, can be done by way of approximate separation. It is assumed that children can render no service, and as their interests are assumed to be identical with those of their parents, it is believed that they will suffer no harm by being excluded. It is for the State to determine at what age they shall be allowed a voice in public affairs. While there may be those of eighteen, nineteen, or twenty years of age who might vote and legislate intelligently, it has been determined that no one shall vote until he is twenty-one. Were it deemed expedient, it would be competent for the State to withhold the privilege until the young man is twenty-five or thirty. The natural right of the young man, or young woman, of twenty is just as valid as the natural right of the man of twenty-one. The latter does not vote because it is his natural right, but because it has been deemed expedient by those upon whom has devolved the responsibility of securing and preserving the natural rights of every individual in the State.

If these natural rights are not secured to the young man of twenty, or the young woman, if the State finds itself unable to protect them without their participation, then such participation may be demanded as a matter of right, and it will be the duty of the State to extend the privilege to them. For the government is bound to do whatever is essential to the protection of the rights of the individual.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

I MUST choose to receive the truth, no matter how it bears upon myself,—must follow it, no matter where it leads, from what party it severs me, or to what party it allies.—Dr. Channing.

KNOWLEDGE AND SCIENCE CONTRASTED.

A FIFTH LETTER FROM HENRY JAMES.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

It is even more trite than true to say that consciousness always implies a subject of it. But, anyhow, we neither of us ever dreamed of disputing so elementary a proposition. The implication of self, or the egoistic principle, in consciousness, was never for a moment put in question between us. What alone we controverted was whether the subjective element in consciousness—the conscious or phenomenal ego—was to be regarded as absolute or as contingent; as a reality or an illusion. This was our sole point of divergence. There was no particle of debate as to the phenomenal existence of selfhood, but only as to its substantial being. We both alike admitted the fact of selfhood, but disputed its nature or quality, you holding it to be real and objective, I phenomenal and subjective. No doubt was hinted on either side as to its subjective truth, its truth to consciousness; but I denied its objective truth, its truth to reason. I am very much afraid, therefore, that the memory of your readers will be greatly put about, if they pay too diligent heed to what you say in the last INDEX. For, unless they keep a sharp lookout, they will be led to believe that I have been assailing the phenomenal existence of selfhood, its existence as a fact of consciousness, when in truth I have never done anything of the sort, but only questioned, or rather denied, its real existence, its existence as a fact of being.

You say you understand by self "nothing but the permanent element of consciousness as such, the constant and persistent I which we cannot get rid of without ceasing to be conscious at all." But you did understand by it something very much more, when your former papers were written. For then you made it clear that you understood by selfhood a something without which we should not only cease to be conscious, as you now say, but cease also to be or exist. It was not mere loss of consciousness which you then felt to be involved in my view of the illusoriness of selfhood, but loss of absolute life or being. "When Mr. James arraigns the very principle of selfhood," and reduces all individuality to mere 'hallucination,' we cannot avoid concluding that such passages teach the gospel of annihilation." These are your own words in your second paper; and surely annihilation in your vocabulary means something more than "the cessation of consciousness," unless your vocabulary differs from that of all other men. It must mean the destruction of being or existence. My memory, you see, is the more faithful one of the two.

You call selfhood "the permanent element in all consciousness." Of course when you say "all consciousness," you do not mean to say "all self-consciousness"; for this would be saying nothing, and would at once reduce our discussion to idiotic dimensions. Is, then, self, or the subjective element in consciousness, its permanent element as you allege? If so, I confess to having been wretchedly instructed, for I have been led ever since the dawn of my intellectual life to take the opposite view; to suppose that the subjective element (the me) is a purely phenomenal or waste element in consciousness, and the not-me or objective element its real, nutritive, and permanent one. Take any fact of knowledge you please: say the tree in front of my window. To reflective thought, or viewed analytically, the experience involves two elements, a subject and an object, a me and a not-me. I, as knowing, stand in a subjective relation to the tree; the tree, as known, stands in an objective relation to me.

But now mind: this analytic or reflective judgment of mine has only a logical validity; is true only to thought. Life or consciousness utterly annuls it. It is a feat of legerdemain transcending human power that I should be to myself at one and the same moment both knowing subject and known object. In the living experience in question, accordingly, I, as knowing, am wholly absorbed or swallowed up in the tree, as known. In short, the objective element in experience is the only true and permanent element, so that in knowing anything livingly or objectively I am so far from knowing myself at the same time, that I actually and utterly for the nonce unknow and forget myself. The moment I recall or perceive myself in connection with any experience, the experience drops lifeless. The knowledge once bestridden by the nightmare of self instantly ceases to be living, and becomes merely remembered, reflective, scientific knowledge,—becomes science, learning, erudition, any handsome thing you please, only not living knowledge. One has only to thrust one's own reflected or remembered self into that living water of knowledge in order instantly to paralyze its life, and convert it into the putrid material of science.

The subject in knowledge, or whatever other living experience, is passive, the object alone active. That is to say, I do not know the tree by virtue of any abstract faculty of knowledge I possess, for I possess no such faculty, but solely by virtue of a living power in the tree itself to wed its stable beauty to my unstable senses. All living knowledge—all living experience of what sort soever—is a marriage operated in the sphere of sense between creative substance and created form; and the moment you begin reflectively to observe the experience, or dissect it into the elements of your science, this living marriage dies out in divorce. If I did not first livingly or sensibly know the tree, all the learning in the world derived from the hortus siccus of men's scientific intelligence would never give me the faintest idea of it. Science or learning is not the least living knowledge, but only at best a sign or fruit of it; just as money is not the least living wealth, but only a sign or fruit of wealth. Knowledge is a rigidly universal possession of the mind, and no specific man is either more or less endowed with it than another; just as wealth is a universal possession of man, and no specific person can claim any more or less of it than another. Science or learning, on the contrary, is a strictly individual possession, just as money is; and the great mass of mankind accordingly is, and will always remain, practically indifferent to either acquisition, simply because neither is capable of ministering to or satisfying men's common or universal needs. Knowledge, in short, is essentially living or spiritual, being an indissoluble marriage perpetually operating between the inward and outward world,—between a realm of infinite and eternal being shut up to the mind, and a realm of finite existence open to sense. And wealth in its turn is just as essentially spiritual or living, being an indissoluble Divine marriage perpetually operating between the spheres of men's divided—or individual and universal—interests, and resulting in the gradual evolution of a social sentiment in humanity, which shall fuse all men with each, and each man with all, in a way to constitute their natural destiny, and so avouch God's consummate spiritual glory in man.

Science or learning is merely a lifeless symbol of this living, spiritual, and universal knowledge, reflected in some particular intelligence; just as money is the lifeless symbol of this living, spiritual, and universal wealth of mankind, reflected in some particular greed. Of course, men of ample personal endowments, men who abound in science or learning, and men who abound in money, will always for their rarity enjoy a great conventional repute. But our living or spiritual manhood is not the least compromised by our lack of either commodity, and is quite as little promoted by the one as the other. In fact, the man of science or learning is on the whole even more liable to turn out depraved, in a humanitarian sense, than the man of money. For the fame of learning or science is far more subtly distinguishing, and consequently far more enervating to one's manhood, than the fame of mere dollars and cents. At all events, woe be to the world when it has grown so stupid as to mistake the gaudy perishable fruit in either case for the living root; when the transient sign is everywhere mistaken for the spiritual substance!

But my sermon has outgrown my text. I only wanted to show that the me, or subjective element in consciousness, being its passive element, is vivified by its active and objective element, the not-me; and hence relatively to that is unreal, phenomenal, formal, while that alone, in its turn, is relatively real, essential, substantial. You have and can have, accordingly, no valid or intelligent apprehension of consciousness, until you habituate yourself to look upon its subjective element as wholly unreal or phenomenal, and its objective element as alone real or absolute; until you consent to look upon the me as rightfully servile in fact, and the not-me as rightfully dominant. And then you will see at a glance that it furnishes no sort of reply to my doctrine of the unreality of selfhood, to say that selfhood has at least a "phenomenal reality." A "phenomenal reality" is just no reality at all, being a mere contradiction in terms, invented by a muddled metaphysic to hide the poverty of its materials. Your or my image in a mirror may properly be designated as an unreal or phenomenal existence, because it is without substance in itself, or exists only to the eye of a looker-on. But it would be absurd to call your or my body unreal or phenomenal (as bewildered metaphysicians, however, do not hesitate to do); because your and my bodies are not a servile image or reflection of anything on earth or in heaven, but an ultimate form, or most living product, of the universal heavens and earth themselves, and instinct therefore with all their reality.

By the way: does it not strike you as just a little rough on me to charge me with broaching an "ontological theory of the selfhood," simply because I had employed that adjective to characterize your infirmities of thought? To my imagination, it is very much as if a prisoner at the bar should try to persuade the court that the constable who arrested him was the probable delinquent in the premises, because the constable alone had been heard to designate his offence.

But all these things are of small account save to show how vital our philosophic difference is. Our true difference is a difference about God, and your last paper makes this difference leap at the eyes. It strikes me that you are in flagrant logical contradiction with yourself, in holding to theism at all. I say frankly: Your only logical position seems to me one of atheism. I don't the least pretend to question your logical liberty to be atheistic. I only question your logical liberty to be inconsistent with yourself. Speculatively, moreover, there is no great difference between the two creeds, inasmuch as, while the atheist denies God altogether, the theist acknowledges for the most part only an idle, inert, and ornamental deity. That is, they may both alike be said to deny a living God. But the practical difference between the two creeds is enormous, inasmuch as it is infinitely better to be in error than to be absolutely destitute of intelligence. The intellect and heart may be fed as truly, though of course not so profitably, upon a diet of error as upon one of truth. But there can be no nourishment either to heart or understanding where neither truth nor falsity is confessed, and mere blank negation reigns.

But though theism has this undeniable practical advantage over its adversary, it seems a very fruitless doctrine in itself. What you in particular can want with it, believing as you do in the sheer reality of all our personal instincts, I am at a total loss to imagine. The mass of theists justify their doctrine on the ground of certain police necessities which require to be supplemented by divine interference in the final winding up. But your peculiar doctrine admits no such justification. You maintain "the eternity and self-existence of the universe"; or of matter, as is better said, for every one knows what you mean by matter, but universe is a very vague term; and you imprison your deity in this huge mollusk of "a self-existent and eternal universe" as its mere "internal unity and organic life," just as helplessly as any crab is imprisoned in its shell. More so, indeed, for the crab is really a miracle of activity compared with your imprisoned deity, inasmuch as he stands in no subjective but in a purely objective relation to his shell, and can straddle about by means of it at his pleasure. But the mere "internal unity and organic life of a self-existent and eternal universe" must be fatally subject to that universe; must be in fact the most utterly paralytic form of subjectivity conceivable to human thought. Besides, your readers must be extremely puzzled by the problem you here set before them; namely, to explain logically how one "self-existent and eternal" can be subject to another "self-existent and eternal"; and that again object to the former. This problem baffles all human science, and you immediately provoke another, moreover, which baffles all human philosophy; namely, to explain why a self-existent and eternal universe should not be its own "internal unity and organic life," but require to be supplemented in that respect by another "self-existent and eternal" substance called God. In short, and to reduce the problem to its plainest terms: explain how any one thing can be the "internal unity and organic life" of any other thing. If I, like you, were a believer in a "self-existent and eternal universe," it would actually paley my power of thought to believe that its "internal unity and organic life" were supplied by anything foreign to itself; for in that case I should have to believe either in two reciprocally limited universes, one inward, the other outward, or else in two reciprocally limited deities, one fluid, the other solid. And either of these conceptions would prove such a logical nightmare to me, as absolutely to stifle thought in the fumes of indigestion. If your intellectual processes could really survive such a debauch, you would be more than man: you would be a logical monster.

But the truth is, your digestion is not strained in the least. For it is easy to see that the material element in your thought is alone active, the spiritual element silent. That is to say, your "universe" is practically everything, your "God" practically nothing but the name of an unknown function. In short, you are logically a materialist of the most unflinching pattern; for while the ordinary adherent of that faith is content to affirm the "eternity" of matter, you stride a myriad leagues ahead of him to endow it with "self-existence" also. And eternal self-existence is precisely what all theists ascribe to God. Why don't you then frankly obey the logic of your position, and drop "God" as a superfluity and embarrassment to your cosmological thought, as a needless and inveterate obstruction to your free "scientific" breathing? "Infinite love," you say, "without an infinite selfhood, is a hollow and meaningless abstraction." How can it seem otherwise to you, when selfhood in your view is necessary to give backbone even to the "universe"?

By the way, as selfhood is in use by all reflective people to express the individualizing principle in existence, or what distinguishes particular from universal, is it not, to say the least, somewhat crude in you to make your "universe" self-existent? A round square would seem an easier conception in the premises. But this by the way, I repeat. What I want to ask apropos of the above quotation, is: Has it ever occurred to you to think how much worse than "a hollow and meaningless abstraction" an "infinite self" must find it, to be shut up to the interior of a "self-existent and eternal universe," and so debarred all knowledge of, or commerce with, spiritual existence, the only existence capable of appreciating or even recognizing his infinitude? It would put me in a very uncomfortable state, even if I thought my cook—who may be figuratively styled the "internal unity and organic life" of my particular universe—could not occasionally depose her servile relation to me, and ascend for herself to the free upper air of love, and friendship, and matrimony. And my cook is only a finite self at best, inconveniently so, sometimes, on her artistic side, while my sympathy with her, nevertheless, is so acute, that I could go into the kitchen myself at times to baste my joint, if there were no other way of giving her the freedom of the fields. How pungently should I suffer, then, if I were in your logical shoes, and bethought myself ever and anon of the sole object of my worship—that poor "infinite selfhood"—shut up without remission day or night to the kitchen of the "universe," and supplying the larder of a disgusting raft of planetary bodies, not one of which has sense or discernment to care whether it is fed or unfed, nor to know indeed whether it exists or doesn't exist! I think I should die.

But my suffering and death would be hasty even then. For, after all, this "universe" you talk of as "self-existent," is not really existent even save to thought. Specific things to any extent have sensible existence; but sense has no perception of universals, which exist only to thought or science. Thus what you call "the universe" is no thing at all, is not the least a sensible reality, but only and at most a mental generalization, whereby, in our ignorance of spiritual creation, we have been wont to bestow a provisional unity, a hypothetical being, upon the varied contents of our senses; and then convert that supposititious being or unity itself into an indurated ontologic or material existence. Your "universe" in fact, considered as a reality, is the fundamental superstition of scientific thought, and yet a superstition of such adorable providential uses to our ultimate intellectual expansion, that one cannot quarrel with it absolutely.

So much for the universe considered as "existent" merely. But your "self-existent" universe is not even the ghost of a real conception of the mind; that is, it is a superstition not of scientific, but of purely sensuous thought, being as contrary to science, as it is stifling and odious to philosophy.

Be logical, then, and renounce theism. For then, I hope, materialism will seem to you so "hollow and meaningless" a faith, that you will renounce it also, and so become both logical and philosophical at last, in acknowledging for the first time a living or true, because revealed, God; not any incredible and monstrous God-universe, but God-man, the divinity enshrined in human nature alone, and radiating thence its infinite goodness, truth, and power, in all the peaceful and productive activities of our social and aesthetic consciousness.

Yours truly,
HENRY JAMES.
CAMBRIDGE, March 20.

OUR INDIAN POLICY.

Right Rev. H. B. Whipple, Episcopal Bishop of Minnesota, writes a letter to the New York Times which exhibits our Indian policy in its true light, and is particularly interesting in view of the prospective war in the Black Hills region. Bishop Whipple knows whereof he affirms, having been a resident of Minnesota for over twenty years, and studied the Indian question with his own eyes. We present a summary of the most important portions of the letter.

In 1853 the Sioux Indians of Minnesota sold the government 800,000 acres of their reservation. The reason given by them for this sale was that they needed more money to help on the work of civilization. By the terms of the treaty none of the proceeds were to be paid for Indian debts unless such debts had been recognized in open council and their payment duly authorized. No council was ever held, and at the expiration of four years the Sioux had not received a cent in cash, and only $15,000 in worthless goods. All the money coming to them from the sale of 800,000 acres of land was seized by claim agents, except $868 left to their credit in Washington. In June, 1862, they met to receive their annuity. The traders told them it had been stolen,—an impudent lie, of course. They waited two months, hungry and wrathful. They said some of their children had starved to death for lack of food which the annuity funds would have bought. Then they rose and perpetrated the awful massacre which the people of Minnesota are not likely soon to forget. It turned out that the money which, had it arrived at the proper time, would have prevented the massacre had been grabbed by claim agents. Near the Sioux lived the Winnebagoes, who have always been friendly to the whites. They would not join in the war. They even killed some of the messengers sent by the Sioux, and gave all possible aid to the settlers. But the Winnebagoes had a reservation which the white man coveted. They were removed by force from soil pledged to them in solemn treaties, and compelled to locate at Crow Creek, on the Missouri River. More than a thousand of them died of disease and starvation that year. During the terrible winter some of the Indian women made their way from the Missouri to Faribault, where Bishop Whipple lived, and their only food on the journey was frozen roots dug out of the prairie.

The Chippewas of Minnesota have always been our friends. Long years of frauds and lies and cruel wrongs on the part of the government have made them one of the most wretched races on the face of the earth.

In 1868, a commission composed of Gens. Sherman, Harney, Terry, Auger, and others, was sent out to make a new treaty. The Sioux chiefs met the commissioners at Medicine Creek lodge. Their previous painful experience had naturally rendered them distrustful, and they recounted the deceptions and outrages suffered in the past. After long discussion they said "they believed the men who wore our uniform had straight tongues." Another treaty was made. The chiefs insisted on one point as a preliminary,—that they should have a territory which could never be invaded by the whites. This was pledged to them. The territory which includes the Black Hills was set apart and guaranteed to them by the representatives of the government. It is their property by every divine and human law. But gold was discovered, and the whites began to pour into the reservation. The Indians, seeing there was no other alternative, offered to sell. The government would give only $400,000, less than one-fourth of our annual expenditure for the tribes to be included in the proposed transfer. So the bargain failed, and now the Black Hills swarm with miners who are to be protected at the cost of a war.

In conclusion Bishop Whipple says:—

"I have written plainly, because I do feel deeply. I have never met an officer of the United States army who did not express the belief that the cause of all our Indian wars was our violation of our treaties, and I have never found one who could tell of an instance where the Indian was the first to violate the treaty. . . . We permit white men to commit crimes against them. We allow them to murder each other, with no effort to punish the criminal. Christian men do win some of them to embrace the religion of Christ. The Christian Indian is pitifully helpless. A savage, drunken Indian may destroy his crops or murder his wife,—he has no redress. If he was a wild man he would kill his enemy. We have taught him that this is wrong. The government stands by unconcerned. It gives him no rights of property; it gives him no protection. A half-blood on the White Earth reserve in Minnesota attempted violence to a communicant of our church, and murdered his victim. The Indians arrested him. He was sent to Fort Ripley. After a few months he was discharged, because there was no law to punish the crime. . . . North of us there is another nation of our own race. Since the American Revolution they have expended no money on the Indian wars. They have lost no lives by Indian massacre. The Indians are loyal to the crown. It is not because these Indians are of another race. It is not because there is less demand for the Indian's land. It is not because their policy is more generous. We expend ten dollars for their one. It is because with us the Indian is used by corrupt men as a key to unlock the public treasury. In Canada they are the wards of a Christian nation. They select good men as agents. They give the Indians personal rights of property. They make them amenable to law,—crime does not go unpunished."

Coming from such an unimpeachable source, these facts and arguments carry great weight, and are entitled to the careful consideration of every candid mind.—St. Louis Republican.

CRIMES AGAINST WOMEN.—"Man is the only being of the animal creation that abuses the female of his race."—Darwin.

These words ought to be put in letters of gold over the door of every rum-shop in the country, and if they were scattered among the tenements and lower haunts of all great cities they would do more good than many of the pious tracts.

The Philadelphia Ledger has also borne its testimony for women—or rather refused to bear it against women—for many years past. No advertisement setting forth the fact that "my wife has left," etc., ever appears in that paper, and the reason of it is this: at one time its large circulation brought all such notices to its columns, and in reference to one of these a very neat, industrious-looking woman one day called upon Mr. George W. Childs, and explained the injury such a public announcement did her in her efforts to support her three children and herself. She showed that the only provision made for the family for years had been by herself, and it was her money, stolen out of a cup in the closet, and earned by washing, which had paid for that advertisement. On inquiry it was found that the man had come reeling drunk into the office to put it in, and the hard circumstances made Mr. Childs determine to inquire into cases that presented themselves, and find out the average status of men who advertise their wives. He tested a considerable number, and found in every instance that persons who advertised their wives as having left their "bed and board" were men who had neither of their own providing, and were generally sots. He concluded that aiding and abetting such men was not proper business for the Ledger to be engaged in, and from that day to this it has never published an advertisement or notice of that kind.—Springfield Republican.

PROF. TYNDALL has sent to the London Times some remarkable extracts from a letter of the Bishop of Montpellier addressed to the Deans and Professors of the Faculties thereof. In these extracts the absolute right of the Church to teach mankind is proclaimed. "She holds herself to be the depositary of the truth—not a fragmentary truth, incomplete, a mixture of certainty and hesitation, but the total truth, complete, from a religious point of view." On the ground of her infallibility he declares that "even in the natural order of things, scientific or philosophical, moral or political, she will not admit that a system can be adopted and sustained by Christians, if it contradict definite dogmas." After naming the spiritual penalties affixed to a denial of doctrine, the Bishop proceeds to quote Pope Leo X.'s definition of truth at the Sixth Council of the Lateran, and draws therefrom this conclusion: "Without entering into the examination of this or that question of physiology, but solely by the certitude of our dogmas, we are able to pronounce judgment on any hypothesis which is an anti-Christian engine of war rather than a serious conquest over the secrets and mysteries of Nature." Commenting with his accustomed force upon these declarations, Prof. Tyndall says: "Liberty is a fine word, tyranny a hateful one, and both have been eloquently employed of late in reference to the dealings of the secular arm with the pretensions of the Vatican. But 'liberty' has two mutually exclusive meanings—the liberty of Rome to teach mankind, and the liberty of the human race. Neither reconciliation nor compromise is possible here. One liberty or the other must go down. This, in our day, is the 'conflict,' so impressively described by Draper, in which every thoughtful man must take a part."—N. Y. Tribune, Jan. 5.

"THOU SHALT NOT STEAL" seems to be the troublesome part of the decalogue for a large portion of our people; and the offences against this commandment seem to be acquiring that semi-tolerant reception which, in a more marked way, attends unchastity in the Latin nations. This is a tendency, only a tendency to be resisted, resistance to which is one of the important duties of the American pulpit. The Indian is robbed; the cities are robbed; the national government is robbed. There is a startling statement ascribed to official authority that it would cost $75,000 to prepare a list of official defalcations and shortages within the last seven years. There is something staggering in the statement. We have altogether too many well-behaved thieves, thieves in honest clothes, and under Christian professions. Our thought is that the public education needs to be attended to. Morals should be given prominence in the education of the young, prominence in the instruction given by the pulpit and the press. We must also learn how to condemn effectively the dishonest man, how to taboo him with the relentless severity which we visit upon offenders against chastity. Upon the churches must fall the greater share of the task of resisting this tendency, and preventing its passing on into confirmed habit.—Methodist.

A LONDON critic laughs at the way in which announcement is made of the birth of a prince or princess, and suggests that if it is to become a general custom, it will be proper to announce: "On the 5th inst., the wife of Rembrandt Ueber, Esq., of a painter." "Yesterday morning, at 3 A. M., the Rev. Mrs. Manyofem, of a curate." "On the 26th ult., the wife of Doric Peristyle, Esq., of an architect." "On Friday evening last, Mrs. Whyte Lynen, of a laundress." "On the 9th inst., the wife of Mr. John Bull, Jun., of a butcher." And finally, in the case of twins, "On Saturday last, the wife of Professor Loftino Acrobati, of two bouncing brothers."

Poetry.

THE CHURCH OF THE WORLD.

I stood one Sunday morning
Before a large church door;
The congregation gathered,
And carriages a score.
From one outstepped a lady
I oft had seen before.

Her hand was on a prayer-book,
And held a vialgrette;
The sign of man's redemption
Clear on the book was set;
Above the cross there glistened
A golden coronet.

For her the obsequious beadle
The inner door flung wide.
Lightly, as up a ball-room,
Her footsteps seemed to glide;
There might be good thoughts in her,
For all her evil pride.

But after her a woman
Peeped wistfully within,
On whose wan face was graven
Life's hardest discipline,
The trace of the sad trinity
Of weakness, pain, and sin.

The few free seats were crowded
Where she could rest and pray,
With her worn garb contrasted
Each side in fair array.
"God's house holds no poor sinners,"
She sighed, and walked away.

Old Heathendom's vast temples
Hold men of every state;
The steps of far Benares
Commingle small and great;
The dome of Saint Sophia
Confounds all human state;

The aisles of blessed Peter
Are open all the year:
Throughout wide Christian Europe
The Christian's right is clear
To use God's house in freedom,
Each man the other's peer,

Save only in that England
Where this disgrace I saw—
England, where no one crouches
In Tyranny's base awe—
England, where all are equal
Beneath the eye of Law.

Yet there, too, each cathedral
Contrasts its ample room;
No weary beggar resting
Within the holy gloom;
No earnest student musing
Beside the famous tomb.

Who shall remove this evil
That desecrates our age—
A scandal great as ever
Iconoclastic rage?
Who to this Christian people
Restore their heritage?
—Lord Houghton, in Harper's Monthly.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 8.

R. Rider, $1; F. Cheney, $1.20; Mrs. C. E. Servill, $3.20; J. Laundon, $1.60; A. Walther, Jr., $3.20; Mrs. H. S. Mason, $3.20; Oliver Johnson, $1; B. A. Cleveland, $2; Cash, $3; S. H. Kimball, 10 cents; J. S. Hill, 60 cents; Sarah E. Pearson, $3.25; F. E. Abbot, $100; T. B. Skinner, 50 cents; E. B. Clement, 55 cents; L. P. Babb, 35 cents; Thos. Evans, $3.20; Mrs. Harvey Grinnell, $3; Edward Line, $12.50; A. Arnold, $12.80; H. Phelps, $3.20; E. A. Fisher, $1; A. Kelsey, $1.50; C. E. Gager, $1; A. W. Cadman, $3.20; F. A. Angell, 10 cents; C. Apin, 10 cents; S. Morse, 15 cents; A. R. Cooper, 75 cents; J. E. Peck, 20 cents; W. J. Garman, 20 cents; C. A. Baker, $8.50; G. B. Collins, 50 cents; Chas. Edmunds, $3.20; Abel Greeley, 50 cents; G. Rogers, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 13, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnard, ".....	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davidson, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.....	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.....	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston.....	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston.....	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N.Y.....	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.....	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" John Hlat, Winchester, Ind.....	5.00
" 25.	" A. Friend.....	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horach, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston.....	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.....	2.00
" 3.	" A. Friend in New York City.....	50.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.....	5.00
" 8.	" J. D. Lange, New York City.....	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston.....	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N.J.....	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, ".....	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.....	8.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipher, St. Louis.....	2.00
" 8.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.....	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Sr., Boston.....	5.00

$274.50

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York.....	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia.....	1.00
Friends in Boston.....	40.00
Carl H. Horach, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	2.00
A. Scheffing, Philadelphia.....	1.00
A. Friend.....	.50
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.....	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore.....	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y.....	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia.....	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N.J.....	2.00
Warren Griswold, ".....	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.....	1.00
Wm. Sisson, Port Hope, Ontario.....	1.00

$97.00

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

REV. E. S. ELDER'S essay on "Woman and Politics" will be sure to be read with the interest which the subject and his courageous handling of it render inevitable. He frankly opposes woman suffrage, and gives his reasons for doing so. That there is a great deal of truth in his view of the matter we cannot deny; the immediate consequences of giving the ballot to all women, not merely to the cultivated, pure-minded, and intellectual minority that are demanding it, would certainly be mixed—perhaps with a preponderance of evil. But nothing under heaven can destroy the force of the argument for woman suffrage based on the rights of women as citizens and individuals; and Mr. Elder does not destroy it. As Col. Higginson urged at Mrs. Sargent's after the reading of the paper, either the principle of woman suffrage is right, or else the principle of universal suffrage and of all democratic republicanism is wrong. It is this steady, irresistible pressure of the democratic idea which renders absolutely certain the ultimate enfranchisement of woman; and no "reaction," such as has lately made itself observable, will do more than retard it. For one, we must listen to the demands of justice, and run all risks of consequences.

A "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND."

Last Saturday a wealthy gentleman of Boston called at THE INDEX office on purpose to express his sympathy and interest in the "Centennial Congress of Liberals," and to make the unsolicited pledge of one hundred dollars towards defraying its expenses. He wishes to be one of ten persons to raise a thousand dollars for this object immediately, that the Committee may be able to make arrangements promptly and effectively on a large scale; yet he did not make this a condition of his own munificent offer. Now are there not nine others among THE INDEX constituency who are able and ready to carry out this wise and generous proposal? Enough has been raised to ensure a convention; but should there not be enough raised forthwith to give it such a character as shall make it one of the most conspicuous, important, and memorable features of the Centennial Year? The more money, the more influence and success. Two thousand dollars could be all expended economically and judiciously in advertising, holding, and reporting this convention, if that sum could be had; but one thousand will be enough to achieve a noble work for freedom and truth this summer. If it would in any way increase the disposition to give, we are willing to assume personal and undivided responsibility for the custody and use of $1000 contributed in ten subscriptions of $100 each, over and above the list of smaller subscriptions now growing so encouragingly in the previous column—a minute report of every penny expended to be rendered to the donors, and audited by a committee appointed by themselves. We only make this proposition to help on a movement which commands every faculty we possess. Time presses: shall the "Thousand Dollar Fund" be raised?

MICROCOSM AND MACROCOSM.

Mr. James begins his fifth letter by saying that "neither of us ever dreamed of disputing so elementary a proposition" as that "consciousness always implies a subject of it." Yet the "subject of consciousness" is the only self or "selfhood" of which we have, or indeed can have, the slightest conception; and if confusion and misunderstanding have sprung from the attempt of our friend to abolish the "selfhood," yet at the same time to retain the "subject of consciousness," we are not in the least responsible for such an unsatisfactory result. The very first thing to be done, we should say, would have been to draw a precise, clear, and intelligible distinction between these two conceptions, if they are not (as we believe) really indistinguishable. The "egoistic principle in consciousness," as the word ego or I implies, is neither more nor less than the selfhood—the only selfhood which was contemplated in the definition of religion out of which our amicable discussion has grown; and if Mr. James meant something else than this when he pronounced the definition a mistake, it was evidently incumbent on him to avert at the outset the inevitable ambiguity that would arise out of his purely technical and misleading use of a very common expression. Whatever he may have intended, we never intended to discuss the question whether the "conscious or phenomenal ego" is "absolute or contingent." That is a problem of pure metaphysics which has thus far proved to be insoluble; and we shall be pardoned for believing that Mr. James knows just as little as we do whether there is a noumenal ego underlying our phenomenal consciousness. No general theory of "creation," resting avowedly on a basis of pure "faith" which cannot be legitimated to the scientific intellect, throws the slightest light on this dark problem of ontology; for every such general theory is really the unrecognized work of the intellect itself, striving to make scientific what, by the hypothesis, is no subject of science at all.

It follows that our definition of religion as the "effort of Man to perfect himself," which Mr. James began by impugning on the ground that the "self" is a pure "illusion," and which contemplated nothing but the conscious self he now unqualifiedly accepts as a "fact," remains absolutely untouched by his criticisms. So far as we can see, his rejection of the selfhood turns out to be what we supposed it was at first, a mere rejection of selfishness, a mere protest against the misdirection and misuse of self in the common sense of the word. With this result we cheerfully abandon a discussion which fails to deal with a real, practical question as to the nature of religion.

The passage about "annihilation" which Mr. James quotes from one of our former papers as inconsistent with this view of the matter is, we conceive, entirely in harmony with it. For the only "annihilation" we meant then, or mean now, is the annihilation of consciousness as a phenomenal fact. Of any other annihilation than this we can conceive nothing. If our consciousness ever totally ceases, the "persistent I" of consciousness totally disappears. Is there any other possible annihilation of the selfhood? What sort of a self could it be that should survive the total extinction of consciousness? The total extinction of consciousness is the only annihilation of which we can form the faintest conception; and what we said before, therefore, is entirely harmonious with what we say now. Even at the risk of "reducing our discussion to idiotic dimensions," we must humbly confess that we know nothing of "all consciousness" except as "all self-consciousness"; and we march into the category of idiots with the best resignation we can command.

The me and the not-me are terms dependent each upon the other; if the former indicates a purely illusory or "waste element in consciousness," the latter vanishes out of recognition altogether, and can lay claim to no veritable existence even in thought. It is in vain to seek to extirpate the subject, yet retain the object: these are relative terms merely, and the relation disappears the very instant that either term disappears. It is the eternal paradox of philosophy, we admit, that in all consciousness the subject and object should be identical and yet different; yet no profundity of human genius has ever got rid of it, and Mr. James need feel no mortification at a failure to conceive how the I can truly know itself. Yet in every cognition the me adds itself to the object as an inseparable adjunct of it; and to fancy that it can suppress itself wholly, or "be wholly absorbed or swallowed up in" the not-me, is to attempt to think when the very first condition of all thought is absolutely destroyed.

Hence Professor Ferrier, in his wonderfully acute Institutes of Metaphysics, lays this down as his first fundamental proposition: "Along with whatever any intelligence knows, it must, as the ground or condition of its knowledge, have some cognizance of itself." The theory (which Mr. James now substantially adopts) that "we are first cognizant of various sensible impressions, and are not conscious of ourselves until we reflect upon them afterwards," Professor Ferrier refutes, we think unanswerably, on the ground that a man cannot remember what never happened to him, and cannot therefore remember a connection between himself and past impressions which was not actual in that very past time. Consequently Mr. James' so-called "remembered, reflective, scientific knowledge" is a sheer impossibility, unless it be first conceded that what is remembered did actually happen—that the me was all along actually conscious of itself in connection with the not-me. The distinction he draws between this "scientific knowledge" and "living knowledge" thus falls to the ground; for all real knowledge is scientific knowledge, and implies the constant and conscious presence of the I in whatever deserves the name of knowledge at all. His contempt for science is a natural corollary of this aboriginal illusion that we can know other things without knowing our selves at the same indivisible instant.

But all this, however unavoidable as a reply, is arid metaphysical abstraction to the majority of readers. Mr. James is a firm believer in God on the assurance of intuition or faith, and apparently finds it incredible that another should believe in God just as sincerely and strongly on the assurance of the "scientific intellect." He cannot conceive what we should "want" with such a belief. Well—we do not believe because we "want" to, but because we must. The world has perhaps enough of those who believe because they "want" to; it possibly needs more who believe because the pure love of truth, apart from all wants or interests, necessitates the intellect to shape its beliefs in strictest accordance with its own fundamental laws. For Mr. James' overmastering faith we entertain nothing but the unfeigned respect which its self-evident sincerity demands; but we have every ground to expect an equal respect for our own reasoned convictions of equal sincerity. If we believe on the warrant of long and patient thought rather than on that of an inwardly surging sentiment (though this, too, may not be absent), and find intellectual as well as spiritual repose in the "eternity and self-existence of the universe, of which God is the internal unity and organic life," there is no occasion to suggest that our "universe" is only "matter." If we had meant matter, we should have said matter; or if we had meant atheism, we should have said atheism.

The universe, however, contains mind as well as matter—in human beings, at the very least; and we cherish no conception of the universe which does not include mind as its prime, omnipresent, vivifying energy. Mr. James unconsciously betrays what scant justice he does to science, when he broaches the supposition that the "universe" can "imprison deity." Every prison has limits; but an infinite universe has none, and science can discover no finitude in the universe it studies. To our thinking, the universe is God manifest to the senses, and God is the universe manifest to the soul: the one thing we find most crass and coarse and utterly sandy, as food for thought, is the dualism implied in the assumed ontological separability of "Creator" and "matter." It is worse than "crabs" and "mollusks" and "police necessities." It is precisely to get rid of two that we believe in one; and really it puzzles us to see how Mr. James should so utterly invert our belief as to find it implying a couple of "self-existent and eternal" realities—one being "foreign" to the other, yet conditioning it. It would be easy to reciprocate the satirical pleasantries of Mr. James, and expose the counter-absurdities which strike us in the idea of his own "Creator"; but nothing would be gained by retort, and we pass them over.

Yet how strange that each of us should see "no God" in the "God" of the other! Mr. James thinks we are "logically a materialist," and ought to "drop God as a superfluity"; while we think he has already dropped God as a non-entity, by abolishing in him the "egoistic principle of consciousness"—the only intelligible condition of the "Infinite Love" into which he resolves him. The uncouth caricatures of our own thought we will leave uncorrected, and content ourselves with avoiding such rhetorical misrepresentations, however grotesque and amusing. We will not even imagine ourselves sympathetically "suffering" in his "logical shoes." Probably neither of us stands in any need of such sympathy: we certainly do not.

But when we are exhorted to "be logical, and renounce theism," we must respond that the "logic" which is to guide us to such "renunciation" must be of a less sanguinary nature than that which would institute a carnival of murder at the outset of the journey by requiring every man to put his "selfhood" incontinently to death—having already persuaded the "Creator" to a similar act of felo de se. There is scarcely sufficient motive for such reckless suicide and delirium.

The religion of spiritual self-perfection which we are thus summoned to "renounce" is no invention of our own, but has been struggling at the heart of every great life since history began, and of every great social movement for the elevation of mankind. Jesus preached it, when he cried: "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect"; and if he had never preached in a lower strain than that, Christendom would not now be in the travail of revolution to get rid of Christianity. Buddha preached it, when he uttered such great sayings as these: "Let each man make himself as he teaches others to be; he who is well subdued may subdue others; one's own self is difficult to subdue." "By oneself the evil is done, by oneself one suffers; by oneself evil is left undone, by oneself one is purified. Purity and impurity belong to oneself; no one can purify another." Confucius preached it, when he said: "Is any one able for one day to apply his strength to virtue? I have not seen the case in which his strength would be insufficient. Should there possibly be any such case, I have not seen it." "Now the man of perfect virtue, wishing to be established himself, seeks also to establish others; wishing to be enlarged himself, he seeks also to enlarge others." "Is virtue a thing remote? I wish to be virtuous, and, lo! virtue is at hand." "Hold faithfulness and sincerity as first principles, and be moving continually to what is right; this is the way to exalt one's virtue." And Ralph Waldo Emerson, the living prophet of our own day who has delivered in all the freshness of modern beauty the burden of the eternal Divine message, preached it, when he declared: "Trust thyself—every heart vibrates to that iron string. . . . Nothing is at last sacred but the integrity of your own mind. Absolve you to yourself, and you shall have the suffrage of the world."

This is the religion of self-perfection, of which the theism we are now exhorted to renounce is the necessary product. It begins with the inner supreme command to perfect the selves we are, by ripening to fulness and using for the good of all the powers of which we wake from unconsciousness to find ourselves possessed. It traces this sublime ethical law of our spiritual being up to the universal law of Evolution, of which it is but the immediate application to our own constant experience; and it thus discovers the absolute identity of the most sacred law of our own consciousness with the eternal law which has slowly shaped a moral and material universe out of nebulous shapelessness. This moral unity of the human self with the totality of Nature, alike in her physical and moral tendencies, has persuaded us of a far deeper identification of the soul with the universe than the infant science of our own day has hitherto fathomed; yet here alone, in the tireless strivings of science for profounder truth and not at all in the stolid self-complacencies of so-called "faith," do we look for the coming of new light. It matters little who fails to understand the resolute facing of the best minds of our generation towards modern science; it is a phenomenon which will continue and increase all the same, and out of it will come an intelligent comprehension of truths at which "faith" has been ineffectually guessing for thousands of years. Our theism is not a creed, but a steady and irresistible looking towards the unity of the universe, as discoverable only on a plane at least as lofty as the very loftiest heights of the human consciousness; and we are no more able to "renounce" it than Mr. James is able to renounce his own most absolute conviction. That we can sincerely respect his religion, while he is utterly unable to respect ours in the least, is a fact which, with reflective minds, will not weigh against ours in their regard. Thought endlessly strives to connect the "microcosm" of human consciousness with the "macrocosm" of universal being, in such a way as to vindicate their fundamental unity without destroying their actual diversity; and, believing the problem impossible except to scientific theism, we discern as little advantage to "logic" as to religion in any attempt to "renounce" it.

INCLUSIVENESS.

The London Inquirer, organ of the English Unitarians, reports a discussion held on the 7th, on the question whether the association should, through its publishing committee, make itself responsible for the opinions of Theodore Parker, by putting its imprint on any of his books,—the Ten Sermons and Prayers being particularly mentioned, and the Discourse of Religion. The discussion was in good temper, and resulted in the acceptance of the inclusive policy as being more in accordance with the principles of the Unitarian denomination. The debate turned on a proposal by Mr. Henry Rawson, who held that "the term Unitarian Christianity was wide enough to include all divergences, old school and new school, materialist, intuitionist, Priestley, Martineau, Channing, and Parker." He declared that "there was a time in his own mental history when it had become with him a grave and serious question whether he could hold connection with any of the existing Christian organizations." That he overcame his scruples was due to the influence of Theodore Parker. The Inquirer heartily congratulates the friends of liberal Christianity on the result of the discussion as a triumph of the great principle of breadth and comprehension over the narrow and exclusive policy, and declares the real question to be "whether our religious societies are to be exclusive or inclusive; whether they are to be tied down to a narrow dogmatic basis, or whether they are to give large hospitality to various tendencies of thought representing all sides of our free religious position."

An attempt was made in London, a few years ago, to form an association on the same basis as our Free Religious Association, in which the name "Christian" should be dropped, and the larger word substituted. The effort did not succeed, and "The Free Christian Union" which was inaugurated expired after one year of feeble existence. If the position taken by the association shall be honestly supported and earnestly maintained, the practical result aimed at before will be achieved. The Christianity will reach its final attenuation soon, if it has not already, and will ere long disappear altogether.

The same number of the Inquirer from which the account of the meeting is taken contains a letter from Wm. H. Channing eloquently defending Parker's title to be called "A Unitarian Christian," and giving reasons for doubting his often-alleged inclination to theism. There are certainly grounds for Mr. Channing's opinion; but they seem to me sentimental rather than rational. That Parker resisted exclusion from the Unitarian denomination every body knows; but every body knows that he did so in the interest of the liberal principle, not in the interest of the denomination. His eulogies of Christ are familiar to all who have read his books; but they are such eulogies as spoil him in the regards of Christendom, by depriving him of his supremacy over human kind. Parker's affections were strong; his associations were tender and close; but his intellectual fidelity was supreme, and carried the day at last over all sentimentalities. Mr. Channing carries his own enthusiasm over to his friend, and persuades himself that the sturdy rationalist travelled the road that he found most attractive towards the historic church. I am, on the contrary, persuaded that Parker's faith was becoming more and more theistic; that the Christian peculiarity was falling away from his mind; and that, had he lived, he would have given his support to the Free Religious movement as best representing the believing tendency of the time. Parker's transcendentalism saved him to Christianity in the first place, by furnishing a ground on which he could maintain its cardinal religious ideas; but it was all the time reducing those ideas to natural beliefs of the race, and merging the particular faith in the universal. A denomination that includes materialists and intuitionists will soon include "infidels" and "atheists," and then where will the Christianity be? The conclusion that Christianity is an obstacle to human progress will follow hard on the conclusion that it is not the chief factor in human progress, and we may expect soon to see a detachment of the English Free Religionists taking the same stand which the editor of THE INDEX takes in the United States. The inclusive principle, by putting all faiths on an essential equality, makes itself the enemy of assumption on the part of any special one; and as such assumption is sure to be manifested by every one in turn, even by the most "liberal," the act of disarmament will be accompanied by measures that look like hostility towards the chief offender. The American Unitarian Association probably saved its corporate life by its exclusion of Parker. It escaped the fate of drowning in the sea of ideas. The British and Foreign Unitarian Association bravely takes that risk. The danger of total immersion is immanent; but if its bark sink, 'tis to another sea.

O. B. F.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY B. C.

The failure of the Senate to confirm the nomination of Mr. Dana had been generally anticipated before the announcement of the fact. According to the Tribune's report, which is, however, partly conjectural, the vote against confirmation was 31 to 17, more than twenty members being absent or paired, or, at least, failing to vote. Notwithstanding the many explanations of this action of the Senate which newspaper correspondents and others have sent on from Washington, it is safe to affirm that the real reason has not been spoken aloud by any one of the fifty or more Senators who are responsible for Mr. Dana's rejection. The Democrats, who, in a body, voted against Mr. Dana, declare that they of course were not influenced by the personal opposition of Gen. Butler, and all the Republicans make the same declaration. Mr. Cameron, who led the opposition, asserts that the Lawrence controversy was satisfactorily explained, and was not, therefore, a cause of the Senate's action. We have remaining, therefore, as the cause of the rejection, only the very excellent letter of Mr. Dana to Mr. Boutwell, which grievously offended the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations; and the other Senators, animated by something which is called "the courtesy of the Senate," refused to vote for a man who had offended their brother Senators. If this be true, it is evident that "the courtesy of the Senate," whatever it may be, bears a very suspicious analogy to the "honor" which is said to be found among thieves; and we are helped to an understanding of Mr. Cameron's declaration that "these — literary men are having altogether too much to do with this government anyhow." In other words, Mr. Dana does not belong to the same "set" with the average Senator, and cannot be received, therefore, as a desirable political "pal."

In view of this action of the Senate, is it not about time to ask that a change be made in the manner of holding its executive sessions, and that the debates and votes of these sessions hereafter be as public as are the ordinary legislative proceedings of that body? To the people of this country the character of the motives by which Senators are influenced when performing one of the most important functions for which they are elected is a matter of deep concern. When, for instance, a man is nominated for Minister to England, and is universally admitted to be fully qualified, as regards character, intelligence, education, and social culture, for that position, we have a right to know that the Senator who votes against him is governed by something better than personal prejudice, or a misnamed "courtesy." Had the executive sessions of the Senate been open, Mr. Dana would undoubtedly have been confirmed, for very few Senators would have dared to disregard—without giving some better reason than any thus far furnished—the public opinion concerning him which has been so unanimously expressed, both in this country and in England, since first he was nominated by the President.

Babcock is determined apparently to become the personification of all that is bad in Washington politics. Although he escaped conviction at St. Louis, and, for a day or two, there was even some danger that admiring friends might raise a monument to his virtues (Chandler admits that he sent him a check for $1,000), it is now evident, if the testimony of numerous witnesses before some of the investigating committees be confirmed, that Belknap's sins may acquire a lighter shade in comparison with some of his. Bell's testimony has already been confirmed, as regards the essential point, by Bradley, who admits that he directed him to "procure" (steal) the evidence against Babcock in the office of District-Attorney Dyer, at St. Louis; and the testimony of Luckey and Babcock shows that these two worthies were not ignorant of the nature of Bell's expedition. And now, Whitley, late Chief of the Secret Service of the Treasury, testifies that he was employed by Babcock to "put up the job" in the notorious Safe-Burglary case. Whitley's testimony is confirmed by that of Nettleship, his assistant (recently converted by Moody and Sankey), and by other witnesses, who, as we write, are undergoing examination. It seems possible, even, that Babcock may have manufactured the order which, purporting to come from the President, put a stop to the Safe-Burglary suits. Altogether we should imagine that Babcock, by this time, might be willing to regret his escape at St. Louis, and to look upon a Missouri jail as an acceptable haven of refuge.

The testimony of Mr. Trenor W. Park before the Emma Mine Committee is in striking contrast with that of the many bad men who have been before the same committee, and who have done so much to shake our faith in the innate nobility of the human race. Mr. Park states that he gave $50,000, in shares of valuable stock, to Gen. Schenck because of his affection for that noble man, and that if any worldly motive entered into the transaction, it was simply the patriotic desire that some American whom he could trust might protect him while a wanderer in the strange land of England. Mr. Park affirms, moreover, that he is in the habit of handing over his superfluous shares of stock to personal friends, in the hope that they may be able thereby to make a little something at his expense. Such pure generosity as that of Mr. Park and such childlike simplicity as that of Gen. Schenck must certainly disqualify their possessors from associating with the imperfect beings who mostly make up this sinful world. We advise them both therefore to retire to some secluded spot, and there, in the calm enjoyment of draw-poker, to await serenely the coming of that millennial day when the innocent and confiding sheep shall be separated from the evil-minded and unbelieving goats.

Gen. Custer, when testifying last week before the Committee on War Expenditures, was requested to state the reason of the silence of army officers concerning the abuses on the frontier with which they have been so long familiar. His reply was that they were unable to make any complaint because of an order issued in March, 1873, which directed, first, that no officer should recommend action by members of Congress with regard to military affairs; second, that all petitions to Congress, by officers, relative to military subjects, should be forwarded through the General of the Army and the Secretary of War for approval and transmission; and third, that an officer visiting Washington, during a session of Congress, should register his name immediately, and report to the Adjutant-General the purpose of his visit, the proposed length of his stay, and the authority under which he was absent from his station. This order, of course, as Gen. Custer stated, "closed the mouths of all army officers with regard to abuses on the frontier," as they knew that complaints thus forwarded would be pigeon-holed, and "the officers would probably be pigeon-holed too." One cannot be blamed for accepting Custer's assertion that "the object of the order was to cover up the doings of the Secretary of War." An order has already been issued, it may be stated in this connection, removing the army headquarters back to Washington, and, hereafter, all orders relating to the discipline of the army will be communicated through Gen. Sherman, the misunderstanding which formerly existed between the Secretary of War and the General of the Army having been removed, apparently, by the advent of Judge Taft.

During the session of the House of Representatives held for debate only, last Saturday, Mr. Burleigh, of Maine, advocated the payment of "war premiums," as they are termed, by the Alabama Claims Commission. His speech was in harmony with the report of the House Committee on the same subject,—a report so manifestly wrong that, in view of its presentation, the Nation makes the very decided declaration "that it appears, taking this bill and the former act together, that the result of judicial discussion of private rights in a Committee of the House of Representatives is more likely on the whole, after due consideration, to be in favor of simple robbery than anything else." It may be well to recall the fact that the Geneva Tribunal expressly ruled out the claims of all "war premium" claimants, and also the claims of all who had suffered from the depredations of all privateers other than the Alabama, the Florida, and the Shenandoah. Under these rulings, England committed to the United States, in trust, the sum of $15,500,000, to hand over to those whose claims were allowed by the Geneva Arbitrators. To use this money, or any portion of it, therefore, for any other purpose than that for which it was originally given would be as dishonest as were any of the actions for which Jackson has just been sent to jail, and the United States has no more right to use it for the purpose advocated by Mr. Burleigh than Jackson had to use the money of the widows and orphans for whom he was acting as guardian. If the report of the House Committee should become a law, the country would be guilty of an act of dishonesty so flagrant that the deeds of Belknap and Babcock would seem like children's foibles by contrast.

The people of California continue to be very much excited upon the subject of Chinese immigration, the recent decision of the Supreme Court furnishing the nucleus for the concentration of a great deal of previously-existing dissatisfaction. Indignation meetings have been held in San Francisco, the Chinese inhabitants, fearful of outrage, have been confined to their own quarter of the city, and the six companies which have charge of Chinese immigration have sent word to their agents in China to discontinue all shipments at present. And yet we demand the privilege of entering China, and of trading with her, and require her to protect our missionaries; and our treaty with China concedes to her citizens in this country the privileges granted to the citizens of the most favored nation. If we do not desire the Chinese to come to this country, let us, in some proper manner, get rid of our treaty obligations, and absolve China from the necessity of protecting our merchants and missionaries on the other side of the Pacific.

A few movements are to be recorded in the Beecher affair. Mr. Bowen has been wrangling with the Plymouth Church Committee with regard to the introduction of evidence before that Committee. The Congregational ministers of New York and Brooklyn have appointed a committee to cooperate with the committee proposed by the Advisory Council to investigate "bottom facts," and Drs. Storrs, Budington, and others have accordingly withdrawn from this body of Congregational ministers, believing that such investigation would be superficial and unsatisfactory, and that the proceedings of the Advisory Council were contrary to Congregational usage, and should not be recognized. Mr. Moulton has failed in his endeavor to have the suit of Mr. Beecher against him for perjury reopened, the judge holding that the nolle prosequi entered by the District-Attorney is a sufficient satisfaction of all claims for damages. The decision, however, may be reversed, and, on general grounds, we have no doubt that it should be; for as the decision now stands any man may do another grave injury by procuring his indictment for perjury or murder, or, indeed, any other crime, and subsequently screen himself from any action for damages by dodging behind a nolle prosequi.

The Senate amended the Bankrupt Act, notwithstanding a foolish attempt of Morton to have it repealed; concurred with the House bill to pay the judgments rendered by the Court of Alabama Claims; corrected an error in the Revised Statutes; and received the Articles of Impeachment from the House, subsequently appointing April 17 for the beginning of the trial of Belknap. The House adopted the Articles of Impeachment as reported by the Judiciary Committee, and appointed Messrs. Knott, Lord, Lynde, McMahon, Jenks, Lapham, and Hoar as managers of the impeachment case before the Senate; adopted a resolution requesting the President to enter into negotiations with China for such a modification of our present treaty as to make it a commercial treaty only; amended the pension law, making the time of service in the war 1812 ten days instead of sixty; passed a bill to regulate the winding up of national banks; concurred with the Senate bill fixing the President's salary at $25,000; and exempted masters of vessels engaged in trade between the United States and British North America, the West India Islands or Mexico, and masters of vessels of less than seventy-five tons trading between a port on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific, or vice versa, from shipping their crews or procuring their shipping articles to be signed before a shipping commission. A ridiculous bill intended to regulate the rate of interest on "national money" (greenbacks), making it six per cent. throughout the country, received no less than seventy-five votes in the House. Belknap's lawyers in the impeachment trial, will be Jeremiah Black, Montgomery Blair, and Matt Carpenter.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, March 10, 1876.

The burial question is a "burning" one just now in England; I don't mean a pun, involving cremation, but simply that the public mind is excited on the point. Mr. Moyan's resolution, brought forward in the House of Commons, and opposed there by the whole strength of the government, on the ground that it was a proposal tending towards the disestablishment of the Church, was (spite of vehement speeches from the Home Secretary and from the Prime Minister) defeated in a full House by a majority of only 31. And, as though to emphasize the plea for freedom of interment, scandal after scandal crops up in country villages, and beside the open grave partisans wrangle, and priests insult both the living and the dead. The little boy of a Methodist working-man has just died, and the clergyman of the parish refused to bury the child on the ground that he had not baptized it; but he gave permission to the parents to inter the child in the church-yard without his ministrations. The grave was dug, and the Wesleyan minister held a service in his own chapel for the mourners, and the funeral procession then started for the church-yard, the Wesleyan minister arranging to furnish the service outside the "sacred precincts," while the body was being placed in the grave. When they all arrived at the church-yard gate, the clergyman of the parish also arrived there, and read the commencement of the Church of England burial service. Then began an unseemly squabble between the rival clerics, the Church priest persisting in his right to bury, while the Wesleyan said half the service was already over, and he was going to finish it. While this went on, the mourners were weeping and sobbing around, till the poor mother, almost fainting with grief and pain at the disturbance, begged that the vicar might have his way and the child be buried in peace. On the same day, in another village, the corpse of the church-warden's wife, who had committed suicide when in a state of temporary insanity, was brought to the church-yard, and the clergyman read a verse from a psalm; the body was lowered into the grave, and he pronounced the benediction, thus denying to the mourners what was to them the comfort of the service.

These are the incidents which are stirring up against the Church the intensely bitter feeling which will soon find vent in a general cry for disestablishment. Already petitions are flowing into Parliament to this effect, and the growing sacerdotalism of the clergy lends strength to the movement. No more fatal blow could be struck at the Church than that which she deals herself by the refusal to allow burials within her graveyards except with her own services. Churchmen say that no other religious body is asked to grant such a liberty, and the very plea destroys their own standing-ground; for, if the Church give to the nation no more than the sects give, why should the Church alone have the enormous benefits of Establishment, and be largely dowered with national wealth? These burial scandals bring home to the bosom of the most apathetic villager the injury inflicted on him by the privileged caste; and, at the same time, the blow coming at the moment when his heart is sore with the loss of some beloved one, he feels a keener indignation from the harshness that insults him in the dead body of the departed. Thus is the flame of hatred fanned day after day, and the Church becomes more and more fully undermined, until some spark, struck in the conflict, shall fall on the prepared train, and the explosion shall shatter the hoary structure into ruins.

Another phase of this question is just now much interesting us of the Secular party: What control has the Burial Board of a cemetery over the inscriptions engraven on the tombstones? A Mr. William Hilton inscribed on the tomb erected to the memory of his father, who lived and died an atheist, a couplet he found among the dead man's papers:—

"Let gods attend on things which gods must know, Man's only care relates to things below."
Necro Dece.

The tombstone was in the Nonconformist portion of the cemetery, and no objection was raised until a Roman Catholic priest and a Church of England clergyman, both of whom have their own portions elsewhere, complained of the inscription as atheistic, and by making a considerable fuss they moved the Burial Board to order its erasure. The Board commanded Mr. Hilton to remove the inscription, and Mr. Hilton refused; at last the Board summoned Mr. Hilton to appear before them, and show cause, etc., etc. Hereupon, Mr. Hilton, being a stubborn Lancashire man, bethought him to ask advice of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, as President of the National Secular Society; and Mr. Bradlaugh, with the approval of the Executive, drew up a case for counsel, and declared that the Society would fight the Burial Board, if a scrap of standing-ground could be got for the fighting. The solicitors of the Society then communicated with the Board, and obtained an adjournment of the case for one month, so as to allow time to obtain counsel's opinion. Mr. Hilton also wrote a note to the Board, offering some alterations in a rather sardonic spirit; one, that he would cover the tomb with waterproof sheeting, whereupon should be inscribed: "This sheet only to be raised by persons who are willing to read an inscription underneath, which the Bolton Corporation object that the general public should read." He adds: "I am willing to have engraven on the tombstone a Scriptural quotation from Ecclesiastes, iii., 19-22, as follows: 'For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath, so that man hath no preeminence above a beast, for all is vanity. All go unto one place: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth? Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for that is his portion: for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?'"

It is scarcely likely, we should imagine, that the Bolton Burial Board will approve of this addition to the couplet, although it is hard to see how they could enforce an objection to a quotation from the Christian Bible, the inspired word of God. It will be interesting to see whether they will insist on the erasure of the inscription now that the National Secular Society have taken up the case. The great worth of our organization comes out in a case like this, as last year in an oath case where we fought and won; for the whole strength of the party thus can be brought to bear in defence of a single member, and thus we guard our weakest by the united power of all. No English freethinker need fear being left to fight his battles alone, so long as the National exists, with its present chief at its head. It is argued that an inscription implying atheism is offensive to many, and that is perfectly true; but no liberty could exist if the prejudice of some is thus to control the actions of others. We might, with equal justice, plead that the superstitious inscriptions on Christian tombstones are offensive to us, while the Protestant might complain of the Roman Catholic "pray for the soul." No one has a right to be offended with his neighbors' opinions in this fashion, and the offence taken only shows that the complainant has not learnt the alphabet of liberty. Just as a man has a right to express his opinion living, so has he a right to let his gravestone speak for him dead, and only the narrow spirit that would silence the lips which disagree with the thoughts of the majority would interfere with the graven words that tell the creed of the life that is gone.

Communications.

JUSTICE TO THE INDIAN!

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Bishop Whipple's letter to the New York Times is a plain, honest, unprejudiced, and vivid summing up of the treachery of our infamous Indian policy toward the "wards of the nation."

Contrasting Canadian management of the natives of North America with the methods put in practise by the government of the United States (and placing justice, humanity, and philanthropy entirely out of the question), it appears that, as a mere question of economy, we expend four times the amount annually that would suffice for the subsistence of all the Indians within the limits of the American Union; not to speak of the losses on the border caused by Indian depredations upon settlers.

Having been a personal witness of the innumerable outrages perpetrated upon these oftentimes unfending children of Nature, the writer cannot refrain from expressing the hope that some portion of the Christian charity formerly manifested in the behalf of the five millions of Africans in the United States might be transferred to this apparently fated race, whose chief offence is their incapacity to submit to insult and injury, outrage and extermination, without proving their manhood by striking vain blows and making hopeless efforts for the freedom and independence which are as necessary to their existence as the very air they breathe.

Our friendly Indians are frequently treated so much more harshly than are the worst bands of hostile Indians, that the government might almost be said to place a premium upon settled antagonism to the United States. Only three years ago a scattered remnant of the once powerful tribe of the Winnebagoes was, by order of the general government, acting upon the request of Gov. C. C. Washburn of Wisconsin, removed by force from the vicinity of their life-labor, although the worst charge that could be made against them was that they were supposed to cause fires in the timber-lands. They were actually taken out of their wagons, in some instances torn away from homes built by themselves, or earned by the proceeds of their own labor, where they were living as quietly, peaceably, and as industriously as many of their white neighbors, and carried off to a "reservation" on the prairies west of the Mississippi River, where the character of the country was utterly unfitted to their habits, and whence they have since wearily trudged "home" again to renew their harmless avocation of hop-picking, etc., in the vicinity of Baraboo, Wisconsin. These men were no more feared by their envious white neighbors than are the Chinese shoemakers in Western Massachusetts the cause of terror to the maids and matrons of the city of Springfield. Their crime was their birth; being Indians, they had no rights which "white men" were bound to respect!

It is a mistake to suppose there is no remedy for the present condition of affairs. It only needs that Indians should be admitted to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of citizenship, as are the late slaves of the South, to put an end at once and forever to the disgraceful scenes upon our Western frontier. There is no reason whatever that any distinctions should be made either in favor of, or in opposition to, Indians as Indians. General Grant had a full-blooded Indian on his staff during the war. There are Choctaws and Cherokees in the Indian Territory whose culture and capacity is not to be despised by the smartest whites. There are authors, editors, poets, and novelists, college graduates, and European tourists to be found in the Indian Territory. Indeed it is ridiculous that in Virginia "the first families" should be proud of their descent from Pocahontas, while in Minnesota recently-imported Irishmen should be permitted to outrage and murder the wives and daughters of Indian chiefs equal in nature and capacity to Powhatan. Once let the Indians be made responsible for their conduct as citizens, and the same laws applied for their protection as well as their punishment, that hedge about the (assumed) divinity of white men, and they may safely be left to stand or fall upon their merits as human beings. Then, if they perish, as now seems so probable, the terrible responsibility at present resting upon the white race will have been—too tardily, it is true—extenuated and lightened. Anyone who has, like the writer, gazed upon the extensive ruins of the Catholic Missions upon our Pacific slope, erected almost entirely by the labors of the Indians, under the direction of the Jesuits; who has witnessed the transformation of the Pah-Utes and Shoshones from unbreeched savages into well-clothed tillers of the soil, on the ranches of Nevada; or the laborers employed in breaking the quartz into pieces small enough to be placed under the "stamps" of a silver-mill (as in Belmont, Nevada, and various other places), cannot be persuaded that Indians are not willing to work at any avocation. The writer has had pointed out to him an Indian who had worked steadily for seven years shovelling the "tailings" out of the sluice-ways of a California flume. What are the Péons of Mexico but the descendants of a race of American Indians? The Pimas and Maricopas of Southern Arizona, the Navajoes of Western Texas, and many other tribes, have proved conclusively their susceptibility to civilization. But it is much to be feared that the reaction from the sentimentalism which has idealized the African in the past generation will prevent the most rudimentary justice being extended to the American Indians until it is indeed too late!

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, of Saint Louis.

23d March, 1876.

THE "CRACK OF THE WHIP."

WORCESTER, Mass., March 30, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I take pen to thank you from a full heart, and in behalf of true liberty, for your scathing article in THE INDEX, just at hand, on "The Spirit of 1876." Those are indeed "half-battle words," and if after this the liberals of this nation do not arise as one man and assert, yes, demand, the rights which the spirit of our great charter gives to every man, woman, and child covered by the flag, then will they deserve the title of serfs and cowards!

Why, the liberals of America are not half awake! Would to God every one of them could feel that inward, burning determination to do ALL that a single soul can do to hurl back this despicable, Pharisaic arrogance, which was felt by the writer when he beheld that article in the Tribune. The Tribune, "founded by Horace Greeley"! Horace Greeley, a man in no sense a sectarian, who conducted the Tribune preeminently for the people. Does this not warrant us liberals in withdrawing our support from that great journal? I agree with you in the belief that liberals will never be respected until we shall stand a solid, massed army, with purpose fixed, and convictions toned up to the pitch of any sacrifices. Where is that "eternal vigilance" which long ere this should have called the Minute Men of religious liberty to turn back the advance of this dangerous power? Alas! Right here in this "heart of the Commonwealth" ministers dare to insult freethought and common intelligence by declaring this nation to be "Bible-founded"! And the most popular journal dares to print this entirely baseless assertion, and dares to deny an humble man the right to point out the falsehood of a weak though mischievous sermon! Say not there is little danger. We may suffer "Peace" to be cried until, politically, we are bound hand and foot. Then liberals will awake to see there has been plotting in secret conclave to the end that liberty of opinion may be crushed out by force of arms, if need be!

I was in Rochester in the winter of 1874, and heard a popular Orthodox divine declare that he would feel justified in continuing the Bible in schools, "even if it should lead to war." His lecture was entitled "The Perils of Literature." I wrote to the Express the next day to the effect that I for one thought it a quite formidable and wholly unnecessary "peril of literature" to attempt to keep the Bible in schools at the expense of human blood! And the editor of the Express, God bless him! printed my letter, and indorsed its sentiment.

As secretary of a freethought association, I feel justified in trying to give your words a wider circulation in the form of a tract, quoting the Tribune's truly "feeble and ignorant" attack, that all may see how completely the greatest American journal has succumbed to the huge power of ecclesiasticism, that rules solely by prestige, not by any intrinsic virtue or influence for human progress.

I am sincerely thy friend,

A. BRIGGS DAVIS.

"MELICAN RELIGION."

422 O'FARRELL STREET, }
SAN FRANCISCO, March 17, 1876. }

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Our Chinese boy "Jim Sing," after attending a few sessions of Dr. Stone's Sabbath-school class, draws a comparison:—

"I like Melican religion—one God—ten cents—cheap—heap good. Chinaman's religion—many Gods—ten cents apiece—no good."

The following was told me by a resident of Cohasset at the time of occurrence. When the Minot's Ledge iron light-house was destroyed in a terrible gale, burying its keeper in the wreck, the government, to keep its warning light in position, placed a light-ship firmly moored to the rock; but the constant motion after a time chafed the chain. When a gale sprang up, the ship broke from her moorings, and drifted rapidly to the shore. A smart Yankee skipper had charge with a Portuguese crew. The latter, letting their fears get the better of them, fell upon their knees and commenced repeating their Ave Marias. The captain, feeling the responsibility, and unable to get the men to perform their duty, exclaimed to them in his rage: "D— your Ave Marias; they won't save the ship."

Yours with respect, L. T. TUFTS.

THE value of church-property is enhanced by the enterprise and thrift of the owners of other property, certainly as plainly as churches enhance the value of other property, and if a rule of taxation were established on this principle it is a question whether church-property, which being unproductive and deriving its increase of value from the productive use of other property, should not pay the heaviest taxation instead of the least.—Detroit Post.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

NO GROUND BUT ONE.—Trust in the finished work of Christ alone; expect to be saved only on the ground of what Christ has suffered in your stead. This is the way in which God saves. In this way he will save you. But he will save in no other.—"Soldier and Substitute": American Tract Society.

CHRIST.—When conscience tells thee thy sins are both many and great, answer thou, "Christ's blood cleanseth from all sin"; when reminded of your ignorance, say, "Christ is my wisdom"; when your ground and title to the kingdom are demanded, say, "Christ is my righteousness"; when your meanness to enter within its sacred walls is challenged, say, "Christ is my sanctification"; when sin and the law, when death and Satan claim thee as their captive, reply to them all, "Christ is my redemption." The law saith, Pay thy debt; the gospel saith, Christ hath paid it. The law saith, Make amends for thy sins; the gospel saith, Christ hath done it for thee.—"Christ, our All-in-All": American Tract Society.

SIN THE CAUSE OF SICKNESS.—My dear Mr. Ball: I was delighted to receive your letter, and to have your assurance that you are well again. My convictions are the same as yours,—that sickness rightly improved is among the greatest blessings our Heavenly Father vouchsafes to us. It results from sin, and stimulates duty. I gratefully thank God for sickness. My views as to the proposed Cincinnati Convention which you ask for are not very clear. My opinion is that they ought to indicate their preferences, at least perhaps to nominate. They should act so as to insure Democratic cooperation. You ask whether I would, under circumstances, accept a nomination. I answer that I should not decline, but I do not seek it. If my nomination is thought by those entitled to judge the best means of uniting the friends of reform and amnesty, whether Republicans or Democrats, I shall have no right to decline it; if not, I do not want it.

Faithfully your friend, S. P. CHASE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1872.

"THE WHITE HAIRS OF JESUS."—Tradition and an ancient document tell us that the hair of Christ, when he was upon earth, was chestnut color to the ears, and then flowed down in golden curls upon the neck. . . . As Jesus died at thirty-three years of age, we are apt to think of him as a young man; but he is living now. That makes him more than an octogenarian, more than a centenarian,—ay, eighteen hundred and seventy-two years of age. But the Bible tells us that he was present at the creation of the world; that makes him six thousand years old. . . . He is an aged Christ. His hairs are white like wool, white like snow. . . . There is nothing that so soon changes the color of the hair as trouble. . . . Well, surely, Jesus my Lord had enough to whiten his hair. He had dwelt in the palaces of eternity. . . . But this King the disciples find one morning on the beach, frying his own fish and toasting his own bread for breakfast; his feet shod with ordinary sandals,—a sole of leather fastened with thongs; his head bared under the hot Judean sun, seated on the well-curb thirsty; his coat gambled for by the roughs who wanted it; the police after him for blasphemy; pursued as though he were a tiger; his dying drink vinegar sucked out of a sponge. Everything seemed leaving him, even the light of day running away, and leaving him in the hands of the night,—the black nurse that bent over him; forsaken by everything but fiends, executioners, and the darkness—oh! methinks that was the night his hair turned white. . . . "Behold where they have laid him!" Ah, methinks the golden curls have gone from his cheeks, and the auburn has faded from his brow, and his "hair is white as the wool, as white as snow." Sorrow and anguish have turned it.—Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

REGULATIONS FOR LENT.—1. The first day of Lent, Ash-Wednesday, falls on the 26th of February.

2. All the days of Lent are days of fasting, except the Sundays.

3. All persons who have completed their twenty-first year, unless legitimately dispensed, are obliged to keep the fast. Custom allows a cup of coffee, tea, or chocolate, with a small piece of bread, to be taken in the morning. In the evening, a collation not exceeding the fourth part of an ordinary meal, is allowed.

4. By dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed at the principal meal on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, except the Saturday in Ember week, and the Thursday and Saturday in Holy week.

5. The use of fish and flesh meat is not allowed at the same meal during Lent.

6. All under twenty-one years of age, those who are engaged in hard work, the sick and convalescent, and persons who cannot fast without serious injury to health, are exempted from the fast. Persons excused from fasting, on account of tender age, hard labor, and sickness, are not restricted to the use of flesh meat at only one meal, on the days on which it is allowed. Those who entertain any reasonable doubt about their obligation to fast or abstain, ought to apply to their pastors for advice or dispensation.

7. The time for fulfilling the Paschal duty is extended, in this diocese, from the first Sunday of Lent to Trinity Sunday.

The Sacramental Oils will be blessed on Holy Thursday, in St. Mary's Church, Wabash Avenue, at 10 o'clock, and distributed to the reverend clergy by the Chancellor.

By order of the Right Reverend Bishop.
P. J. MURPHY, D.D.,
Chancellor and Secretary.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " " "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 " " "	6 " "
" 52 " " " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mm. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Scapes.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1811-4. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrawska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	4.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	7.00
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.00
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Speeches.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahl. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	1.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	5.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.00
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V. J.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monument of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	3.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.00
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.00
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERN (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	3.00
Biography. History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Elements of Geology.....	5.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soule's Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Masters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	3.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., fable cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 5 vols.....	31.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDIKT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	3.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 8 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Penderic.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.00
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I. METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom. Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$5.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CARE. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DRINK PINE GROVE

MINERAL SPRING WATER!

The best Alkaline Chalybeate found in twenty-eight years' practice of medicine, and diligent search for the best remedies for disease. It contains alkaline matter and iron in such proportions as to promote the circulation in the portal veins, regulate the secretions, remedy constipation, and give a good appetite. The iron reproduces the red globules in the blood, and invigorates the nervous system. No experienced physician and no well-informed person can deny the good effects of the ingredients.

For Invalids, arrangements have been made with the proprietor of the New Hampshire House, and with several farmers near the Springs, for good and cheap board.

AGENCIES:

WM. H. VICKERY, Apothecary, Dover, N.H.

Z. FOSTER CAMPBELL, Apothecary, Manchester, N.H.

SULLIVAN & LOTZ, Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

SCRIPTURE & PARKER, 31 and 33 Court Square,

Boston.

For Circulars, Agencies, and Information,

address

Office Pine Grove Mineral Springs,

DOVER, N.H.

DR. J. EDWARD BRUCE

Is prepared to lecture before Lyceums, and other societies desiring his services. He offers the following list of Lectures:—

1. The Education Question, considered as the Coming Crisis in American Politics.

2. Christian versus Chamo-Civilization.

3. The Place of Spiritual Phenomena in a Right Philosophy of Man.

4. The Origin and Development of the Spiritual Element in Man.

5. Christianity and Free Religion.

6. The Religious Outlook.

7. Supernatural Selection.

8. English Labor and English Laborers as I saw Them.

Address

J. EDWARD BRUCE, M. D.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-

TION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by

James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.;

one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W.

Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker.

Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 80

cts.; one hundred, $8.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13

and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one

hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred,

$3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing.

25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts.

each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents

wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE

& CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April

5, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. BOWELL

& CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages,

containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS,

from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cts.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place

Boston.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON &

CO., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPU-

LAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN

THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place

Boston.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-

selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox

man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton

Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense

kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year,

a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and

Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1876. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States.

All of these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them, and everything con-connected with them, will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in The Sun.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by The Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of GRANT's administration, and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this The Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.

The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memoorable as deciding upon GRANT's aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read The Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length

when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting, and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1876.

WHOLE No. 330.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
- Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, wherein organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

tion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS throughout the country are reported to be in a state of great activity.

THE THREE ARCHBISHOPS of Cephalonia, Patras, and Messene, and a former minister of ecclesiastical affairs, have just been sentenced at Athens for receiving bribes.

MR. FROTHINGHAM'S new work on The History of Transcendentalism in New England is to be published immediately by G. P. Putnam's Sons, of New York, and will be eagerly sought by the intelligent part of the public. It cannot fail to be a standard work on this very important and very interesting subject.

THE BOSTON Herald is the fairest and most courageous paper in this city on religious matters; although the Post is close on its heels in this respect. The Sunday Herald of April 9 republished the "Demands of Liberalism" in full; and the Post and Transcript of April 15 published in full the resolutions adopted by the Liberal League on the preceding evening.

IT WILL be best for all who intend to subscribe towards Mr. Morse's bust of Thomas Paine to remit the money immediately to Mrs. Kilgore. The time is short, and it should be remembered that Mr. Morse cannot take the risk of putting the bust into marble until the full amount is subscribed. The $1200 required includes the cost of a marble pedestal and all expense of delivery at Independence Hall.

THE POLISH CATHOLIC "martyr," Cardinal Ledochowski, has been accused in the House of Deputies by Count Eulenburg, the Prussian Home Minister, of having violated his written pledges to the government that he would not encourage civil disturbance in Posen. The Tribune's correspondent in London characterizes this conduct as "fraud," "lying," and "treachery." But, being all for the good of the Church, it will be doubtless applauded by the Vatican.

A REV. MR. HAMILTON (Methodist) preached lately in Boston that "there were some honest sceptics who sought the truth, but these were in the minority; most disbelievers were not mere sceptics, —they were rejecters. They rejected Christ, the Bible and Christianity without knowing anything about them, or without trying to know." On the contrary, they "reject" because they know too much on these subjects to "accept"; and among other things, they know that Rev. Mr. Hamilton belongs to a class of Christians who make no scruple of peddling out pious libels to their congregations.

THE NEW YORK Tablet (Catholic) says with astonishing hardihood: "It would be absurd to accuse the Catholic Church in this country of having ever attempted to control any political party, or to dictate any policy as a condition for the votes of Catholics." The Tablet forgets the Gaghan law in Ohio, and seems never to have heard of Father Henning, of St. Louis, who recently declared: "It is the duty of every Catholic to vote for a Catholic candidate, —for one who is not opposed to the Catholic religion, who is not an enemy to the Church; and it is the duty of every faithful Catholic to vote against those candidates who are enemies of our Church and our holy faith."

THE MEETING of the Boston Liberal League was held last Friday evening according to announcement, and a full report of the proceedings will be found in this paper. The many and able addresses of Rev. M. J. Savage and Mr. Horace Seaver were exceedingly well received; officers for the ensuing year were elected; delegates to the Centennial Congress of Liberals were appointed, and a collection on its behalf was taken up which, not yet being completed, will be reported in due time; resolutions were adopted in favor of equal rights in religion and natural morality in politics; and altogether the meeting was a very good one. We regret, however, that in the hurry of adjournment, no vote was passed acknowledging the kindness of the Parker Fraternity, which generously afforded their fine Hall for the occasion without compensation; and we venture to repair this accidental omission as well as we can, by tendering the thanks of the Liberal League to the Fraternity for their courtesy and friendly hospitality.

THE LADIES of Toledo, Ohio, have just begun the publication of a new monthly journal of eight pages in advocacy of the woman movement. Its name is the Ballot Box, and its editor is Mrs. S. R. L. Williams, who has proved her marked ability and enthusiasm in this cause by many years of effective work. She is the President of the Toledo Woman Suffrage Association, of which Mrs. J. P. Angier is the Recording Secretary, and Mrs. M. J. Barker, the Treasurer; and the new journal is the official organ of this association. All these ladies were members of the Independent Society with which we were connected from 1869 to 1873, and we can bear sincere testimony to the devotion and elevation of spirit with which they and their friends have long toiled to vindicate the rights of woman. They have our heartiest sympathy in their present undertaking, which we commend to the support of all friends of justice everywhere. The price is $1.00 a year; address the Ballot Box, 79 St. Clair Street, Toledo, Ohio.

NORA PERRY, in a recent letter to the Chicago Tribune, writes: "All readers of Radical Club doings and literature will recall with interest anything concerning the editor of the Radical, —the magazine which went out of existence a year or two ago, but which when living had such interest for all liberal thinkers. Yesterday morning I went on an exploring expedition into the old Province Building on Bromfield Street. Up three flights I found under the finest skylight in Boston the quondam editor of the Radical, Mr. Sidney Morse, who is devoting himself to his first love, sculpture, with a vigor both in application and execution which argues well for results. Of course, knowing his radical thoughts, it was in the natural order of things to see Theodore Parker's firm face under the chisel. But who was that with the grand head bent downward slightly? Whose face was this, so calm, so intrepid, so majestic? I thought all these questions before I asked them of the artist, as we pour over the superscription of a letter before we seek the answer to the enigma within. And then to the question this answer, —the head was that of Tom Paine! Mr. Morse made the cast himself from an old picture of Paine, and from this modelled his clay. Whatever the different views of the visitor, and his ways of thinking, he must concede to Mr. Morse a conception of character and a grasp of the ideal in his treatment and skill which are unusual. There was a striking originality, too, in this conception of characters, —an originality both fearless and controlled. I don't know when I have seen a head so full of power, a face so living in its expression, or one that would repay a long perusal or daily study more than this. Even Theodore Parker's sweet integrity and frankness looked tame after regarding this Jovian type."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Massey, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREKIDVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSMOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATE, MS.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUSTIN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 MAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 BAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; E. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 OLIVERTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Woman and Politics.

AN ESSAY READ BEFORE THE CHESTNUT STREET CLUB, BOSTON, MARCH 27, 1876.

BY REV. E. S. ELDER.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

In the determination of the question, To whom shall the privilege of suffrage be extended? there are two dangers to be avoided. On the one hand there is the danger that the privilege will be restricted to too few, and on the other the danger that it will be extended to too many. In any indiscriminate extension of the suffrage there is the danger that the intelligence, enlightenment, and moral consciousness of a community will be in the minority. It is these qualities or virtues that determine the governing power of a community.

But beyond this it is also found that the smaller the representing body is, provided that all interests and classes are represented, the better it is. For instance, it will in all probability be found that a school-board of thirty in the city of Boston will be far more efficient than one of one hundred and twenty.

It has been assumed that the interests of women are identical with those of men, and consequently that the interests and rights of all individuals would be as truly represented by all men as by all men and all women together. The correctness of this assumption has been made manifest by the unquestioned ability, and I would add disposition, of the government to protect woman equally with man in the enjoyment of her natural rights. The women of New England, for instance, have scarcely dreamed that their interests were not protected, that their rights were not secured. They have not yet become conscious of suffering, from the fact that the laws are made by their fathers, brothers, husbands, and sons. Indeed, were it not for the superhuman efforts of a dozen advocates of the so-called woman's movement, there would be throughout New England a blissful unconsciousness of the meanness of man-made laws, and the cruelty of woman's political disabilities. Even the persuasive eloquence, the ability and self-sacrificing persistency of the advocates of suffrage have not yet succeeded by twenty years of effort in making the women of America, of New England, or of Massachusetts even, conscious of their suffering, or confident that by a vote they can improve their condition. If masculine government does not protect women in their rights, would they not know it? We may be assured that when the women of New England are denied their rights, when their interests necessitate their active participation in the business of government, they will know it for themselves. It will not require argument to make them conscious of their sufferings, nor persuasion to induce them to secure their rights.

Let it not be assumed that because woman has no natural right to vote, that therefore she ought not to vote. All that is insisted upon in this connection is that the claim in behalf of the ballot, based upon woman's natural right to vote, is not a valid one. The demand for woman's suffrage must be based upon considerations of expediency.

So much for the arguments in behalf of woman's suffrage, and what it stands for. They are not without their force; to many minds, in the absence of positive objections, they are conclusive. An examination of the grounds upon which the claim for woman's suffrage rests, reveals the fact that the fundamental assumption of the movement is the duality and antagonism of the interests of man and woman respectively. Woman's interests are separated from those of men, and the interests of men are considered as separate from those of women.

It is this assumption that vitiates the literature of the movement. While these interests may be arrayed against each other on the woman's suffrage platform, how do they stand related in life? What is the actual relation of the interests of the 370,000 women in this State to the interests of the 350,000 men? Is the relation that of antagonism, or that of identity? This is the real issue. If the interests of men and women are respectively antagonistic, woman must have the means of securing and preserving her own rights and interests.

Let this point be illustrated: young men and young women of seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, and twenty have no voice in the making of laws by which they are governed. Their property is taxed, indeed it is bought, and sold, and otherwise disposed of, without their consent.

A young man of twenty may be never so intelligent, never so capable, yet he cannot vote. Now do all these people less than twenty-one need the ballot for the protection of their interests? Certainly not, and for the reason that their interests are identical with the interests of those who are twenty-one and upwards. The latter are as much interested in the welfare of the young as they themselves can be; and yet by representing their interests as separate, as antagonistic, as much might be said in behalf of the political rights of children as has been said in behalf of the political rights of women.

There is a second assumption implied in the claims in behalf of the extension of the privilege of voting to women that deserves notice. It is assumed that a vote has a power in itself; that a vote is an instrument of reform; that with a vote a woman can exert a moral influence; with a vote temperance can be promoted; with a vote the law of supply and demand can be abrogated,—in brief, the ills of life can be cured with a vote. The Messiah of America is a ballot-box full of votes. This faith in the ballot would be quite harmless were it not associated with a corresponding want of faith in the actual means and methods by which any of the desired objects can alone be obtained. What are the facts? Suppose that the reverend and honorable President of the Woman's Suffrage Association casts his vote into one scale, his vote may be said to be the expression of moral and intellectual culture, public spirit, political wisdom. Will not the vote of such a man have great weight, and exert a helpful influence? Will not the votes of a few such men insure the establishment of justice, and promote the common weal?

Alas! fifty cents put where they will do the most good will neutralize the confidently-anticipated effects of his vote and those of half-a-dozen others. The humiliating truth must be told. The vote of the most ignorant, selfish, and vicious man weighs just as much as that of Dr. Clarke. His vote may represent an infinite power for good; the vote bought for a glass of very poor whiskey may represent an unlimited power for evil. The sum of the two votes is absolutely nothing.

The votes of Mrs. Howe, Livermore, and Stone will weigh as much as, and no more than, the votes of Mrs. Patrick O'Rourke and her two daughters. And what is worse, and more to the purpose, the moral, refining, and otherwise helpful influence of the former noble women will be exactly neutralized by the three of opposite character. The time is at hand when the ballot-box will be seen to be an idol, possibly a devil,—certainly not a God in whom we can trust.

The partisan character of the arguments in behalf of the woman's movement is worthy of a moment's notice.

The woman suffragist remembers the one widow whom the law harms, but fails to perceive the generosity of that same in the vast majority of cases. It is seen that the property of a woman is taxed, and that she is not allowed to vote; it is forgotten that the property of the corporation, the minor, the non-resident is taxed under the same circumstances. It is seen that each woman is interested in increasing the salaries of those who are engaged in the same labor with herself; it has never occurred to any woman suffragist that each woman is interested in small salaries for women engaged in all other kinds of labor. It is complained of that a woman receives less than a man for the same work; it is not acknowledged that a score of women stand waiting for the work of the one. It is remembered that there were laws that did injustice to women; it is forgotten that legislators have been repealing these laws for twenty-five years. It is urged that the influence of the able and noble women who advocate woman's suffrage would be helpful in political affairs; it is forgotten that 32,000 ignorant Catholic women under the control of the enemies of public schools will be a dangerous element in the politics of Suffolk County.

Having considered the character of the principal arguments in behalf of the woman's suffrage movement, I now proceed to state the objections. While the arguments in favor are based very largely upon isolated facts often exceptional and peculiar, upon conditions that are local and temporary, upon assumptions that have no basis in fact,—on the other hand the objections are of a general nature; they do not have exclusive reference to one class of women, or to the operation of laws in one case, or to the earnest wishes of a very few. The grounds of the objections are as broad as the proposed change. The objections are based upon the actual relation of man to woman, the actual relation of their interests, and the relation of both to the great work of life.

The first objection to so important and far-reaching change as is advocated by women suffragists is this: there is no need of it. This is a very dogmatic and summary objection, one that begs the whole question. Nevertheless, until it is shown that the change is needed, nothing more need be said in opposition to it. The privilege of participating in the business of government has been limited to men of twenty-one years, and upwards. Now if a few good people were to urge the extension of the franchise to young men of twenty, the one all-sufficient objection would be, there is no need of it. Nothing is to be gained by the extension.

The existence of the evils which it is proposed to remove is freely admitted, but I demur to the sufficiency, and even the tendency, of the proposed change to accomplish what is claimed for it.

The first positive objection to the extension of the franchise to woman is this: the vast majority of women wish not to vote; of course those who do wish to vote have no sympathy with this objection. The large majority of women in this State, for instance, do not feel that they are injured by the fact that the functions of government are limited to one sex. It is to be borne in mind in this connection that the number of intelligent women who actually wish to vote is not to be estimated by the number of names found in the petitions. It is a very common occurrence for a woman to sign the petition, and at the same time remark that she would not vote if she could, but that she is willing that others should vote if they wish to. Again, others are heard to remark that they always sign all the petitions, though they have no desire to vote. But it may very properly be asked if one thousand, or even one hundred, women wish to vote, if these very few feel aggrieved by their inability to vote, why should they not be allowed to? If others do not wish to vote, they need not. But is it true that women need not vote if they do not wish to? Are they free from all obligation? Does not the right to vote and participate in politics involve the duty of such participation? Is it not true that when the ballot is put into the hands of the ignorant, and unmoral, and immoral, it becomes the imperative duty of every intelligent woman, who is interested in the social and moral well-being of the community, to cast her vote and exert her influence in order to neutralize the vote and influence of the ignorant and politically vicious? If the ballot is given to the women of the North End or Five Points, the ladies of Beacon Street and Fifth Avenue will have something more than an empty right; they will have a duty whose neglect will allow iniquity to triumph.

It must be kept in mind that the extension of suffrage has reference to all women, bad and good, ignorant and educated, free lovers and Shakers, the most vicious and the virtuous. Very fortunately, particularly in our cities, the ignorant, and unmoral, and vicious women cannot vote. When they vote—and every one will vote as soon as they can,—a heavy and needless responsibility will devolve upon the better class of women. One class will roll the stone up the hill; the other will roll it down. Now my point is that this vast majority of intelligent women who do not wish to assume the burdens and responsibilities pertaining to government have rights and preferences that are to be respected. If one woman wishes to go to the post-office for her mail there is no objection to her doing so. But if her going to the office daily makes it the duty of all other women to do the same, most assuredly they have a right to prefer not to go; and the fact that they are willing that the postman or some other man should bring their letters, is a valid objection to a movement in behalf of woman's going for the mail. When an intelligent majority of the women of the State wish to participate in political life this objection will cease. Until then let the silence of women upon the subject of woman's suffrage be respected, and let every woman refrain from signing the petitions in favor of suffrage unless she herself actually wishes to vote.

It is not a little remarkable that after the woman suffragists have labored ably and persistently to convince the women of Massachusetts that they ought to vote, that they are suffering from their political disabilities, that the welfare of the State depends upon their participation in politics,—it is not a little remarkable after so much has been said and done that they still remain unconscious both of their duties and their sufferings. It would seem that if they are wronged, enslaved, they ought to know it for themselves; but if they are still insensible of their sufferings and wrongs after the persistent iterations and appeals of the advocates of woman's suffrage, it is difficult to foresee what will bring them to their senses.

The second objection to woman's participation in the business of politics has been already alluded to in what was said of the condition of American politics. I confess that I have great fears from the proposed doubling of the number of voters. I fear the political power of the organized minorities of the ignorant under the control of politicians. I believe that I am not an alarmist. I have great faith in the natural tendencies, and what I will name the tendencies of the leading race of the world to-day. But when I call to mind the fact that the experiment of self-government has never yet succeeded for any length of time; and when I remember that our first one hundred years of success (if the last four can be called successful) is in a great measure to be attributed to the exceptionally intelligent and moral character of those who laid the foundations of our national prosperity, and to the intelligence and moral purpose of the people at large, and to the peculiar conditions of life in a sparsely-settled country; and when I call to mind our present condition and tendencies, the rapid increase of wealth, the sudden and accidental accumulation of great fortunes, the consolidation of wealth in corporations, which, though they have no vote, can control majorities, the tendency toward centralization, which, joined with immigration, fills our rapidly-growing cities with an ignorant and venal majority; when I call to mind the means and methods by which an unscrupulous class of men succeed in obtaining and holding the highest offices, and how with the opportunity thus afforded they steal a fortune and then steal away; when I bear in mind that the vote of the most ignorant and unprincipled is of as much value as the vote of the intelligent and moral, and that the political influence of the best can be completely neutralized by that of the worst; and, further, when I perceive that the ignorant and immoral class is increasing, both by birth and immigration, with a startling rapidity,—when I contemplate all these facts and tendencies, I ask myself with profound solicitude, What can be done to avert the threatened danger?

I trust, I confidently believe, that there is an intelligent and moral power within the nation that will preserve our national integrity, and insure the success of our magnificent experiment of self-government. But as a means to accomplish this, I do not rely upon, and do not believe in, an indiscriminate extension of the privilege of voting.

It is an excess of democracy that to-day endangers the stability of our institutions. Intelligence and morality are the essentials of self-government. An increase of voters without an increase of these virtues is dangerous. If the voters of Massachusetts could be duplicated, the demagogue would have an advantage over the statesman; the most ignorant and selfish are the best organized and the most active. Suppose, to illustrate this point, that a representative to Congress has the same opportunity to fill the cotton-mills of Lowell and Lawrence with voters that he has to fill the navy-yards just before election, would not his election be assured? Inflation in suffrage will be found to be far more dangerous than inflation in finance.

Let us inquire how Suffolk County will be affected by the extension of the franchise to women. There are in this county 178,000 males, of whom 73,700 are voters, more than forty per cent. of whom are foreigners. There are more than 180,000 females, 80,000 of whom would be voters,—more than 32,000 of these are foreigners, largely Irish Catholic. Now what class of people is it that is sure to vote early and often? Is it not those who can turn an honest penny by selling their vote? Is anything to be hoped for from these 80,000 voters, forty per cent. of whom can always be counted on as the active followers of the worst demagogues? On the contrary, is there not danger to be apprehended from this extension of the privilege of counting one in the determination of questions that affect the well-being of the State? Suppose the question to be decided at the polls has reference to the division of school money as advocated by the Catholics, every Irish servant-girl, every Catholic, would vote in favor of the division. Are there not causes in operation that tend to unite the superstitious, the ignorant, the unprincipled, and personally ambitious? Have not some of our larger cities already been disgraced by this combination? Is the increase of the mob of voters the remedy for existing and prospective evils? It is my conviction that we have nothing to hope and much to fear from political inflation. The objections thus far have had exclusive reference to the extension of the privilege of suffrage. But the woman's movement includes something more than empty voting. It is, logically and irresistibly, compelled to demand full and complete participation of woman with man in all the departments and functions of government, legislative, judicial, and executive. If the claims put forth in behalf of the elective franchise for woman are valid, they are equally valid as regards participation in all the business of government. If women need the ballot to protect themselves from man's indifference, incompetency, or selfishness, they need laws and judicial decisions for the same reason. If politics is improved by her presence and influence, that same refining power is needed in all official positions (from what a disgrace an honest Secretary of War would have saved us). If the claims in behalf of woman's suffrage are valid, nothing less than woman's presence in, and influence through, all branches of government will protect her rights and interests.

And now what is the objection to woman's equal participation with man in the functions of government?

To appreciate the force of the real objection to the woman's movement in so far as it relates to politics and government, let us for a moment glance at the work of life, and the relation of man and woman respectively to that work.

Food is to be produced from the soil and prepared for the table; material for clothing is to be obtained and made into garments; houses are to be built and kept in order; the ocean is to be dotted with sails; wars are to be carried on; laws are to be made and executed; institutions, such as churches, schools, asylums, are to be founded and sustained; the sick are to be taken care of; children are to be born, tended, reared, educated—in short, hard work of body and brain is to be done. Each individual represents a certain amount of vital energy. What is employed in one direction cannot be expended in any other. He who mows the forests down will not write the books; he who discovers and invents cannot plough the fields; and he who ploughs will not paint the great pictures (though if he should happen to paint a picture of a yoke of oxen and a span of horses drawing a plough, he would not represent the team and driver as wearily stumbling over the ploughed ground, and the plough turning a furrow to the left, as was done in a picture recently on exhibition in Boston). The man of largest and most active brain will not exhibit most muscular power. Everywhere in the doing of the world's work there is—and to have it well done there must be—a division of labor.

And what is the ultimate outcome of what I have named the world's work? Is it literature, art, philosophy, science, institutions, philanthropies, politics, laws? These are but the means to an end. That end—the highest outcome, the fruition so far as we have any knowledge—is man and woman, the superior, the perfect man.

Indeed, what is the world's work as carried on by millions of busy hands and teeming brains but the creative process by which humanity is being created, evolved,—what is always most needed in the world? Is it not the physically, mentally, and morally superior men and women? That only is progress which leads towards this. The world improves; society advances only as one generation is better born and better educated than the preceding generation. Only as the coming generation is the offspring of physical, mental, and moral healthfulness will the future be in any way superior to the present. The greatest good that one generation transmits to another flows along the current of birth. Of all the rich legacy inherited by the last fifty years from the years preceding, the most precious, the most needed, were the noble men and women,—the Sumners, Parkers, Emersons, and John Browns; the Florence Nightingales, and Charlotte Cushman, and George Eliots. So much for the world's work and its result. What is the relation of man and woman to this work? Has one any greater or deeper interest in it than the other? Are the interests of men and women separate or separable? To whatever extent the interests of men and the interests of women may be arrayed against each other by the advocates of the woman's movement, those interests are one and inseparable. Man and woman are so constituted that the happiness of the one is dependent upon that of the other. Who are these men? Are they not sons, brothers, husbands, fathers of women? And who are these women? Are they strangers,—Amazons? Are they not the daughters, the sisters, the wives, and the mothers of men?

Instead of there being any antagonism between the interests of the one sex and those of the other, I will go so far as to insist that men are more kind and more just toward women than women are toward each other. A jury of men will render a verdict more favorable to a woman than would be rendered by a jury of women. And, on the other hand, women are more generous, more self-sacrificing, in behalf of men than they are towards each other. Is there not a period in most healthy lives when each loses self in the worship of the other? Nothing less than an insane and chronic individualism could array the interests of the sexes in antagonism to each other.

And now what is the relation of the two sexes to what I have called the work of life, the creative process as carried on by human beings? Though they have the same interests, do they perform the same functions? On the contrary, we find that woman is heavily burdened with the pains, labors, and responsibilities incident to wifehood and motherhood. This holy, creative, and world-renewing function of motherhood has been entailed upon women not by the meanness of masculine legislation, but by the wisdom of God. The women of each generation are in a high sense the creators both of the women and the men of the generation succeeding. Upon the women of to-day, not by virtue of the ballot-box, but by virtue of this natural function, will depend the physical, mental, and moral character of the next generation. Every child well born, mentally and morally educated, is a most precious and efficient contribution to the progress of the world. Nature's method of reform is always by a process of regeneration or new births. Our impatient reformers will one day learn that the culture of the young, and not the conviction of the old, is the speediest and only sure method of reform. The function of motherhood, confined to one sex, is of so great importance that upon its performance by the most intelligent and morally healthy women depends the welfare of society. Progress is possible only as the most superior women are among the mothers of the land. Only as the highest types of character are transmitted to the next generation will there be any advancement. Our republican institutions will be preserved; our national prosperity will be secured; conditions of human life will be improved during the first quarter of the next century, not by the votes, but by the children of intelligent women.

It has been attempted to show that the interests of men and women are one and inseparable; and, secondly, that one all important function of life, one that is life-creating and life-exhausting, is confined to one sex. It is my conviction that this oneness of interest allows, and this duality of function necessitates a division of labor. The burdens pertaining to woman as woman incapacitate her for participation in very much of the political, professional, and otherwise out-of-door work of life. At least woman cannot bear the burdens entailed upon her, and at the same time successfully compete with man, who is absolutely free from all limitations incident to parentage.

To state the question differently, can woman, not some exceptionally endowed woman, but one of the ten thousand or fifty thousand women, enter into successful competition with man in the out-of-door business of life, and at the same time rear healthy children, and do for them all that a mother ought to do for their comfort and welfare,—can she do her duty as regards the cultivation of their minds and the formation of their characters? And while she is doing all this, can she fill the home with that nameless beauty and sanctity whose memory is a perpetual benediction in after-life? It is woman that makes the home. It is the home and all it stands for that is the most efficient instrumentality in the reformation and regeneration of society. It is the mental, moral, social, and religious culture of the young that determines whether or not there is to be improvement and progress during any quarter of a century. Upon the intelligence and moral consciousness of the majority of mothers depends the safety of the republic. It is the home that connects the future with the past. It is through the home that all the virtues flow on to the future. It is through the home that we lay hold on an immortality that transcends our self-regarding hope. A great day will have dawned upon us when we shall have learned that humanity is led forward by the intelligence and virtue that are put into private life rather than by those virtues that are put into words or votes.

Now I object to the woman's movement on the ground that it tends to withdraw the thoughts, affections, and purposes of not a few intelligent women from that work which only woman can do toward that work that man, to say the least, can do as well as she; from what may be termed the natural duties of woman toward artificial and empty rights; from the silent sanctities of home toward a noisy publicity.

I object to the movement on the ground that it tends to exaggerate the importance of the ballot and participation in public life, both as an instrument and agency of reform, and as a means by which the influence of intelligent and public-spirited women may be brought to bear upon the political and social life of a community. Indeed, it is assumed that the ballot is a means of exerting a moral influence. It is forgotten that all that a vote would add to the moral influence of the most efficient advocates of woman's suffrage would be neutralized by the vote of the most ignorant voter. It is the tendency of the woman's movement by its overrating the value of the ballot to exaggerate the importance of those artificial, patent-medicine methods of reform, and to depreciate the natural means by which alone the improvement of society is possible. It is not objected that the act of voting will consume much time. An intelligent woman can step out in the morning on her way to the club, or store, and cast her vote for such a man as R. H. Dana, Jr., or for hard money, or for secular schools; and in the afternoon her servant-girl can run out and slip one or two votes into the box for such a man as Benjamin Butler, or for paper money, or a division of the school funds. Not two hours' time in a year need be lost. My most fundamental objection to the woman's suffrage movement is, that it is a phase of that unquestioning faith in, and superstitious worship of, the ballot that may properly be named secular revivalism.

The so-called religious revivalist promises salvation to all, regardless of their morals, if they will come to Jesus. Now the secular revivalist, who represents precisely the method of the former, importunes all, regardless of their intelligence, their motives, and their morals, to come to the ballot-box. The salvation of the country is to be secured by counting the number of adults. Now this ignoring of all considerations of intelligence and morals is one of the "rocks ahead." But this is not all. The religious revivalist who relies on the atoning merits has no faith in morality and natural religion, either as a means or an end. I believe that it is the tendency of those whose faith is in the ballot as an instrument of reform, as the means by which moral and otherwise helpful influence can be exerted, to undervalue, in many cases to ignore, the natural and only means whereby any permanent improvement in human conditions can be secured. How many intelligent and noble women there are who, because they are closely confined to their homes and household cares, and have no opportunity to take part in more public and conspicuous activities, feel that they are doing absolutely nothing in behalf of philanthropy, or temperance, or charity, or any reform. And yet it is these who are contributing most to the actual advancement of mankind. It is true that they do not stand in the public eye; they do not fill the public ear with their voice, nor the public mouth with their praises.

In this connection it is well to remember that intelligence, moral insight, moral feeling, and loyalty to high ideals, in one word, character, will make itself felt. Every woman who manifests these virtues exerts a refining and elevating influence, an influence that cannot be neutralized by the ignorant and selfish, except at the polls. The noble women who advocate the extension of suffrage, indeed, all women who are interested in the movement, are a power for good; but when it comes to voting, the zealous followers of Moody and Sankey, or the female communicants of a single Roman Catholic diocese, will vote against them, and outvote them three to one. One cotton-mill would outvote an entire woman's suffrage convention, even if the latter were united. Never was there a time when the influence of intelligent, refined, and moral women was more needed than today; but that influence cannot be exerted through the ballot-box. In the mental, moral, and religious culture of the young there is a work adequate to the employment of the highest faculties, an opportunity to exert a moral and refining influence. The young constitute the plastic material which may be moulded into the desired form, and made to receive an indelible impression. This work which can only be done by the intelligent and conscientious, is to-day neglected by the intelligent and conscientious. Much of our reformatory activity is iconoclastic rather than creative. It has just been remarked that it is the tendency of those who have faith in the ballot, as the means of exerting a moral influence, to undervalue the natural means by which any permanent good can be secured. Yet it is this army of unconscious reformers who regenerate and reform society.

There lived in my neighborhood during the first quarter of this century an intelligent and conscientious woman, who may be said to have devoted her life to the rearing of a family of eleven children. Now it is my conviction that that one woman did more in behalf of human well-being in her quiet, natural, yet earnest and conscientious, living, than would be done by the votes of every woman in the town for one hundred years. Her eleventh child was Theodore Parker. She put her conscience, her native common-sense, her seriousness, her religion, her very soul not into words or votes, but into life.

"She builded better than she knew." When shall we learn that intelligence, refinement, moral and religious consciousness, like beauty, are organic, inherited, transmitted, but not elected by our votes, or conferred into being by our words, or imparted to society by the legal enactments?

[Specially reported for THE INDEX.]

THE BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

THIRD ANNUAL MEETING AT PARKER MEMORIAL HALL ON FRIDAY, APRIL 14--ADDRESSES BY REV. M. J. SAVAGE, F. E. ABBOT, AND HORACE SEAYER--RESOLUTIONS--ELECTION OF OFFICERS, ETC., ETC.

The third annual meeting of the Boston Liberal League occurred on Friday evening last, at the Parker Memorial Hall. The audience was very respectable in point of numbers, and the interest manifested in the addresses and the work of the League was unabated.

The President, Mr. F. E. Abbot, called the meeting to order just before eight o'clock, and Mr. R. H. Ranney, in the absence of the Secretary, read the records of the previous meeting. The election of officers for the ensuing year was the first business in order.

Mr. Ranney moved that the chair, in accordance with the usual custom, appoint a nominating committee of three, and Mr. Horace Seaver, Mr. George H. Foster, and Mrs. S. B. Otis were appointed.

DELEGATES TO THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS.

Mr. Henry S. Williams next addressed the chair, stating that, as there was to be a convention of Liberals at Philadelphia during the Centennial celebration to which all the Liberal Leagues throughout the country were invited to send delegates, he therefore moved that the meeting now proceed to nominate three delegates to serve in that capacity, besides the President and Secretary.

The meeting elected Messrs. George H. Foster, H. S. Williams, and Dr. H. B. Storer.

Mr. Williams moved that the delegation just appointed have power to furnish substitutes in case any of the number could not attend in person. The motion prevailed.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The President then said: "If there is no other business before the meeting at present, I will read a series of seven resolutions which I have drafted, and, in order to bring the matter fairly before the League, I will make the request that somebody shall move their adoption as a mere matter of form, of course not implying thereby that they are approved. After the reading of the resolutions, we will listen to some remarks by the Rev. Minot J. Savage, who has very kindly come here to address us on 'State Secularization.' At the close of his remarks, I will say a few words myself, and the resolutions will then be submitted to the League for debate and action. There are some points upon which we may not all agree; if so, let them be brought out and discussed with the utmost frankness." He then read the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That this great republic was founded by patriots and statesmen one hundred years ago for the good of the whole people, and not for the good of parties, sects, or churches.

Resolved, That all special legislation in the interest of parties, sects, or churches is hostile to the good of the whole people.

Resolved, That all laws exempting church property from taxation, requiring or permitting religious worship or instruction in the public schools, interfering with the free enjoyment of Sunday as the people's rest day, or establishing in any other manner a practical connection of Church and State, constitute just so much special legislation in the interest of the churches, a grave violation of the fundamental principles of this government, a reprehensible abuse of the power of the majority, and a manifest wrong and injustice to very many individual citizens.

Resolved, That the Boston Liberal League affirms the great principle of State Secularization, as the only guarantee of equal rights in religion, and the only foundation of natural morality in politics; and that this principle is infringed by any special legislation, however indirect or disguised, in the interest of sects or churches.

Resolved, That Equal Rights in Religion can only be established by the absolute and complete separation of Church and State, which is impossible without the repeal of many existing laws in favor of the churches; that we protest against all such special legislation, in whole and in part, and call upon all justice-loving citizens to unite in demanding its immediate repeal.

Resolved, That Natural Morality in Politics can only be established by the adoption of such a reformed civil service system as shall make character and capacity, not partisanship or purchase, the prime qualification for the tenure of all public offices; that character and capacity do not depend in the least on sects or churches, and are only put at an unfair and mischievous disadvantage by the contrary assumption cunningly insinuated by all special legislation on behalf of the churches; and that we therefore call upon all good citizens to unite in demanding the complete secularization of the government, to the end that the cause of public morality may prosper, and rogues be no longer helped to office by professing their love to Jesus. (Applause.)

Resolved, That in the political campaign of this Centennal year we shall look with most favor on those candidates who are most conspicuous for practical fidelity to equal rights in religion and natural morality in politics; and that we will vote for no candidate who proves himself to be opposed to either. (Applause.)

Mr. Williams moved the adoption of the resolutions; whereupon the President introduced Mr. Savage as follows:—

"Ladies and gentlemen, in accordance with the plan just sketched, I have the great pleasure of introducing to you one of our most able and fearless ministers; a man whose word is always ready to be uttered in behalf of every true and progressive measure; a man whom I heard plead recently at the State House on behalf of the rights of conscience on the school question, and whose name you are all familiar with as the author of a very striking series of sermons on 'Evolution,' published in the Commonwealth, and other liberal sermons. I now introduce to you Rev. Minot J. Savage, of Boston." (Applause.)

Before Mr. Savage began his address, Mrs. Otis, on behalf of the Nominating Committee, asked leave to present the following list of officers for the League for the ensuing year:—

President, Francis E. Abbot; Vice-Presidents, Horace Seaver, Mrs. J. W. Smith; Corresponding Secretary, George A. Bacon; Recording Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb; Treasurer, H. P. Hyde; Executive Committee, Messrs. Storer, Williams, Dole, Ranney, Miss Buchanan, and Mrs. Sarah B. Otis. The report was subsequently adopted. Mr. Savage then arose, and made the following address:—

MR. SAVAGE'S ADDRESS.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN OF THE LEAGUE: I believe it is popular tradition that it is quite a common thing for ministers to write their sermons first, and then find a text. I have not written any sermon or address whatever for to-night, but otherwise the case referred to is parallel to the condition in which I find myself. I was asked to speak on "State Secularization," and, since coming here, the resolutions were put in my hands to read, giving the platform on which we were to stand and the text to which we were expected to speak. I find, however, that the resolutions in the main so perfectly accord with my own ideas and feelings that the text of my sermon and myself, I trust, will not be found very far apart, so that you will recognize something of the kinship and relation between them, and see that they are near enough, at least, to be introduced to each other.

Instead of taking the question up in the abstract, and speaking of the whole subject of State Secularization, or the principles which underlie it, it occurred to me that the more practical way would be to take some two points of practical importance that are uppermost in the public mind at the present time, and address myself simply and entirely to them. I will say, before beginning, what I just said to your President,—that I feel somewhat embarrassed in talking to a select company like this, for the reason that what I have to say may seem superfluous, as you are all indoctrinated in the same views, and I shall not have the honor of converting anybody, or even getting up a controversy!

You are all aware, of course, of the fact that ages ago government and religion were one. They were not simply united; the idea of their possible separation had never entered into the human mind. It is common, in some of the romances and some of the older poets, to talk about the time when man lived free from the trammels of society and of the social order, free from the power of government, in some early golden age of the world when each man did what was right in his own eyes, and followed the simplicity of Nature; and there has been a great deal taught in the writings and conversations of many in regard to going back to the state of Nature. In the attempts to attain this ideal position supposed to be held by people in the early ages, I believe it is very clearly demonstrated by this time that all this is simply a dream of a condition of things that never in fact existed in the history of the world. There never has been a time when people were as free as to-day, when government was felt so little, when social restraint, the power of public opinion, lay upon people so lightly as it does to-day. Take, for example, the North American Indian tribe, and there is not a greater despotism in existence. The member of this tribe has been so utterly in the grasp of this despotism that his individuality has been nothing, and he is not able to live against the will of the tribe of which he was a part. So this ideal state of things in government, I say, is simply a dream. The progress of government has been toward freedom, toward larger individuality, toward broader latitude of thought and action on the part of the different members of government and society. It is undoubtedly true that the grand end and aim of government should be to make itself useless. Government should be outgrown, and just so far as it can be outgrown, mankind is attaining its true ideal.

The little child in the family is so entirely under the control of father and mother, that the child's will and judgment count for nothing; the parents have everything to do for the child in guiding and directing it. But the whole object of parental training and discipline is to reverse this order, so that the time will come when the child's will and judgment will be supreme, and the parents' shall be outgrown and count for nothing, because the child has itself grown up into the condition of self-government and freedom.

The true end and aim of government, therefore, is to train people so that they shall be able to dispense with government. Ministers live, if they are at their proper work, for the one grand object of making ministers useless. (Applause.) Physicians, if they are doing their work properly, are exerting themselves to bring about the time when they shall not be needed; and so philanthropists and public workers generally, if they are doing their duty to themselves and humanity, are doing their best to help humanity to outgrow these necessities. This indicates the thought I wish to bring into your minds, as a fundamental principle on which I propose to stand in this discussion.

The ideal government is the government that governs least; that which lets people alone just so far as it is safe for all that they should be left alone. I would lay it down as a fundamental principle that government has a right to compel the doing of those things which are of public and universal necessity, providing these things cannot or will not be done in any other way, and government has no right whatever to do anything else.

Now, then, to take up one or two points which are now in the public mind connected with this question of State Secularization. What is the right and duty of government in the light of this principle, as connected with our public school system? Government has not only the right, but it is one of the prime duties of government, to foster and to compel universal education, for the simple reason that education in a republic is an absolute necessity to the republic's own safety and welfare. It would not make so much difference if we were living under a monarchy, where the will of one man, or (as in an oligarchy) where the will of the few, was the supreme power. Under such a government the great mass of the people are practically degraded, because the character of the government in such a case does not depend upon the condition of the populace. This is not the state of affairs in a republic. Here the servants of the people, or the officers of the people, if you choose to call them so, must simply represent the average intelligence and average character of the people. The stream cannot rise higher than its source. I fear, in these days when we are finding so much trouble with the affairs in Washington, that, while we are justly indignant at the betrayals of public trust, we do not consider that Washington is simply the grand reservoir, or lake, receiving tributaries from Oregon, Texas, Massachusetts, Florida, and representing the popular condition. You cannot expect to get a clear, pure lake that shall reflect back the stars of heaven, so long as mud taints the caucuses, and the impure moral associations of the people all over the land are pouring themselves bodily into it. There must be purity, there must be culture, education, and character on the part of the people. If we elect rascals and send them to Washington, we have no right to find fault with them simply because they display their rascality after they get there. (Applause.) It is related that a South African king was much astonished and frightened, when he saw the reflection of himself in a looking-glass, given him by a traveller. The heathen monarch was so enraged that he broke the glass to pieces. We had better take more pains to improve our condition, so that instead of getting enraged with the reflection of ourselves in Washington, it would be a little wiser to look to see to it that we improve, till we can cast a respectable shadow. (Applause.)

I say, then, it is an absolute necessity on the part of the republic that there should be universal education. It is a matter of self-defence, because the moral character and the moral culture and the intellectual condition of the people must be reflected in the persons that they themselves elect to serve them as officers. But, while the republic has a right, nay, should demand, that every child be sent to school, it has not a right to teach religion in that school, either directly or indirectly, whether one kind of religion or another. This is all the same whether the religion is true or false, whether it comes from above or below, whether it is directly revealed from God or invented by human genius; for the simple reason that it has no necessary relation to the right and the welfare and the prosperity of the State as such.

We have opened wide our doors, and invited the representatives of every nation and religion under heaven to come, and share with us our inheritance; and we talk about this being the refuge for all nations and peoples, for the oppressed of every land. We have invited them here to enjoy liberty. So long as the population was homogeneous, all descendants of the Puritan fathers, the school question did not come up, and never would have arisen but for the new condition which we are now in. We have representatives of almost every religion and of no religion now among us. These people are citizens by invitation, and are to stand on the platform of equal rights as citizens. This being the case, if we directly or indirectly compel them to learn the doctrines and practice the rites of our religion, then we are taking from them the very fundamental principle of equal civil rights on which we have founded our government; we are violating the first principles of the nation as it was established by the fathers; and we know that, if carried far enough, it may lead to religious persecution. As I said, it does not make any difference whether our religion is true or not; of course we all think our own is true. If you accord to any person or nation the right to compel others to believe as they do simply because they think they are right, why then you have accorded the right to this whole human race to engage in an everlasting warfare, to kindle the fires of religious persecution everywhere. You admit a principle which is destructive of the very first ideas of equality and of right in the matter of religion.

It is, then, nothing less than religious persecution for us to compel any one to read our Bible or listen to our prayers in the public schools. Religion is something which the State has no right to teach; it does not concern its functions as a State; and I for one, while I believe that the main part of the Bible teaches noble morals and stands for the truth of God, and while I have no sort of sympathy with those who are most loudly protesting against the Bible in the schools, the Catholics, yet for the sake of the principle of the thing, the rights of simple humanity involved in it, should it ever come to that, I would stand side by side with the Catholics and fight for their rights. (Applause.)

It does seem strange to me that one hundred years after the Pilgrim Fathers came over here for the sake of religious freedom, we, their children, should turn around to deny the very principle which made them heroes, and gave them the grand place they occupy in history.

Mr. Savage continued, saying it would be as just in the Chinamen to compel us to read their Confucius in the public schools as it would be for us to impose Christianity and the Bible upon them. It is claimed that the Bible must be retained as a text-book of morals. I grant the State has a perfect right to teach morals, but religion has nothing to do with the just discharge of secular duties, and the Bible is not fit for a moral text-book. As to the relation of the Church to the State, it is not worth while for Americans to spend breath in talking about Church "establishment," because that is not a fact here. The principal topic in this line just now is church taxation, this indirect patronage of the Church on the part of the State. What is it that the Church shall accomplish for the State that entitles it to look to the State for patronage? This is the radical question. Does the Church do anything that the State would have to do, if the Church did not exist? The churches, it may be claimed, primarily do a very large charitable work. In answer to this, I would suggest that the churches are not united in this enterprise; they are divided and unknown to each other, and the city could be distriated and the work done far more completely by the people in the capacity of city or State than it is now done by isolated, unorganized churches.

Mr. Savage further argued that in all history morality had stood firm, and been the real support of the good which existed with all religious systems. Most of the theological gods would not be considered respectable members of modern society. There was but one great religious founder who united morals with religion, and that founder was Jesus. If you remember the central part of his religion, the principle on which, he says, "hang all the law and the prophets," is that man should love God with his whole heart and his neighbor as himself; and you will remember that, in his picture of the judgment, he represents men not as being judged by their professions, but simply by their morality. He concluded by declaring that the Church had been the great obstructionist of progress in all history, and was usually five hundred years behind the times. Science was doing a mighty work pouring light on the laws of God, revealing the power and life at the heart of things, and bringing us into accord and sympathy with the love that is the true religion. This must be the foundation on which the Church of the future must stand. (Loud applause.)

MR. ABBOT'S REMARKS.

Mr. Abbot said: If the Christianity we have heard depicted to-night were the only Christianity in the world—if it were always so devoted to the service of man, so instinct with the spirit of truth and pure morality, so self-restrained that it could keep its hands off its neighbor, not aspiring to unjust power,—I think that many of those who have been hard at work fighting the usurpations of Christianity would find themselves totally disarmed. (Applause.) For one I care little or nothing for the name that a man wears when I find fairness and goodness, justice and kindness, truth and freedom in him. I am perfectly willing to say he is my brother in the spirit, and he may wear what label he pleases.

This movement for State Secularization is a great deal more than an abstract, a visionary, a practically useless reform. The very few remarks I have to make to-night on the resolutions are on this one point. I believe that this attempt to divorce the State from the Church, this attempt to found a civil and political society on its own basis in natural morality, independent of all claims of revelation or supernaturalism, contains in itself all the promise and all the hope and all the glory of the future years. (Applause.) If the State could not exist without the Church, as the opposition argued, there is no refuge from the conclusion that we should all go in for the support of the Church by public taxation; we should not be content with a miserly, penurious exemption from taxation, but all agree to support the churches wholly out of the public funds, and pay ministers, and build houses of worship, and defray all expenses of public worship. This is the only logical alternative. Mr. Savage has well pointed out the natural tendency of things. The differentiation of religion and politics, which in the beginning, as he truly says, were completely one—this gradual disjunction of the political from the religious interests of mankind,—has been going on from the commencement of history; and our forefathers one hundred years ago made in this country, so far as I know, the first experiment of a purely secular government. They had what I must call the genuine inspiration of humanity, and were wise enough to found this government on the natural rights of man,—not the delegated rights of man, but the natural and inherent rights of man. Although they did not succeed in making the government absolutely secular, still the tendency has been toward that end, and we to-day inherit the great task which they took up,—the task of perfecting this just, free government of man, by man, for man's good. It is surely not an impractical enterprise to endeavor to make the government fulfill its own ideal. We protest against the alliance in any degree of Church and State. We are not answered,—no, we are not answered,—when we are told that the actual connections of the two are merely trivial things; that five minutes' reading of the Scriptures in the public schools, the small restrictions laid on public freedom on Sunday, the small taxes squeezed out of the public by church-exemption, do not amount to anything. Those who cling so desperately to these little connections of Church and State are not fools. It is these multitudinous, invisible, scarcely recognized connections of Church and State that constitute the great practical bulwark of the Church against the undermining approaches of modern thought. They enable the Church to treat all forms of heterodox religion as practically outlawed, existing by mere sufferance, not by right. These are "tolerated,"—but they have no equal rights. The Christian religion has been so strongly entrenched in usage, precedent, statute, aye, in State constitutions too, because the Church is shrewd enough to prize its political ascendancy as the source of great practical power, and the guarantee of its influence over the minds of vast multitudes of men. Thus bolstered, it is able to make liberalism and heterodoxy unpopular. The people are made to feel that Christianity has the official sanction of the State; and in this country the opinion of the majority weighs so much that this feeling exerts immense power in retarding the free movements of individual minds. It makes men timid where they should have courage,—creates lethargy where there should be earnestness, deadness of soul and dumbness of mouth where there should be the enthusiasm of truth. (Applause.)

It is, therefore, because these little things constitute in the aggregate a great and an unjust advantage arrogated by Christianity, that Liberals, if they were wise, would say: "It is our right to be free from this disadvantage, and free we are resolved to be." There is practically no more formidable obstacle to the progress of liberal thought than the fact that Orthodoxy is able to claim the sanction of the State, and to wield the authority of the whole people by virtue of State laws. It claims to be the law of the land, and, as you know, Christianity has been ruled in several States to be part of the common law. Rev. A. P. Putnam, D. D., a Unitarian clergyman of Brooklyn, N. Y., has just published and preached a sermon of which the title reads—"Christianity the Law of the Land." Think of that! What a doctrine to be preached by a Unitarian, whose sect is the most liberal of all Christian sects! No liberal asks more than an equality with all other religionists: the utmost that any liberal ever asks is a fair field and no favor. (Applause.)

It is, then, this connection of Church and State which the Liberal League aims to rectify and abolish, as at once a great obstacle to truth and a great injustice to mankind. But it is not merely because this connection is an obstruction to the spread of liberal ideas, and imposes upon us all an unjust burden which we do not wish to bear, but also because it is an obstacle in the path of pure morality, that it ought to be opposed. It has been said that, if church property were taxed, the churches, the sole teachers of morality, would be destroyed, and society would suffer thereby. What a libel, friends, on human nature! Are we to concede for an instant that morality rests on any institution made by man? Or on human votes? It is too preposterous! Morality is rooted in the very nature of things, and all the power of all the nations of the earth can never uproot it. If all the churches be destroyed, morals will remain. Let nations, and States, and empires, and churches all die,—human nature with its love of justice will still survive. We have a right to believe in the moral nature of man, and to have this great load of wrong taken off of our necks and backs. I want to see the living truth emancipated from all artificial restraint, and allowed to win, as it must in the long run, where the race is open and free to all. However little heeded at present by the community at large, this movement for natural morality in politics and equal rights in religion is at the very heart of the progress of the nineteenth century, and will be at the heart of progress in all succeeding centuries; for it is the resolve of awakening man to work out a pure human society under natural conditions, and to get rid of the oppressive burdens, barriers, and obstacles created by the Church.

MR. SEEVER'S REMARKS.

Mr. Horace Seaver, editor of the Investigator, was next called upon, and spoke of the practical common sense which Mr. Savage had uttered. He alluded to the great advantage which the clergy had in the pulpit, and spoke of the good influence they might exert upon society. He reviewed Dr. Miner's argument that churches ought to be exempted from taxation because they were public educators, and held that such logic would end in the exemption of all printing-offices, and even the theatres, since no sermons preached were equal to the good influence of Shakespeare's plays.

Mr. Savage replied to Mr. Seaver's remarks, saying that the good influence of the press depended upon the man at the helm. He knew of the general progress being made in the churches among even orthodox clergymen toward liberalism.

The vote was then taken on the resolutions, and they were unanimously adopted.

Mr. Abbot now called attention to the Centennial Congress of Liberals which was to convene at Philadelphia, and had a collection taken up in aid of the gathering; after which the meeting dissolved.

A Mr. SMYTH, an English Calvinist of the Old School, has written a work upon The Bible and Evolution, in which the author points out that evolution is only Calvinism in science, and Calvinism is only the survival of the fittest in theology. He finds the evolution formulae the best possible expressions for theological doctrines. By the fall man "ceases to be in equilibrium with his environment," and becomes "equilibrated" again by the atonement. He further adds: "With the Living God within us, as well as without us, surely, our equilibration will be complete." Mr. Smyth objects strongly to Universalism on evolution grounds, since that doctrine teaches "the survival of everybody—the fit and unfit alike." One feature of evolution terminology meets with his disapproval. Natural selection he thinks should be natural election.—Independent.

A LATE learned and eloquent bishop was very anxious to convert a Parsee, who was making some stay in London, and meeting him on an occasion favorable for private conversation, he opened an attack upon his peculiar tenets. "I cannot think," said he, "how any man of intelligence and education, whose mind has been enlarged by travel and association with men of different opinions, can worship a created object, such as the sun." "Oh, my lord bishop," returned the Parsee, who had not been fortunate in the weather since his arrival in this country, "you should see it; you have no idea what a glorious object it is."

IN ONE of his letters to Schiller, Goethe says: "Farewell. Kind greetings to all; and retain for me your so well-grounded friendship, and your so beautifully felt love, and be assured of the like from me."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

LOVE.

Gentle as dew-fall in the night,
And strong as storms that sweep the land;
Love reigns, a monarch in her might,
And serves with humble, willing hand.

She is not mine, she is not thine;
Her home to find I know not how;
Yet all I've had that's most divine
She gave; and she is with me now.

Unbidden she is here, now there;
Her time's her own to plant, to gather;
Yet never she forgets her care,—
Her roses bloom in every weather.

I meet her in the morning hour
Watching the sun rise on the hill;
At noon within some shady bower,
At night beside the dreaming rill.

The spring-time blooms her grace disclose;
She lingers by the summer sea;
Autumn her ripe completeness shows;
Winter, how chaste and pure is she!

Physician wise for many ills,—
Sickness and pain, and souls' distress;
The rare herbs from a thousand hills
Less virtue have than her caress.

Her touch retunes the poet's lyre
That many a day in silence hung;
And Music lifts her numbers higher,
And warbles songs for long unsung.

Chaos recedes before her gaze;
All life, all things, make concord sweet:
Dearest, we've tried those heavenly ways
With hands joined, and love-sandaled feet.

We know how true a guide is Love
Who led us to these lofty plains
Where harmonies from spheres above
Commingle with earth's minor strains.

Lo, here are blooms of asphodel,
And fountains here that youth restore;
O Love, my Love, shall we not dwell
In this blest realm forevermore?

F. H. GUIWITS.

AVOCA, N. Y., 1876.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 15.

B. Cobb, Jr., $1.25; J. F. Ranney, $3; W. H. Knapp, $3.20; Thos. Davis, $13.20; Mrs. E. B. Chase, $10; Mrs. M. A. Yerrington, $3; W. Griswold, 40 cents; Ella Dozier, 10 cents; S. R. Nowell, $3.20; D. F. Emerson, 50 cents; Armenia A. White, $3.20; J. Damon, $3.25; C. A. Norton, $3.20; E. B. Babcock, $3.20; E. Ormiston, $3.20; D. W. Pond, $3.20; E. Wheeler, 50 cents; John Danhy, $1; Hopson & Sherman, $3.20; John Mead, $3.20; Chas. Mead, $3.20; Geo. Russell, $3.20; G. L. Henderson, $1.10; Alex. Risk, $3; T. Martin, $3.20; J. H. Bennett, $3.20; F. Sargeant, $3.20; J. T. Thornton, $3.20; M. B. Kingman, $3; C. C. Thompson, $1.60; C. M. Lawler, $3.20; Alphonso Taft, $3.20; H. Calderwood, $1.50; J. McMullan, $3.20; J. T. Mery, $3.20; M. F. Whitehead, $3.20; G. L. Ols, $3.25; Mrs. Wilbur, $3.20; J. S. Bonsall, $3.20; W. H. Barnes, $3.20; J. Elven, $3.20; C. W. Wendte, $3.20; D. H. Fitzhugh, $3.20; N. Grossmayer, $5; E. F. Wright, $1.20; H. L. Canfield, $1; N. Little, $3.20; H. C. Hurd, 80 cents; E. J. Rogers, $1.60; G. H. Dunham, 10 cents; J. H. Southwick, 50 cents; E. R. Wright, 75 cents; W. C. Lyne, $1.60; B. F. Underwood, $11.40; R. M. J. Vail, 40 cents; Henry James, 75 cents; C. M. Heart, 25 cents; S. N. Hamilton, 25 cents; F. A. Green, $10; F. E. Abbot, $50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 20, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Elstein, Titusville, Pa.	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnsdall, "	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaaki, N. Y.	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.	5.00
" 25.	" John Eliat, Winchester, Ind.	5.00
" 25.	" A Friend	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.	2.00
" 3.	" A Friend in New York City	50.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.	5.00
" 8.	" J. D. Lange, New York City	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Tiscomb, Boston	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, "	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipber, St. Louis	2.00
" 8.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston	5.00
" 13.	" S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.	5.00
" 13.	" C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Me.	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.	10.00
" 13.	" G. P. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.")	8.00
" 17.	" J. M. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sullot, Salem, Ohio	5.00
" 17.	" J. S. Bousall, "	.90
" 17.	" M. Schlesinger, Albany	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York	25.00
		$343.90

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.50
A. Scheilling, Philadelphia	1.00
A Friend	.50
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y.	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold, "	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Sleson, Port Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
O. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	2.00
S. R. Honey, "	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Minn.	2.50
J. M. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. S. Bousall, Salem, Ohio	.90
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
A Friend, Philadelphia	5.00
	$130.40

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

MR. KILGORE writes under date of April 13: "It is distinctly understood by both Mrs. Kilgore and myself that the bust made by S. H. Morse, which far excels any other design I have ever seen for perpetuating the features of Thomas Paine, is to be the one for which all money coming into Mrs. K.'s hands will be paid." This is in accordance with our own original understanding of the matter. It is rumored that there are other busts of Paine; but the movement to raise this fund, at least so far as THE INDEX was concerned, was inspired by hearty admiration for Mr. Morse's bust, which is in our opinion his artistic masterpiece.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND": SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15. A Friend in Boston (paid) $100.00

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

THE "CLERICAL POLICY" IN AMERICA.

M. Gambetta, who is now recognized almost universally as the leading Republican statesman of France, delivered at Lyons, on the twenty-eighth of February, a speech with reference to the political issues involved in the great electoral contest then pending. From this speech, as translated in the New York Tribune of April 8, we extract below a remarkable passage exposing the "clerical policy" which has proved such an unmitigated curse to France. The passage is a long one, but the prominence here given to it is justified by its applicability to this country:—

"Now, when one lays aside what I call the accessory ideas of the election and goes to the culminating point, when one seeks the ruling note of these elections, one sees that France, faithful to herself in the north as well as the south, at the centre as on her flanks,—that France has desired in proclaiming her energetic adhesion to the Republican government to combat and denounce the clerical policy within and without, at home and abroad. [Great applause.] If there is any one manifest and striking feature of this election about which no statesman, to whatever party he may belong, can hesitate an instant, it is this character of hostility and resistance of the French mind to the truly menacing encroachments which, for the five years past, the ecclesiastical spirit has been making upon the country. [Applause.] It has become apparent to our people, as well as to all Europe, that for five years, owing to our misfortunes, to our disasters, and perhaps also to our weaknesses, under the pretext of withheld monarchical rights, and of the restoration of this or that dynasty, the true leader of the reactionary coalition, the authority and guide of all those dangerous combinations against the liberty and future prosperity of the country, was clericalism. From the day the Assembly, which was born on the 8th of February, 1871, and of which we are not yet altogether disembarassed, though it approaches its end [smiles of approbation]—as soon, I say, as this Assembly commenced its work, if we reckon up the acts which have received the support of the greatest number of its members, the acts which reflect its true character and physiognomy,—what do we find? That the policy which never varied, which never was false to itself, which always pursued its purpose through all changes of ministry and all abortive governmental combinations, was the clerical policy. [Cries of 'Yes, yes!' Prolonged applause.] It is this policy, begun, you will recollect, by that celebrated petition of the bishops, which, taking account neither of the foreign nor the domestic situation of France, nor of her military and financial resources, proposed nothing less than kicking out-of-doors, as it were, one of the powers most formidable both on land and water,—a power which, through our aid, has been advanced from the third to the second rank, and which at the present moment plays an exceedingly important part in the politics of Europe. I speak of Italy, a power made to sympathize with France; of Italy, which in the past always found herself united by interest, by affection, and by aspiration with France; of Italy, which only asks to march beside France in developing the advanced ideas of politics and progress. This is the power with which they tried to embroil us, and with which, I think, we were intended always to live on friendly terms.

"And after this, what next did they do? They formed in the heart of France, as it were, a league, a sort of association borrowed from our ancient religious quarrels of the sixteenth century, and invited us to the creation of special associations, pilgrimages, missions, miracle manufactories, pilgrim migrations to the Vatican, of the creation of propagandist clubs, sometimes for workmen, sometimes for young men, sometimes for the pretended development of primary and secondary education. And what were they taught in these associations, in these congresses, in these clubs? Nothing more nor less than to bury forever the principles of '89. [Yes, that's it!] Prolonged applause.] That is not all. They did not stop here. They found in the Administration the utmost sympathy and favor for the inordinate development of religious corporations. They forgot or ignored our past legislation which required for the creation of these religious corporations certain formalities, certain guarantees. They disregarded the proscribed regulations, and never have we seen such an increase and multiplication of the children of the Lord as since 1870. [Laughter.] Nor did they find those formed within our own borders sufficient; they opened France to others from without, so that we were rapidly becoming the refuge of all the Jesuits of Christendom.

"At the same time that the Administration accorded this excessive protection to the religious orders, at the same time that it favored this formidable extension in a country of civil and democratic equality of the religious orders, by sanctioning their constitutions, their development, and their acquisitions, they at the same time pursued in the most pitiless manner the principles of civil liberty wherever they found them, whether in the Commune, in the school, in the judicial tribunals, and even in the army. Gentlemen, we cannot deliver ourselves to such experiments without attracting the attention not only of our country, but of Europe; and when this system was seen developing, progressing more and more in the State and in the Administration; when it was seen to menace even the living sources of the régime founded by the French Revolution, and laying its wicked hand upon the Code; when it was heard to speak of subordinating civil marriage to the religious marriage, of violating the rights of succession, of establishing the personality of dioceses; when the design was disclosed of enveloping the country in a compact network which should not leave a single liberty to modern France; when it was discovered that nothing was left in the family, in the school, in the Administration, in the army, or in the Assembly, which this fell spirit was not trying to appropriate, then France arose. She was alarmed; she feared the return of the ancient régime of that theocratic spirit which covets everything, which takes everything, and for which no one is thought to have ever done his share. [Applause, and prolonged bravos.]

"Look at the formidable persistence in this spirit of invasion and of ecclesiastical usurpation. The reactionary parties were conquered, disorganized, and divided. The recognition of a form of government was imposed upon them; it seemed that their fragments could never more reunite to form a coalition against democratic ideas. What a mistake! Exactly the contrary happened. It was after the vote for the republican Constitution; it was after the establishment of legal order that the clerical spirit, which never rests, which never varies, which pursues its contests with boldness, and, when possible, with banners flying and in full sunlight, which pursues them subterraneously and in a clandestine fashion when the daylight is unfriendly to it,—the clerical spirit, I say, not recognizing its defeat, and before the disappearance of the Assembly, left to the future Assembly that sad law in regard to superior instruction, thus taking possession of the summit after having taken possession of the base through the primary schools, and wishing to hunt down science everywhere, and at the moment when for us science is our only guide, our only defence, our only light.

"I pass very rapidly over this point, because it is useless to insist upon it before an audience like this. But this group of prizes, of conquests, of usurpations, accomplished over the French lay society and over the French secular society had excited the apprehension of Europe to the highest degree. Yes, Europe had said that this domestic policy, this new growth of the Ultramontane spirit in France might one day become the point of departure of a foreign policy equally Ultramontane, of a foreign diplomacy tending to array our people against another, not for the defence of terrestrial interests, but to divide them into two camps, one adhering to the interests of the Vatican, and the other to the interests of modern liberty. It is on this account that on the day following the elections of the 20th of February, Europe welcomed the result, and that there came one unanimous cry from the foreign press of every opinion and country from the Ural to the Alps. 'France,' said Europe, 'has recovered the control of herself; henceforth she will lend her hand no more to priestly combinations, but resume her part, her glorious part, as the representative of modern truth and of contemporaneous progress.' From all quarters and without distinction of country you have heard this cry of hope arise, because Europe, after the too frequent occasions—alas! we have made foreign governments distrust us,—Europe has begun to comprehend the utility of France in the world; to be interested in her laborious and peaceful mission; to repair by the most energetic efforts her misfortunes. Europe is now interested in France. With its sympathies and esteem reappear also its apprehensions. 'France,' said Europe,—'will she be strong enough to sustain herself, opposed as she is by her functionaries, in the hands of those who call themselves the directing classes and who wish to compel her to march in the rear?' The day has come, gentlemen, and the judgment of Europe is not required to wait. Hence I am under the necessity to-day of thanking those foreign publicists who, disinterested, and representing neither our passions nor personal quarrels, but careful, nevertheless, of European order, and of the triumph of reason and of justice, have examined our country, have counted the steps of progress it has made in the last five years, and know how to do it justice in England, in Italy, in Russia, in Austria, in Switzerland, and elsewhere."

We do not doubt that many even of our own readers will wonder why we should consider such a passage as the above "applicable to this country." They may ask themselves: "What 'clerical policy' is there in the United States to constitute even a 'cloud no bigger than a man's hand'? Are not the Roman Catholics a small minority here, quite powerless to impose any policy on the government? Is not Ultramontanism something which, however mischievous in Europe, is utterly inappreciable as a political influence in America? Why should any one trouble himself about the futile plottings of priests in a country where Church and State have no recognized connection, and where it is mere alarmism to dwell on the possibility of actual peril to our institutions from such a source?"

Nevertheless, the experience of France, and indeed of all Europe, is fraught with lessons of the gravest significance to America. The "clerical spirit" is not confined to the Roman Church, and the "clerical policy" is not a phenomenon of European history alone. Others may not agree with us in considering the Catholic Church, which is growing much more rapidly than any other religious body and much more rapidly than the country at large both in numbers and in wealth, as an exceedingly dangerous element in the complex problem of American destinies; but all close observers of clericalism will agree with us in regarding the "clerical spirit" as essentially the same in both Catholic and Protestant churches. The clerical party in the United States, composed of the clergy and of the laity who follow the clergy's lead, has a "clerical policy" very readily distinguishable as such in American politics,—a policy which substantially aims at the material aggrandizement of the churches, though at the expense of the religious liberty and general welfare of the community.

For instance:—

1. The clerical party as a whole, including both Catholics and Protestants, unites in demanding that churches shall be exempt from taxation,—in other words, that they shall be in part supported out of the public treasury. This oppressive filching and squandering of the people's money is perpetrated in defiance of justice, of equal rights in religion, and of the entire spirit and genius of American institutions. It is a crime, committed by the clerical party against the nation simply because this party is efficiently organized, and can command the servile obedience of politicians who want votes.

2. The same party insists on imposing the Sabbathical observance of Sunday on the whole people, as a species of State homage to the religion which it is the interest of the churches to maintain. The interest of the people requires many liberties on Sunday which are denied by the clerical party, such as the opening of public libraries, the running of cheap excursion trains, and so forth; and the denial originates in a determination to consult first and foremost the interest of the churches as mere institutions. Here is the latest illustration of this selfish contempt for the rights of the non-church-going public, as exhibited by the Legislature of New Jersey on April 5: "There was a long debate in the House over the amended bill to prohibit the running of Sunday excursion trains and the sale and purchase of excursion tickets, but not interfering with through or regular trains. The members warmed into a theological dispute, and quoted freely from the Bible. Mr. Rabe stretched a petition across the chamber containing 5000 names. It was against the bill. He contended that the bill was a direct strike at the poor and laboring class. It allows them to pay large fares, but prohibits cheap rates. The amendment was adopted 28 to 25."

3. The same party violates persistently and doggedly the rights of the people at large with respect to the public schools, insisting on its own usurped right to stamp a sectarian religious character on the school system, though thereby endangering its very existence. The only disagreement in the clerical party turns on what and how much religion they shall thus force into the schools paid for by the whole people; they all agree in trampling on the people's right to have what they pay for in return for their money—namely, education pure and simple, unmixed with sectarianism. The last instance of this particular oppression by the clerical party which has come under our notice was in Manchester, New Hampshire, on April 7. Instead of the rule of the School Board which ordains that "the morning exercises of all the schools shall commence with the reading of the Scriptures, followed by the Lord's Prayer," Mr. Little moved to substitute this: "The morning exercises shall commence with the music lesson, and no religious services shall be had in the schools." Notwithstanding his brave and able argument for this most righteous measure, Mr. Little saw his substitute immediately tabled by the clerical party.

And so on through the whole list of public wrongs and immoralities specified in the "Demands of Liberalism." The clerical party is strong and active,—never more so than to-day. It moulds legislation constantly in its own interest, in open disregard of the principle of equal rights in religion. The collective bearing of all these innumerable acts of usurpation and of the deliberate perversion of public authority to the service of sectarianism is to prove the existence of a settled "clerical policy" in this country, which operates as a perpetual and increasingly disturbing influence in American politics, and is gradually assuming the proportions of an evident conspiracy to harness the State to the triumphal chariot of the Church. That is what the Christian Amendment project means, and that is what all these things inevitably tend to bring about. Sooner or later that Amendment will come to be regarded as the one general measure indispensable to the success of the "clerical policy"; and all who are wedded to this policy will rally to its support,—the Protestants because they will be satisfied with it, and the Catholics because they well know it is only the first step in the accomplishment of their own Ultramontane schemes.

It is altogether time for the liberals of the land to recognize the comprehensive character of this "clerical policy," and to see whether the country is irresistibly drifting in its careless disregard of it. The clerical party are no fools in so stoutly defending their present vantage-ground in usage, statute, constitution; they know well that the average American is very sensitive to the opinion of the "majority," that the cumulative effect on his mind of all these indirect State recognitions of Christianity is to impress him with the belief that Christianity is the religion of the "majority," and therefore to make him profess that religion as the only way to be on the popular side. It is folly unfathomable to despise the unfair advantage thus given to Orthodoxy in the "struggle for existence" with liberal ideas, or to underrate the importance of emancipating liberalism from this unjust burden of obloquy and political ostracism. Nothing so stands in the way of liberal thought as this usurped political and social supremacy of Orthodoxy. All that liberal thought asks, as the condition of proving itself to be the truth, is "a fair field and no favor"; and this it can never have, until the great principle of STATE SECULARIZATION is appreciated by liberals themselves at its real, immeasurable value. If they only realized the absolute necessities of their own cause, they would demand in thunder tones that the wicked discrimination against themselves involved in these political usurpations of Orthodoxy should cease forever and at once. These things constitute collectively, not only a great and grievous injustice, but also the most formidable practical obstacle to the spread of free religious principles among the people; and there can never be a general hospitality towards rational religion, until it is relieved of the practical political disabilities now cunningly imposed upon it by the "clerical policy." So long as they are perpetuated, nothing but protests, heart-burnings, indignations, commotions, contests of daily increasing vehemence, can possibly grow out of them. They are a great and infamous outrage on human rights, and prepare the way for a terribly bitter struggle, if they are not seasonably removed.

There are reasons of the utmost cogency for holding a great convention to make a public protest against the "clerical policy" now prevailing, and to emphasize the need of a secular and truly American policy in its stead. To render these two great services to the country—namely, TO GET THE CHURCH OUT OF POLITICS, AND TO PUT THE STATE ON A SECULAR OR TRULY REPUBLICAN BASIS—is the object of the Centennial Congress of Liberals. It is a public object of great and vital consequence. Surely, the liberals of the land will prove themselves equal to the occasion, and strengthen the feeble hands that have taken up a mighty cause too vast except for the combined energies of all!

THE SOUTHERN SOCIAL PROBLEM.

To a transient resident in South Carolina the social problem consequent upon the issue of the war is one of equal interest and perplexity. This State, perhaps, presents the problem under more complex conditions than are to be found in any other part of the South. Here are the proud old aristocratic families that were first in the doctrine and work of secession. Here the negroes have a large majority in the population; and hither have migrated from other parts of the country many negroes with political and social aspirations, because of the better chance for political and social success offered them here. Here, too, is a large class of Northern people who have become permanent residents since the war, and in whose hands, combined with the negroes, has been the actual political power of the State for the last ten years. These classes, not to mention the poor whites and other social strata common to all the South, and existing before the war, make the problem of social reconstruction in this State one of peculiar interest and difficulty. The political reconstruction seems easy compared with the social.

We have heard much this last year about the era of reconciliation. Perhaps our traveller from the North who has come to the South for a few months saw the reception of the Southern military companies in Boston at the Bunker Hill celebration last June, and read the papers everywhere applauding that remarkable evidence of the restoration of fraternal affection between the two sections. And perhaps he has since seen accounts of similar receptions of Northern delegations in Southern cities, where the Boston handshakings, and huggings, and gushing flow of brotherly sentiments have been repeated. And as he saw and read, it seemed as if the process of social reconciliation must be nearly complete. But, after living here in the South a short time, he is reluctantly compelled to admit that those ardent embraces and gushing speeches were little more than a pretty ceremony. Such spectacles, so far as fraternity is concerned, only prove how much easier the display of brotherly affection may sometimes be, if the brothers chance to live several hundred miles apart. Politically, such interchange of sentiment may have some effect, considering the whole country; but it throws little light on the Southern social problem. It does not even prove that these same men would live together in social amity, if they should become inhabitants of the same city.

Here, for instance, in the capital of South Carolina, is a large Northern element in the population, which socially is quite distinct from the old Southern element. There are many Northern families that have lived here for eight or ten years, or more, and that cannot justly be called "carpet-baggers," since they have come with a sincere desire and purpose to remain. Among them are many persons of culture, refinement, and character. Yet there is no social intercourse whatever between these new Northern families and the old Southern families. Each of the two circles has its special social activities, but they nowhere touch nor intermingle. The same condition of things exists in Charleston, where only a short time ago certain Northern delegations of transient visitors were officially received with the utmost fervor.

There are also not a few colored families here that are qualified by character and education for admission to good society. One might suppose that these would find some social recognition in the circle of Northern families, where their political friends are, and where there is real and active sympathy with the general elevation of the colored race. But the fact is that these colored families are not received into the Northern social circle more than into the Southern,—though it is admitted that only their color excludes them. The color-line is broken down in the Legislature and in the court-room, but it is strictly observed in the parlor. And it is claimed that there it must continue to be observed. But it remains to be seen whether the claim rests on more than a skin-deep prejudice.

Such facts as these indicate some of the difficulties of the Southern social problem. They are difficulties, it is safe to say, that cannot wholly be solved by legislation. Laws should establish, and government be strong enough to enforce, absolute political and civil equality—equality of races, equality of States, and sections, and parties,—firmly disregarding old conflicts and prejudices; but the way to an ideal social unity is a longer road, that must be gradually surveyed and built by the general forces that promote human civilization and progress. W. J. P.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY B. C.

Very few persons can doubt, we suppose, that if the next President were to be chosen to-day by a show of hands on the part of all members of the Republican party—in the Northern States, at least—Mr. Bristow would receive a majority vote. There is good reason to believe also that a fair majority of Republicans would be glad to have him receive the nomination of the Cincinnati Convention, and that his nomination would be welcomed by a large body of independent voters who are destined to exert considerable influence upon future elections. There is everywhere manifest, to-day, a wholesome disgust for the system of political administration which has produced the corruptions which we are hourly called upon to read about, and an earnest desire either to reform the present system thoroughly or to do away with it altogether and to adopt some other in its place. The recent address of the Union League Club of New York; an analogous address issued by some prominent Massachusetts Republicans; the critical attitude assumed by many periodicals which have heretofore supported zealously the Republican party,—these are various manifestations of the growing desire for administrative reform, a desire of which Mr. Bristow is just now the most prominent and most popular representative.

Notwithstanding this very evident popular desire, however, it seems more and more likely that, in default of some extraordinary measures, the Cincinnati Convention will not give expression to it. As State after State selects its delegates to the Convention, it is seen at once that these delegates are, as a rule, products of the existing political machine; that they do not represent those who entertain the popular desire referred to, but the caucus-managers, lobbyists, office-holders, and their copartners; and that, if these are left alone so that they may dare to follow out their own preferences, they will nominate for the Presidency some man like Conkling, or Morton, or Blaine,—some man, in fact, who is not a reformer and not a statesman, but who is only a more or less astute manager of party machinery, and under whose administration, therefore, even if a few special abuses are corrected, there will be no alteration in the vicious methods which generate the mischief. We are glad to know, therefore, that invitations have been sent out to a large number (possibly two or three hundred) of the most prominent advocates of reform in various parts of the country, requesting them to meet in New York on the 15th of May, "to consider what may be done to prevent the national election of the Centennial year from becoming a mere choice of evils." The invitations are issued in the belief "that no effort should be spared to secure to the popular desire for genuine reform a decisive influence in the impending national election," and they are signed by William Cullen Bryant, Theodore D. Woolsey, Alexander H. Bullock, Horace White, and Carl Schurz.

The various Investigating Committees have not been prolific recently in disclosures of exciting interest, although their work continues to be attended with all sorts of vague rumors, which, as might be expected, gather most thickly about the committees which are holding secret sessions. Babcock and a long list of his cherished associates—Harrington, Whitley, Nettleship, Miles the bank-robber, and others—have been indicted by the criminal court of the District of Columbia for conspiracy in the Safe-Burglary affair, and Babcock's bail-bond has been signed, most appropriately, by "Boss" Shepherd. The Committees are said to be in hot pursuit of Robeson, whom, however, they have not yet overtaken (the Cattell-Matthews "scent" has become cold apparently), and whom, it is to be hoped, they will not overtake before he has finished welcoming Dom Pedro and got safely back to Washington.

The unexpected death of Mr. A. T. Stewart and the publication of his will have furnished themes for a great deal of newspaper comment during the past week. A considerable portion of this comment has been more peculiar than profound, and has originated evidently from a desire to spin out a fine theory to account for Mr. Stewart's career. All such attempts are wasted, however, for the simple reason that no ingenious theory is needed. Mr. Stewart was undeniably a very successful man of business, and when this has been said very little more can be profitably added. He illustrated the same feature of our civilization which is illustrated also by Vanderbilt, Scott, Orton, and very many others—one man gathering into his hands the results of the labors of thousands, and impressing upon them all for a time his own peculiar stamp,—a feature of our civilization, we may add, which, despite communists and labor-reformers, appears to be necessary, and which is certainly increasing in prominence. During the later years of his life Mr. Stewart seems to have been burdened with the idea that he ought to do something for the good of the human race, and initiated accordingly a number of vague projects, none of which have been successfully carried out, and the completion of which he has left somewhat lamely to the judgment of his wife.

The "sympathies of religions" received a significant illustration at the laying of the corner-stone of a Calvinistic Presbyterian Church in this city last week. The various exercises were performed by Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, a Congregationalist (Orthodox), an Episcopalian, and a Universalist. It would be an easy matter of course to pick flaws in any explanation which might be given of the purpose of this demonstration; but when we remember that only a little time ago Calvinists were roasting Unitarians, and Puritans were kicking Baptists out into the woods, we confess to a mild approval of this somewhat sensational performance. Nor need we be greatly disquieted by the reflection that some portion of this apparent unity has been brought about doubtless by the desire to fight the better against some common enemies,—to enforce Sunday laws, to sustain prohibition, or even "to put God into the Constitution." When the sects can forget their differences sufficiently to unite in favor of any one of these things, they confess thereby that some things in this world are of more importance than theories about another world; and upon this point we are so thoroughly in agreement with them, that we prefer to find them practically on what seems to us the wrong side, rather than to have them nourishing old theological hatreds which forbade the taking of any side.

There has been some talk recently about the formation of a literary association of New England colleges, the purpose of those interested being to make arrangements for a series of contests for literary prizes. The idea is borrowed of course from the "inter-collegiate" contests which have been held for the past two years in New York, and which have not been well attended by representatives from New England. With all respect for our college students, we may be permitted to express our opinion that the amount of information possessed by any undergraduate upon any subject of importance is very likely to be small in amount if not poor in quality, and any parade, therefore, which he may desire to make of his information had better be made within the walls of his own college. To declare, in pompous phraseology (as was done recently in New York) with reference to undergraduates who have been setting forth their opinions, that they show that they have not been unduly influenced by either the German or the French school of thinking is to make a ridiculous statement which can only foster a silly vanity at the expense of sound education. A college boat-race or a ball-match may be pardonable or even commendable; but in philosophy, in Greek, in mathematics, let the boys "dig," and not be prompted to indulge in meretricious display.

There is good news for the temperance reformers. The State Inspector and Assayer of Liquors, Mr. James F. Babcock, has prepared his first annual report, in which he gives the results of the examination of several hundred specimens of liquors (chiefly spirits—brandy, gin, rum, or whiskey) procured from different parts of the State. Of all the samples examined, only one-fifth proved to be at all adulterated, and of this one-fifth the adulterations were, as a rule, not injurious to health, but were used in order to increase the profit of the seller, the adulterant most commonly employed being pure water. Whiskey is often artificially colored, tannin and catechu were found in several instances, once, carbolic acid, and once (from accident in manufacturing) copper was detected. Brandy is often artificially prepared, but not with injurious ingredients. On the whole, the result is decidedly encouraging, showing clearly that distilled liquors are not injuriously adulterated to any considerable extent. Some temperance orators, however, must regret a result which is liable to destroy the effect of their loudest thunder. Beers and ales have not yet been examined, but we venture to prophesy that these will be found to be much purer even than distilled liquors.

The Senate passed the House "Silver" bill, with amendments, the principal one striking out the provision which made silver a legal tender to the amount of $50; also a bill on the finances of the District of Columbia; and the River and Harbor Appropriation bill, which appropriates nearly $6,000,000; accepted the House bill providing for the expenses of the admission of goods to the Centennial Exhibition; concurred with the House amendment to the bill making appropriations for improving the Capitol grounds; provided for the sale of extra copies of public documents, and passed Senator Hamlin's postal bill, which fixes the rate of postage upon all mail matter of the third class (which includes nearly everything mailable, under four pounds in weight) at one cent for each ounce, with the exception that transient newspapers and magazines are forwarded at the rate of one cent for three ounces and one cent for each additional two ounces; the sender may write his name with the word "from" on the outside of the package, and also a list of the articles enclosed. The House decided to bridge the Missouri River at Sioux City; agreed with the Senate amendments to the Silver bill; passed a bill concerning commerce and navigation; and passed the Deficiency bill. On Saturday, the House debated the question of the surrender of Kilbourne, who has been indicted by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for whose surrender a habeas corpus had been served upon the Sergeant-at-arms of the House. As a refusal to surrender would be virtually an assertion of the power of the House to suspend the action of habeas corpus in time of peace, the question (undecided as we write) is seen to be a very important one.

The revolt of the Herzegovinians still threatens to cause serious complications in European politics. The insurgents refuse to accept the reforms promised by the Sultan; an outbreak has occurred in Bosnia, attended with a great deal of religious animosity; and a very threatening state of affairs, if not a positive revolt, exists in Serbia. In the meantime, Turkish finances are in a deplorable condition, interest cannot be paid upon the bonds, and public officers are working without the payment of their salaries. Intervention is quite likely to take place, and what intervention may lead to, no one can prophesy.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, March 25, 1876.

How well Christians carry to all nations the gospel of peace, which they are charged to preach to every creature! It seems that the London Missionary Society decided to send forth the messengers of the gospel to take the glad tidings to the natives of New Guinea, living in the neighborhood of Fly River. Accordingly they fitted up a "missionary steamer," named the Ellen Gowan, and put thereupon one Rev. Mr. Macfarlane, missionary to the said society, accompanied by Signor de Albertis, and Mr. Chester, a police magistrate. This steamer forthwith directed its way to Fly River, and ascended some one hundred and seventy miles,—one hundred miles higher than any steamer had before penetrated. The party met native canoes more than once, whose crews waved green branches in sign of amity, and from which the missionary and his party bought yams. The Rev. Mr. Macfarlane appeared to have been in command, and he himself relates the subsequent events. When the steamer had journeyed about one hundred and seventy miles, some more canoes appeared, bearing down towards the vessel. Mr. Macfarlane suspected these natives of hostile intentions, although no attempt at attack had as yet been made; but they yelled and gesticulated, and this was enough for the warlike son of the Church. It would not do for the steamer to retreat, for "we had made up our minds not to return on account of the hostility of the natives"; nay, were not the interests of humanity best served by not waiting for these presumed enemies to attack the ship of Christ, but by attacking them? "They had to learn the superiority of European weapons," writes Mr. Macfarlane, "and the folly of attempting to capture European vessels, and we felt that it would be decidedly to their advantage to learn the lesson from the deck of a missionary vessel, where we hoped to teach it without loss of life. So our duty seemed to be to stand and fight, rather than run away, and the result will prove that we did right." Thoughtful and amiable Christian missionary! If anything could make the whole story blacker, it is the offensive cant which pretends that it fights natives for their own good.

And what were the weapons of these messengers of the gospel of peace? Dynamite and rifle-bullets. As the canoes approached, the Christians fired across the bows of the first, and as, after a momentary hesitation, the natives still pulled forward, "ten bullets struck the bow of one of the canoes," and the unlucky crews "seized their paddles . . . and pulled as for life." Then some more bullets were sent after them, and, when they stopped about a mile off, another bullet was shot at them, "which started them off again." Thus was preached the gospel of goodwill to men. Another account says that the natives retreated on "experiencing the fatal effects of the English rifles"; but according to Mr. Macfarlane no blood was spilt. Little thanks to him for it. Ten bullets striking the prow of a swiftly-moving canoe means danger to the rowers; but if a native had been killed, Mr. Macfarlane, though regretting the accident, would doubtless have comforted his pious soul with the idea that the survivors would have learned wisdom in the future. On the way back one feeble arrow, which fell short, was shot at the steamer, and the missionaries retorted with more bullets, chasing the natives until they hid in the bush. Another weapon was also used against the natives, of course with a view to their education. "Mr. de Albertis had several charges of dynamite on board for the purpose of killing fish." Some canoes were hovering at a distance, and the pacific missionary made friendly gestures to induce them to approach. The natives, naturally doubtful of the intentions of the strangers who shot at them when they did approach, wisely kept their distance; so these loving gospellers dropped a charge of dynamite in the river, with a long fuse attached, which exploded under the leading canoes much to the consternation of the unfortunate natives. "How beautiful upon the" river "are the feet of those who carry the gospel of peace," and how gladly the natives will welcome missionaries who commence their evangelistic work by shooting at them, and who spread the gospel by dynamite. Sir R. Alcock, chairman at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, congratulated the London Missionary Society on "the good work they were undertaking"; but we are inclined to think that such missionaries as Mr. Macfarlane are the true authors of such outrages as the murder of Bishop Pattison.

The conduct of the natives of Fly River, however, set the Christians a good example, for the missionary ship proceeded, and left the crew practically at their mercy. In danger, those who had been bullies of course showed themselves cowards, and they now endeavored to propitiate the natives with presents and amicable gestures. The natives forthwith assisted them in getting the ship afloat again, and, says Mr. Macfarlane, they "had evidently abandoned the idea of attacking us, and were disposed to be friendly." Upon this the Saturday Review caustically remarks: "The truth being that the natives had apparently never attacked them at all, except that one lot off an ineffectual arrow, while the missionary had been persistently peppering the natives with bullets, and scattering them with dynamite. It seems, in fact, more likely than not that the natives would have been friendly from the first, if the missionary had not begun by shooting at them." Mr. Macfarlane has discovered a new reading of the text which bids the disciple turn the other cheek when one cheek is smitten, and he is preaching this fresh revelation. It runs: "When harmless people whom you prefer to regard as enemies come near you, give them the opportunity of not resisting evil by popping at them with rifles, and exploding dynamite under them. This tends to civilize them, and to educate them into belief in Christian superiority." The gospel according to Macfarlane is indeed an attractive one. In England we have beer and Bible to turn our elections; abroad we are apparently to have bullets and Bibles to spread our power.

After this specimen of Christian labors in foreign parts, we read with some interest of the progress of the Bible Society, which is an organization employed in scattering Bibles and Testaments by the million. Grave questions should arise in Christian minds as to the wisdom of this proceeding, since Dr. Tischendorf has asserted that the Sinaitic manuscript discovered by himself will render necessary an entire reconstruction of the text, and it seems scarcely right to sow broadcast an erroneous version of the Word of God on which depends the salvation of the reader. The re-translation now going on may perhaps mend matters a little; but as Dr. Angus, one of the translators, has lately acknowledged that there are 100,000 different readings of the New Testament, there must always remain much doubt as to the real revelation. It seems a pity that the Holy Ghost, as he thought good to give a revelation, has not also thought it worth while to look after his work more carefully, and preserve it from such melancholy variations. It is as though a man promised to put up a sign-post to show people the right way, and then made a weathercock which turned in every direction. "It was a blessed thing to realize," said the chairman of a meeting of the Bible Society, "that in the last year a larger sum had been spent in connection with the Society than had ever been expended in any previous year." It seems to us a melancholy thing to realize that so much money is wasted in circulating the Bible, when money is so sorely needed for more necessary work,—for circulating scientific works which should teach men to think, instead of a work which fetters the brain and dwarfs the mind. Another gentleman said that many people, good Christian people, were anxious because the influence of the Bible was being undermined; they feared the attacks of sceptics, the revision now going on, and scientific investigation. He acknowledged that attacks were made by "such men as Bradlaugh and Watts," but he was not afraid of them, as their statements "were manifestly false." As to revision, "he supposed that, when the revision committee had finished their labors, they would give us a book which would have removed from it all that was doubtful, and retain all which they were thoroughly satisfied had come from God himself." As to science, they must not be afraid; "he had too much confidence in the book to fear anything from that source."

Nevertheless the timid Christians are in the right. The attacks of sceptics, the continual lectures given by the secular party, the stream of pamphlets issued by freethinkers, the tens of thousands of tracts published by the National Secular Society and scattered broadcast over England, are destroying, in the hearts of thousands all faith in the "Word of God." The revision is shaking, in the hearts of thousands more, that unquestioning reverence for the Bible which placed its words above criticism, and made it blasphemy to doubt. And scientific investigation is undermining the Bible in every direction. Who now believes in the creation 5880 years ago? Who now thinks that all the races of mankind spring from one human pair, created 4004 years before Christ? Who accepts the six days' creation, or the order of the appearance of vegetable and animal life as given in Genesis? Who allows that trees and plants could flourish without the sunbeams, or that the centre of the solar system was created after one of its planets, the earth? Look back one hundred years at the faith in the Bible that then existed, and then scrutinize the way in which it is believed by those who think themselves to be Orthodox Christians, and you will realize the marvellous change brought about by scientific discoveries. Men and women who study Tyndall, Huxley, and Clifford, can never again accept with any brain-belief at all the childish cosmogony of Moses, the birth of an ignorant age.

A meeting to welcome Moncure D. Conway is to take place on Monday evening next at South Place Chapel, Finsbury, and I shall hope to give THE INDEX readers an account of it in my next week's letter.

Communications.

NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, April 7, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

While the people of this city are familiar with the "Cesnola Collection of Antiquities" from the island of Cyprus, to many of your readers an account of it may be quite new, and the subject is certainly extremely interesting.

These antiquities were discovered by General Louis Palma di Cesnola, an Italian nobleman by birth, who fought in the Revolution in Italy in 1848, and also in our late civil war. In 1865 he became a citizen of the United States, and since then has been our Consul in Cyprus. Settled at Larnaca (the name signifying "the place of tombs"), his attention was directed to Cyprus as the central meeting-point of ancient races; and he was led to an examination of its tombs, the sepulchres of its successive owners, the Phœnicians, the Egyptians, the Assyrians, Persians, and Greeks,—the necropolis of one race, in some instances, reposing upon an older city of the dead. Di Cesnola commenced the opening of the tombs in 1865, and the collection on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in this city is the result of his labors for the seven following years. In this period he examined more than eight thousand tombs. He found it to have been the custom to bury, with the dead, favorite objects of the fine and the industrial arts; and the treasures thus discovered consist of coins, glass, bronzes, jewelry, terra-cotta, pottery, etc. There are more than four thousand vases of earthen-ware, of a great variety of shapes and sizes, many of them such as we have now, and in a state of perfect preservation as to form and freshness of color, the latter being usually of a dark brown and a purple red. There are amphora, bowls, dishes, lamps, statuettes, bass-reliefs, and objects used for household purposes. In copper and bronze, there are mirrors, armlets, rings, knives, and the like. In gold and silver, there are ear-rings, finger-rings, necklaces, etc. But the most beautiful and attractive of all these treasures from the tombs is the rich collection of ancient Greek glass, of more than fifteen hundred pieces, consisting of ointment-cups of every shape, tear-bottles, jugs, bottles, bracelets, plates, etc. The charm of this glass-ware consists in its wonderful coloring, the hues being blended and contrasted in every variety of tint imaginable, and with a vividness of iridescence suggesting the apocalyptic description of the precious stones of the New Jerusalem, and acting upon the eye with the fascination of a charm. This remarkable coloring is not supposed to have been given to the glass in its manufacture, but to have come from its contact, for so many centuries, with damp earth, together with the action of the decomposed liquid contents of the articles, and their combination with the gradual decay of the glass itself.

The most striking part of this large collection, obtained by the tireless perseverance of di Cesnola, is yet to be named, and that is the Gallery of Statuary. After much fruitless research, in 1870 he was rewarded by the discovery of the renowned temple of Venus, in Galgos. From this he obtained the hundreds of figures to be seen in this gallery. They are formed of a brownish-white, calcareous stone. The most of them are mutilated, though there are some perfect specimens of statues, statuettes, and busts. They are exceedingly interesting as a history of early sculpture, and its successive stages in the hands of the successive conquerors of the island, examples being presented of the early Cypriots' art under the Phœnicians, followed by that of the Egyptian, the Assyrian, the Greek, and the Roman. The physiognomy of those supposed to stand for Phœnicians or Assyrians is most peculiar. The mouth, nose, and chin are all brought together into a very small compass; and upon the lips is a sort of smirk, rather irresistible to the risibles of the beholder. The emotions are strange, indeed, on sitting in that long, silent gallery, surrounded by this great number of forms and visages, which represent human action and feeling some three or four thousand years ago, which for many centuries of that time have been entirely lost to the knowledge of man, and which have now so recently been unearthed and brought to these far-off shores, whose very existence was not dreamed of till long, long ages after these works were wrought. Involuntarily we ask, how much had these, our brothers, in common with us, the lookers-on of their achievements? And can it be possible that we, like them, are in our turn to become the mythical objects of curiosity, wonder, and speculation to future ages and races?

This collection forms only a part of the valuable Metropolitan Museum of Art, for which a large building is now in process of construction in Central Park. Di Cesnola is making farther important discoveries in Cyprus, the results of which will probably be added to those already on exhibition. Referring to Central Park, I am reminded of a notice I recently saw, that the "Ladies' Irving Monument Fund Association" design to erect a group of bronze statues in the Park, one being that of Washington Irving, another that of Joseph Jefferson as Rip Van Winkle, and the third of the group an ideal figure of a "Knickerbocker,"—a fitting combination, and a happy thought. A. H.

THE CARVERSVILLE CONVENTION.

MR. ABBOT:—

Will you allow me to inform the readers of THE INDEX that a convention has been called to meet at Carversville, Bucks County, Pennsylvania, during the Centennial period, for the purpose of discussing the whole subject of Coöperative Industry; and whether, with the present hard times as a motive, a plan of living cannot be devised that will better secure the great objects of human existence than the one so long in vogue? If, indeed, as is alleged, there is no cure but revolution for the present system of selfish competition, which makes the rich richer and the poor poorer, let us know it as the result of a process of reasoning, and gird up our loins for the inevitable struggle. But to those who have faith in God, faith in humanity, and faith in common sense, there must be a better way of living than the one which converts human society into a den of hungry wolves. Those who are invited to take part in this great discussion are not expected to indulge in mere fault-finding and denunciation of the present condition of things, but to suggest a practical and practicable method of reform.

As there is a call out for a Congress of Liberals to meet at Philadelphia in July, I send you this communication that the objects in view by the two Conventions respectively may not be confounded.

Carversville is reached from Philadelphia either by the North Pennsylvania Railroad to Doylestown, and thence over good roads, by stage, seven miles; or by the Pennsylvania Railroad, via Trenton, New Jersey, Belvidere Division, to Bull's Island, thence to Carversville, a distance of two miles, through a beautiful valley, by stage. B.

THE STORY is told of Dr. Jerome Walker, an accomplished physician, who had been writing a letter at the dictation of a sick soldier: "Ah! doctor," said the sick man, just as the letter was being closed, "wad yer plaze ask 'em to excuse the mistakes in spellin' and writin'." The companion story to the above is one which may have found its way among our own "Pebbles" of the leader of a religious meeting somewhere in the country last summer, who saw a proper looking stranger in the little company. Leaving the desk, he stepped down and in a whisper asked him his name and religious connections. Finding the answer satisfactory, he returned to his seat, and said: "Will Brother Dodge, of New York, offer some remarks?" This the city brother did, to the best of his ability, and modestly sat down; when the leader again appealed to him: "Will Brother Dodge, of New York, ask the Lord to bless his feeble remarks?"—Independent.

REV. J. M. FINOTTI, of Arlington, has obtained for the laying of the corner-stone of the new Roman Catholic Church in Arlington, some fragments of the walls of the Holy House of Nazareth, wherein our Lord dwelt with his blessed Virgin Mother and the patron of the Universal Church during his life, previous to the three years of apostolic life. There will also be particles of the holy sepulchre, and of the sacred cradle at Bethlehem.

A YOUNGSTER while warming his hands over the kitchen fire was remonstrated with by his father, who said: "Go 'way from the stove; the weather is not cold." The little fellow, looking up demurely at his stern parent, replied: "I ain't heatin' the weather, I am warmin' my hands."

Sanctuary of Superstition.

BELIEF IS ENOUGH.—Do you believe in Christ? If so, his righteousness is yours.—"Remembrance of Me": American Tract Society.

HAS A HEAVENLY NATURE.—Now fish, you all know, can't live out of water. Why? Because it is not their nature to. I cannot live in it. Why? Because it is not my nature. I cannot live in the world now. I cannot go everywhere in the world as I did before. I have a heavenly nature, and it keeps me out of it. I am a citizen of another world. Heaven is my home.—Dwight L. Moody, at Philadelphia, Jan. 2.

ONLY ONE CHURCH.—No Catholic, if he has regard for consistency, can say that it is a safe procedure for human beings, ransomed by the blood of Christ, to walk independently of the guide appointed for him by the founder of the Church. He cannot say that there is more than one path leading to eternal life, nor that the roads of unbelief, heresy, and schism do not lead in an opposite direction.—Catholic Advocate, Louisville, Ky.

THE LAMB.—Behold, then, the Lamb of God! Look to thy bruised and smitten Savior! Confess his name. Believe with all your heart on him. Accept him as your refuge and your trust; cling to him with a grasp which can never be unclasped! There you are safe. There you have peace! There you need fear no evil. In Christ we are SAFE; out of him we are in constant peril.—From a Tract of the Christian Publication Society, Boston.

OUTWITTED.—Here is a shield and buckler against the assaults of Satan. Luther records: "Once upon a time the devil came to me and said, 'Martin Luther, you are a great sinner, and you will be damned!' 'Stop! stop!' said I; 'one thing at a time. I am a great sinner, it is true, though you have no right to tell me of it. I confess it; what next? Therefore you will be damned. That is not good reasoning. It is true I am a great sinner; but it is written, 'Jesus Christ came to save sinners,' therefore I shall be saved. Now go your way.' So I cut the devil off with his own sword, and he went away mourning because he could not cast me down by calling me a sinner."—"The Faithful Saying": American Tract Society.

THE STRIKING DEVIL.—Little child, if you go to hell, there will be a devil at your side to strike you. He will go on striking you every minute forever and ever, without stopping. The first stroke will make your body as bad as the body of Job, covered from head to foot with sores and ulcers. The second stroke will make your body twice as bad as the body of Job. The third stroke will make your body three times as bad as the body of Job. The fourth stroke will make your body four times as bad as the body of Job. How, then, will your body be after the devil has been striking it every moment for a hundred millions of years without stopping?—"The Sight of Hell," by the Rev. Father Furness, C. S. S. R. [Printed permissu superiorum, and recommended to be used along with the Catechism in Sunday-schools. It is one of a series of "Books for Children and Young Persons."]]

RECONCILED BY BLOOD.—The word of reconciliation which the apostles preached as the foundation of all they taught, was that we are reconciled to God not by our own works, nor by our own righteousness, but wholly and solely by the blood of Christ.

Understand this well. To think you must be more contrite, more humble, more grieved, more sensible of the weight of sin, before you can be justified, is to lay your contrition, your grief, your humiliation for the foundation of your being justified, or at least for a part of the foundation. The foundation is not your contrition (even that is not your own), not your own righteousness, nothing of your own; nothing that is wrought in you by the Holy Ghost; but it is something without; you namely, the righteousness and the blood of Christ. For this is the word: "To him that believeth on God that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness!"—"Reconciled": American Tract Society.

THOMAS PAINE IN HELL.—In hell, every detestable evil, every abominable passion, will reign and triumph. They whose lives were the blackest, and whose dispositions the most horrid, will meet there. Nero and Herod and cruel persecutors; Alexander and bloody conquerors; the guilty crew of Sodom and Gomorrah; Paine and Voltaire, Hume and hardened infidels, . . . will compose the society of hell. Among all these there will not be one mild disposition, nor one circumstance to soften the rage of the infernal passions they feel within. There, alas! must they dwell, hateful and hating one another, ever tormenting, and ever tormented; with every hellish passion and every devilish disposition augmented by the madness of despair. . . . God will never wipe one tear from their eyes, or remove one pain from their hearts; but will pour upon them all the fierceness of his wrath. Jesus will never lead them to fountains of heavenly pleasure, nor for one moment manifest the smallest portion of that love which in full perfection he will manifest to his friends through one eternal day. . . . God calls on them no more, but has forgotten to be gracious. Jesus pities them no more, nor can his blood ever wash away one of their sins, though once it might have cleansed them from all.—"Persuasions to Early Piety": American Tract Society.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Farton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Scenes.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.50
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 4 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience and Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religious Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Poynting and Carpentier; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyall, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols. Illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P. Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.50
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	6.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel- ligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Hagebot.....	1.50
III. Woods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with Dissections on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. E.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Year's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1882 to 1884.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 4 vols. Per vol.....	1.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MIRVALLES (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	1.50
The Sanskrit Language.....	1.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith or Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Evidential Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defense.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	3.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	6.50
The Moon, her Motion, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	6.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 33 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	3.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	3.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYAGE (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Samterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.00
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.00
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Society and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.25
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the standpoint of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.

Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges $3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edges 6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

- THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade $3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-ham 1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald 1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

- THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas of Christianity. By George Reber. 12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-paid 2.00
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles Sotherton. Post-paid 1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DRINK PINE GROVE MINERAL SPRING WATER!

The best Alkaline Chalybeate found in twenty-eight years' practice of medicine, and diligent search for the best remedies for disease. It contains alkaline matter and iron in such proportions as to promote the circulation in the portal veins, regulate the secretions, remedy constipation, and give a good appetite. The iron reproduces the red globules in the blood, and invigorates the nervous system. No experienced physician and no well-informed person can deny the good effects of the ingredients.

For invalids, arrangements have been made with the proprietor of the New Hampshire House, and with several farmers near the Springs, for good and cheap board.

AGENCIES:

- WM. H. VICKERY, Apothecary, Dover, N.H.
Z. FOSTER CAMPBELL, Apothecary, Manchester, N.H.
SULLIVAN & LOTZ, Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
SCRIVENER & PARKER, 31 and 33 Court Square, Boston.

For Circulars, Agencies, and Information, address

Office Pine Grove Mineral Springs,
DOVER, N.H.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

- TRACTS.
I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.
V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)
RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. R. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE'S Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

157 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,
139 Eighth St., New York.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1876. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States. All of these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them, and everything connected with them, will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in The Sun.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by The Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of GRANT'S administration, and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this The Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.

The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon GRANT'S aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read The Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting, and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence, and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year, postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to Clubs, Agents, Postmasters, or anyone.

The Daily Sun, a large, four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55c. a month, or $6.50 a year. Sunday edition extra, $1.20 per year. We have no travelling agents.

Address THE SUN, New York City.

THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

805 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA,
March 1, 1876.

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance, having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 805 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC RHEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1876.

WHOLE No. 331.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

AN ITEM in the New York Sun says that "the sum of $121,000,000 has been spent in England since 1840 in building and restoring church edifices."

BISHOP HUNTINGTON (Episcopalian) thinks that the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools is "foredoomed by circumstances that are to be deplored."

SOME STATISTICS, published by the Tax Commissioners of New York City in obedience to a request of the State Legislature, show the value of church property exempted in that city from taxation. The Protestant Episcopal churches are valued at $10,700,000; the Methodist Episcopal at $2,911,500; the Presbyterian at $6,814,000; the Baptist at $2,432,000; the Reformed Dutch at $3,401,000; the Congregational at $417,000; the Jewish synagogues at $2,000,000; the Catholic at $6,999,000. These figures do not include schools, hospitals, cemeteries, etc. In addition, the Catholics have private charity schools valued at $2,478,000; private hospitals at $712,000; colleges at $948,000; asylums and reformatories at $1,248,000; and cemeteries at $155,000. Total of Catholic property, $12,538,000.

THESE ARE the honest, brave words of George William Curtis in Harper's Magazine: "Let us remember that Thomas Paine is the author of the inspiring paper that nerved the colonies to declare their independence. He put into forcible and resistless form the conviction and the wish which the people hardly dared to confess that they entertained. They had taken arms not to overthrow, but to maintain a government. If the logic of events had shown them that their hope of reconciliation was a dream, they were reluctant to acknowledge it. They were Englishmen still, and their hearts yearned for England. But Paine spoke the right word at the right moment. He dropped seed that sprouted the instant it touched the soil. In January Common Sense was published; in July independence was declared. That fact justified the title of the pamphlet. The common sense of the situation in January, 1776, was revolution, not reunion with Britain. Let us hope that the portrait of a man who saw this and said it for all America will not be wanting in the Centennial Gallery of 1876."

A FEW DAYS ago a young man called to see us who said he had made up his mind, though he could ill spare the money, to give twenty-five dollars either to the Centennial Congress of Liberals or to THE INDEX, just as we thought best. Being convinced of the immediate paramount necessity to the liberal cause of a great and successful convention at Philadelphia this summer, we advised the former course; and the noble-hearted radical paid his twenty-five dollars for the Congress on the spot. Another young man called a day or two later, to contribute five dollars to the same object. These were acts of self-sacrifice in each instance, and showed the generous spirit which is just as ready to spend and be spent for liberalism as for Orthodox illiberalism, the moment that liberalism begins to develop the consciousness of a practical work to do. The world knows earnestness when it sees it, and will respect radicals as much as fanatics, when they manifest the devotion and self-forgetfulness which give to fanaticism all its moral power. We feel new courage and hope, as we watch the unmistakable beginnings of a spirit destined to baptize the cause of liberalism in America with an imperishable glory.

THE NEW YORK State Superintendent of Public Instruction, in his late report to the Legislature, recommended a Constitutional guarantee of secular schools in that State: "Great anxiety exists at present among the people in regard to the schools. Although the danger may not be immediate, wisdom dictates that the evil be prevented before it has an opportunity to come. There are reports that propositions have been made, and in some cases accepted, that certain parochial schools not under the control of the State should be used by the trustees or boards of education of the districts in which they are located, on condition that the teachers should be appointed by those having control of such schools, or that the course of instruction be subject to their approval. The adoption of such a policy would be a step toward the destruction of our system of public instruction. I earnestly recommend that the Legislature take such steps as will securely imbed in the Constitution of the State our common schools, as will place them beyond the power of any man or set of men, party or sect, to interfere with their admirable working, or in any manner impair their usefulness or tend to their destruction. Let the Constitution be so amended as to make it obligatory that a free, public, unsectarian system shall be maintained in the State, thus making our school system a unity that will exist throughout all time."

IT IS almost amusing to see how shy the average politician and the average secular journal are of any political discussion which, however remotely, involves a reference to religion. Even the Nation, which deservedly stands much higher than the average secular press, seems unable to rise above the superficiality which marks most of the talking and writing on this class of subjects. It says in a late issue: "Mr. Blaine did, indeed, bring forward at the opening of Congress a Constitutional amendment directed against the Catholics, but the anti-Catholic excitement was, as every one knows now, a mere flurry; and all that Mr. Blaine means to do or can do with his amendment is, not to pass it, but to use it in the campaign to catch anti-Catholic votes." We do not all dissent from this view of Mr. Blaine or his motives; it is sufficiently evident that his "unsectarianism" is a sham, being simply Protestant as opposed to Catholic "sectarianism." But to intimate that the public school question was [or is] nothing more than an "anti-Catholic excitement," or a "mere flurry," is a proposition which shows how easy it is even for able minds to flounder about in the shallows of a very profound subject. The school question can never be settled without settling the true relation of religion to education, of the Church to the State, of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion to the fundamental principles of free popular government, and a host of kindred inquiries of the utmost moment. The country has stumbled, almost by accident, upon a system of public education which is now determinedly challenged and impugned from top to bottom, both by the Catholics and by many Protestants; and the issue raised will prove to be the longest-lived and most refractory that has yet afflicted the public peace. This generation will not live to see the end of it; and the Nation, instead of dismissing it in this forcible-feeble way, would prove its own sagacity much better by treating it with the consideration which its gravity demands. The school system will be in danger, and constantly increasing danger, until the American mind has mastered the politico-ethical philosophy which alone can permanently sustain it; and this is an issue which will remain vital when the "mere flurry" of the Presidential campaign is quite forgotten.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. F. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLAH, KAN.—S. B. M. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSMOLA, MO.—E. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BEHLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUSTIN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—F. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATKINTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—E. O. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 OLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Bible with Reference to Recent Archæological Discoveries.

TRANSLATED FROM THE "REVUE DES DEUX MONDES" BY KATE NEWELL DOGGETT.

BY JULES SOURY.

If, as was taught by Heraclitus of Ephesus, everything changes and is eternally undergoing transformation, the historical sciences must also be subject to the universal ebb and flow of things, and the truth of yesterday may become the error of to-morrow. It is especially in the sciences, whose object is almost inaccessible to our means of investigation, that we observe this kind of contradiction and perpetual oscillation. Comparative mythology is one of these difficult studies, in which we progress only by delicate approximations. The divine forms evoked by the savant crowd confuse each other, undulate vaguely as in a nebulous twilight, then vanish, and are lost in the abyss of time. Where is the Faust capable of recalling to light and restoring to life these graceful or terrible shades? This work demands not only great penetration, wide sympathies, exquisite perceptions of the most delicate shades of meaning, but also a sort of divination or intuition. A learned man, however eminent, rarely unites such lofty qualities; but one generation may realize the ideal that another has conceived. Our gratitude is none the less due to the wise ones who have guided us in this study. Others will come more powerful, perhaps, but not more sincere, more disinterested than these rare spirits.

It is in the religious system of Chaldea and Assyria, as we know it from the cuneiform texts and the monuments of the empires of the Tigris and the Euphrates, that we must seek the origin of the religions of Syria, Phœnicia, and Palestine. The primitive religion of the peoples of the Semitic race was polytheism. Like the ancient inhabitants of the valley of the Nile, like the fathers of our own race—the Aryans of the shores of the Oxus,—like all the human species of the Old and the New World, the sedentary or nomad tribes which, from the most remote antiquity, spread themselves in the countries included between Armenia, the Persian Gulf, and the Red Sea—Assyrians, Arabs, Canaanites, Phœnicians, Hebrews,—they at first adored the sun, the moon, and the planets, light and fire, the immense vault of the starry heavens, the mountains—those giants born of the earth,—the rivers, forests, and animals. While the Aryans of the country of the seven rivers, where the most ancient Vedic hymns were composed, were ceaselessly moved by the imposing spectacle of atmospheric changes—the combats of Indra with the dragon that held imprisoned the beneficent water of heaven, and by the thousand accidents of light and shadow which played in the clouds kindled by the fires of the rising or setting sun,—the Semites, from Aleppo to the Arabian Sea, from Egypt to the Persian Gulf, knew scarcely anything but a sky burning and cloudless, the savage solitude of vast, sandy plains, and the incomparable splendor of nights in which the moon, like a queen, seemed to dominate the army of the skies.

Hence the relative poverty of the Semitic mythology. Certainly there is something besides arid deserts in this part of Asia. Not to speak of the central plateau of Arabia, upon the banks of the Euphrates and in certain parts of Syria the soil, fertilized by the rains of winter, produces abundant harvests. At the foot of Lebanon there are delicious valleys in which the orange, the date, and the banana are loaded with flowers and fruit. In autumn and in spring Syria is a paradise; still it often suffers from drought, from "famine of water." Compared with the Indus and the Ganges, what are the Orontes, the Jordan, or the Adonis? Brooks with pebbly beds which, three-fourths of the year, one crosses dry-shod.

Like soil, like race. In these rocky and sandy plains the human being will be small, thin, dry, so temperate his head will be as empty as his stomach. The type of this race, the Bedawin, the nomad Arab, scarcely thinks; he knows nothing; his imagination is as arid as the desert. A swift horse, a long, straight lance, a fine camel, a beautiful woman, are the eternal theme of his poems. His sensations, always the same, create only sentiments and ideas of monotonous simplicity. His language is simple; simple its syntax, declension, conjugation; all its grammatical forms are equally poor. No abstract terms to express universal ideas. But have children general ideas? These naïve discourses in which the propositions are linked together and follow each other without other bond than the conjunction and, are, in fact, the language of a child. Such beings, whether in nomad or sedentary state, will never be great artists, still less philosophers or savants. Aristotle, Hippocrates, Ptolemy, all Greek science might pass over their horny brains without leaving deeper trace than the winter rains in the bed of their torrents.

But though neither artist, philosopher, nor savant, one is not the less a man, nor can one live in intimate relation with Nature without experiencing emotions more or less lively, without being penetrated with awe or admiration, without glorifying the destructive or conservative forces of the universe. Among all these forces, indisputably the most powerful is the sun, the fire of heaven, source of terrestrial fire, only and supreme cause of movement and of life upon this planet. There is no need of reasoning to comprehend that it is the life itself, the blood, as it were, of our celestial father that runs in the veins of our mother,—the earth. In the love season, when the luminous heaven surrounds and penetrates it, a new world springs forth from its fertile bosom. It is this life that thrills in the plains where the warm, humid air softly bends the herbs; this that rises in shrub and tree, that vocalizes the solitudes with the joyful cries of the birds; this that in the seas or running streams, on the mountains, in the forest, couples the proud male to the lascivious female, that palpitates in all bodies, loves with all beings; but all this terrestrial life, all this warmth, all this light are only emanations from the sun. We are, says Tyndall, not only in a practical but in a purely mechanical sense, children of the sun. What the science of our days has proven the ancient man instinctively comprehended.

Far, very far off in the past, before metaphysics existed, men adored fire and worshipped the sun. At the foundation of the Semitic, as at the foundation of the Indo-European religions, the principal myths are solar myths. Before trying to understand, they contemplated, they described, they sang the universe in the hymns and cosmogonies, parts of which have come down to us. The sun, moon, and planets, the mountains, rivers, and plants, the storm, wind, thunder, fire,—all the forces of Nature were divinized, adored, above all feared, and became for man, as still for some of the lower races of men, creatures endowed with life, feeling, intelligence. That which is born develops itself and reaches maturity only to decrease and die; the earth and its productions, for instance, were regarded as dependent upon that which subsists eternally, changeless, never growing old, like the sky and the stars. They found in Nature an active cause and a passive one, and divinity, following human analogy, was conceived as male and female; as among the Semites, Baal, and Baalath, the active force which creates, preserves, and destroys; the passive which conceives, engenders, and brings forth. The symbol of the creative power of Nature was universally represented in the sanctuaries and upon the religious monuments by the organs of generation. The fundamental unity of the two forces of the divinity often caused the attributes of the male to pass to the female divinity, and reciprocally, thence the hermaphrodite or androgynous divinities of Syria and Phœnicia. Sometimes even, as in the temple of Hierapolis, a third being symbolized the unity of the two.

I.

It is from the north of Assyria, from the country of the Kurds, that the tribe of nomad Semites came which, doubtless forced by some invasion, passed the Euphrates, and directed their course from north-east to south-west towards the land of Canaan. The Ammonites, the Moabites, the Edomites had preceded those who were to be called Beni-Heber, or Hebrews. Going forth from Ur, the great city of the Chaldeans situated near the confluence of the Tigris and the Euphrates, they were led at first by Terah to the city of Haran, afterwards by Abraham, son of Terah, beyond the river, across Syria, even to the land of Canaan. The inhabitants of this country were Semites by the same title as the tribes which came from beyond the Euphrates. The near relationship of the Chaldeans and these nomads is proven by the identity of language and religion. We do not learn anywhere in the Bible that these new-comers had any difficulty in making themselves understood by the old inhabitants, and all the names of cities or persons of this nation with which we are acquainted are purely Semitic. It is besides demonstrated that the Canaanite element dominates in the biblical Hebrew; Isalah himself calls Hebrew the language of Canaan. All these peoples—Ammonites, Hittites, Hivites,—whom the Greeks called Phœnicians, had then reached a high degree of civilization. Ages before they had conquered or absorbed the aborigines, the Nephelims, the Emims, the Rephaim, giants and monsters which recall the Anasikas and Rakshasas against which the Aryans had to struggle in Hindustan. Caravans of merchants traversed the country to sell in Egypt turpentine, frankincense, myrrh, etc. The money in use among them was stamped. In Genesis we read of vessels and ports. In cities like Sodom and Gomorrah, which seem to have made upon the naïve Bedawin the same impression as Babylon, we find certain refinements of manners not customary among barbarians. The Canaanites had long outgrown the gross fetishism which we find in the family of Abraham. Rachel steals the idols of her father. "Why hast thou robbed me of my gods?" says Laban to Jacob. Rachel, having concealed them in the "camel's furniture," seated herself upon them, and, when her father came to her tent, she found a pretext for preventing search.

Says the prebendary of Salisbury, "The ready dexterity and presence of mind with which she concealed her theft show her an apt pupil in her father's school of untruth." In another passage of Genesis we read that Jacob buries under an oak near Sichem the idols, talismans, and amulets of the people of his house. Many times the Bible shows us the descendants of Abraham as idolaters and polytheists. In the book of Joshua, Terah, the father of Abraham, is represented as pagan and polytheist, as well as their ancestors who, from ancient times, had dwelt beyond the river,—that is, the Euphrates.

Thus, even if the Bible did not expressly tell us so, we should find at almost every page of the old books of Israel and of the prophets of the eighth century, facts which testify to the idolatrous fetishism and polytheism of the Semites. In the first place we may declare it a self-evident truth that there could not exist fundamental differences in the religious conceptions of families, of peoples inhabiting the same countries, speaking the same language, and, according to their own avowal, descending genealogically one from the other. But the polytheism of the Assyrians, the Babylonians, the Syrians, the Phœnicians, and the pre-Islamic Arabs is an incontestable fact. Not less incontestable is the polytheism of the Terahites; that is, the peoples which, like the Israelites, descended from Terah,—the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Ishmaelites. All these tribes which came from Chaldea and Assyria worshipped the stars and fire; they found in Palestine the worship of the same gods. The names, even, of some of these divinities were identical, which proves their original kinship. Nomina, numina, says the axiom which in the school of Kuhn has become the key of comparative mythology.

In Genesis it is related that Abraham, the mythical father of the Hebrews, met in the land of Canaan Melchizedek, king of Salem, who was priest, or cohen, of El-Eilon, father of heaven and earth. This god El, who continued to be the God of the children of Israel to the time of the exodus from Egypt, and who almost always appears accompanied by an attribute, as El-Eilon, El-Schaddai, El-Kanna, El-Hai, seems to have been common to all the families of the Semitic race. In the Greek and Latin inscriptions of Syria, lately published by Mr. Waddington, we find mention of monuments of the worship of Kronos, as the Greeks called El. We find El again in the Phœnician colonies at Carthage. As to the characteristic of universality, El is in the Semitic pantheon what Djans is in the Indo-European. The Assyrian idea of God is given by the word Ilon, and the ideographic character of this notion had in the beginning the form of a star. It was the highest divinity of the Babylonians, as is indicated by the name of the great city of which El was the tutelary divinity,—Bab-El or Bab-Ilon, the door of El. In Assyria he received the appellation, exclusively national, of Ashur. The inscriptions designate him as "king or chief of the gods, supreme lord, father of the gods." Some rare monuments belonging to Assyria give to Ilon, or Ashur, a wife, the counterpart of himself, his passive form. Whether this god primitively designated the starry heavens or light, a sidereal signification has always been attributed to him; he has been likened to the planet Saturn; Berosus calls him Kronos; and according to Sanchoiathon, Kronos was called El by the Phœnicians.

The supreme God of the children of Israel was also of the Canaanites. We see, too, that the Terahites accepted as sacred certain places venerated by the inhabitants of the country, trees, mountains, springs of water, and Beths-El, or houses of El. These primitive sanctuaries were huge blocks set up in all places, especially upon the hills, in testimony of some oath, or in memory of some important event. These stones were consecrated with oil, wine, or the blood of sacrifices. Later the origin of these megalithic monuments was attached to the legends of the patriarchs, and altars and temples were erected upon their sites. These are the bamoth, or "high places," so often spoken of in the Bible; mentioned also upon the stela of Measa as in the inscription of Umm el awbid, etc., and where the offering of sacrifices was continued long after the centralization of the worship at Jerusalem.

All these nomad tribes that, with their flocks, poured into the land of Canaan were a scourge to its Inhabitants. Like the Bedawin of our days, they did not enter the cities, but pitched their tents in the fields, pillaged the country, and devoured everything, even to the last spire of grass. More than one city shared the fate of Sichem, where they slew the men, stole everything there was in the houses, and led away captive the women and the flocks. The soil of Palestine seems not to have sufficed for the maintenance of all these hordes, for we read that the last comers, the children of Israel, several times went down into Egypt to escape famine, as, a little while ago, ten or twelve thousand Arabs from the provinces of Bengazi and Tripoli, driven by hunger, left the country and crossed the desert to Egypt.

During the thirteenth dynasty the Semitic tribes of the North had begun to invade Lower Egypt. Nomads like Abraham and the sons of Jacob, whose whole possessions consisted of flocks, were, in the eyes of the Egyptians, "shepherd-kings,"—Hyksos, like the other hordes of Arabia, Syria, and the land of Canaan. The relationship of the Hyksos and the Terahites is no longer a matter of doubt. We know that under the eighteenth dynasty the ancient rulers of the country gradually regained the ascendancy, and the shepherds were obliged to abandon Avaris (Tanis) and leave Egypt. The Hebrews remained. They had established themselves to the north-east of Egypt in the land of Goshen, which is upon the route to Canaan. Situated between the Red Sea and the Nile, this country was so rich in pasturage it was called the best part of the land. The Semites, frightfully fruitful, increased and multiplied so rapidly that the Pharaohs of those days, "who knew not Joseph," did not witness the prosperity of these shepherds without disquietude. The Egyptians, who held them in horror, and who, according to Manetho, would have expelled them as impure, oppressed them, loaded them with grievous burdens. Not to speak of the paintings of several Egyptian tombs in which we see the Semites making bricks and building walls under the eye of Egyptian overseers armed with long whips, a hieroglyphic inscription of the reign of Rhamses, mentions the Aberiou, or Hebrews, among the people employed in public works. No human creature was less fitted for this kind of labor than a child of Israel. The Hebrews went out of Egypt and abandoned the land of Goshen about 1820. According to Kuenen, who agrees with Lepsius, Bengsch, Bunsen, and Chabas, the emigration took place in the reign of Amenophthis, successor of Rhamses II. The leader of the emigration bore an Egyptian name, and, according to all the historians, he had been instructed in all the learning of the Egyptians. Manetho, who, in agreement with the Bible, designates Moses as the political and religious chief of the children of Israel, makes of the future legislator of the Hebrews a priest of Heliopolis. Nothing more is known, and probably never will be, of Moses. At least five or six centuries separate his epoch from that in which the oldest documents that speak of him were written. The grand and living image which we admire in Exodus and the book of Numbers has no historic feature. We cannot prove that a single law of the Decalogue goes back to Moses; we can prove, on the contrary, that such origin is inadmissible, for the greater number of those laws, especially with the additions that accompany the Ten Commandments in the somewhat divergent versions of Exodus and Deuteronomy.

When the children of Israel returned to the land of Canaan they were idolaters and polytheists as when they left it. Their principal divinity was no longer El, but Jah, whom the people worshipped under the form of a bull of molten metal. No phenomenon is more common in the history of religions than the appearance of new gods which dethrone the old. Thus, among the Hindus and the Greeks, Varounas fades gradually before Indra, Ouranos before Zeus. But if the old divinities no longer govern, they always reign. The god El, whose name we find everywhere in the Bible, especially in the poetic books, did not disappear before Jah, nor before the other gods, or Elohim of the Semitic pantheon; but he is no longer the national god, the tutelary divinity of the confederate tribes of Israel. Jah is henceforth the god of Israel, as Chemosh (Kamôs) was the god of the Moabites, Molech of the Ammonites, Ortol—light or fire of El—of the Edomites and Ishmaelites.

We are struck with the singularly sombre and terrible character of these divinities. All these gods are gods of fire, who feed upon fat and blood, and devour human victims. Do not let us forget that these shepherd-tribes were still half-savage. Many centuries even after the epoch at which we have arrived, we read in the legislation of the Hebrews of the repression of strange customs and depraved tastes found only among the grossest peoples. They are forbidden to tattoo themselves, to feed upon insects, reptiles, etc., etc. The gods of the Terahites were naturally as sanguinary as their worshippers. For a long time they maintained a sinister and sensual character which distinguished them from the Canaanite divinities. Not, I repeat, that these different Semitic families adored divinities essentially different. Aside from local worship, which we find among all peoples, their gods were the sun, moon, and stars, in turn considered as the cause of production and destruction in the world. But while some celebrated with joy and orgies the god of life and light, Baal and his Baalath, the king and queen of heaven, others were led to propitiate, by bloody sacrifices and ceremonies of frantic cruelty, the implacable fury of the flaming star, the insatiable Molech, who every year devoured his children. In fact it was to the sun of Spring and the sun of Summer that worship was rendered. Whether the god was called El, Bel, Baal, Adonis, Tammuz, Hadad, Rimmon or Molech, Jah, Chemosh, Milcom, it was always the sun. So, whether the goddess were called Baalath, Berketo, Ashera, or Astarte, she is always a telluric or celetial divinity, the earth or the moon. We may add that often the sun and the moon were replaced by the planets. From the most remote antiquity the sun considered as Molech has been confounded with the planet Saturn. Adar, originally a solar god, a god of fire, became later the god of the planet Saturn.

(The name of the god Kevan, worshipped by the Israelites in the desert, Amos v., 27, has just been read in the Assyrian form upon a tablet which by this word explains the second part of the name of the planet Saturn in Accadian, Lubat-Sakus.)

Considered as Baal, the sun has been identified with the great star of fortune Jupiter; and Venus, as the little star of fortune, was associated with him.

It is now proven that at the time of the exodus from Egypt, in the desert, and even in the time of the Judges, light and fire were, among the Israelites, not symbols of the divinity, but the divinity itself. Jah, god of light and fire, is no other than the sun considered as Molech. As Molech, he is represented under the form of a bull of metal, brass, iron, or gold. The golden calf worshipped in the desert is no more an Egyptian idol than were the two bulls of the same metal worshipped in the time of Jeroboam in the sanctuaries of Dan and of Bethel. Jah is not an Egyptian god, as many have erroneously believed. The time has passed in which we can pretend to account for the religious or the philosophic systems of diverse peoples by successive and universal borrowings. That was little other than a facile means of ascending to a pretended primitive revelation. A contrary doctrine has gained the day in science. How can we imagine that hordes like the children of Israel understood anything of the civilization of the Egyptians, and went so far as to borrow their religious ideas? A sojourn of several centuries in a country, four hundred years and more, must have modified the habits of a people, and it is certain both Phoenicians and Hebrews borrowed much from Egypt; but these loans were all external, and had reference only to certain material details of civilization, of worship, and of sacerdotal regulations, as the holy ark, the breastplate of the high-priest, the linen ephod, and other parts of the costume of the priests, the sacred utensils of the sacrifice, etc. So the Hebrews borrowed from Assyria the winged bulls with human head which we find at the gates of all the palaces, the cherubim which guarded the entrance to the terrestrial paradise, the ark of the covenant, and the Holy of Holies of the temple of Solomon, and which served as a steed to Jehovah. So far as Egypt is concerned, it is probable these loans were in part posterior to the exodus from the country.

These shepherds encamped upon the old land of the Pharaohs might have remained there a thousand years without making the least progress. They saw Egypt only from without. More numerous, they might have crushed the civilization of the peoples of the Nile valley, but they would never have understood it. They remained as much strangers to all higher culture as the Bedawin of our days, who, only a few leagues from Damascus or Bagdad, preserve their patriarchal customs.

Nor did the other nomad Semites who had invaded Egypt adopt the indigenous religion. But M. de Rougé has proven the existence of a religion common, in the beginning, to some of the peoples of the Delta and of Syria. He admits a primitive kinship between the Mishraites and the Canaanites. The god Set, or Sutech, of the Egyptian monuments, before becoming the sombre Typhon, the adversary of Osiris, was the national god of the shepherds; the Semitic name of Set was Schad. Thus we find in Egypt in very remote times the Schaddai, or Almighty, of the Hebrews. That also, says François Lenormant, was one of the appellations of the Syro-Phoenician mythology, whose origin has been proven in the religions of Chaldea and Assyria.

(The name Asit, or Asid, that we read in the oldest epigraphic monument of Assyria, nineteenth century before the Christian era, sometimes given to Ashur with a prosthetic a, which does not prevent recognition of the root, is the same as the Hebrew Schaddai. But Ashur is the national Assyrian form of the supreme god Ilu, El.)

Jah is not an Egyptian god, proven irrefutably by the fact that the name of this divinity is Chaldean. The mysterious tetragrammaton, the ineffable word, whose letters bear in the Bible the vocalization of the word Adonai, presents evidently the root hahav, Chaldean form, dialectic variety of a Hebrew verb which signifies to breathe, to live, to be. The name of this divinity, generally pronounced Jehovah, must originally have been Yahaveh. This form was later contracted into Jâhon and Jâh. As to the significance of the name, philologists have long recognized in Jah the god of existence, he who has and who gives life.

The Aramean name of the god Jehovah proves both his great antiquity and his Chaldeo-Assyrian origin. Every one knows that the worship of fire and light come from the Iranian plateau of Asia. When the Terahites abandoned Chaldea and passed the Euphrates, they worshipped, among others, the god Jehovah; they worshipped him at the time of their first sojourn in the land of Canaan; they worshipped him in Egypt; and it was doubtless the ark of this god they carried into the desert. If originally he was not so popular as the other divinities of Israel, if ages were necessary for him to become the national divinity of this people, and still other ages to be considered as the only god of the universe, there is nothing in this which should surprise us. Apparently the worship of Jehovah belongs especially to the aristocracy of the Terahite tribes. Max Müller shows us that religions at first have belonged to families and to extremely restricted societies of men.

Jehovah belonged in a special manner to the Ben-Israel. If we may believe the Bible itself, Balak, son of Zippor, King of Moab, threatened by an invasion of the children of Israel, sent elders of Moab and of Midian to the shores of the Euphrates to a famous seer, Balaam, son of Beor, that he might curse the invaders. But this seer of Mesopotamia cursed and blessed in the name of Jehovah. We may note in passing that Balaam at the same time worships Baal, sets up altars, and immolates to him calves and rams. Movers and others have proven that Jehovah designates the supreme god among several Semitic peoples. This name is found in its contracted form in a great number of Canaanite or Phœnician proper names. Greek writers, Diodorus Siculus for instance, mention Jaon or Jao. The most curious text we can recall here is perhaps that of the oracle of Apollo at Claros, mentioned by Macrobius, which, as Lobeck and Movers have demonstrated, is not the apocryphal work of a Gnostic Christian. According to this oracle Jehovah is the greatest of all the gods, the supreme divinity, the solar god regarded under four faces which are the four seasons of the year. He is Hades in winter, Zeus in spring, the sun in summer, and Jao in autumn. The epithet of mild and effeminate that is here given to Jao shows clearly that Adonis is meant whose central worship was at Byblos in Lebanon, and whom Sanchoniathon calls the Most High, Elion, as the god of Melchizedek. So in Phœnicia, Jao is the source of life that animates all Nature. Jao is the sun.

In all the books of the Pentateuch except Deuteronomy, Jehovah is not the only god of the Hebrews; he is simply more powerful than all the other gods. Jehovah is El-Elohim, the god of gods, like Zeus or Indra. This polytheism breaks out everywhere in the old books of Israel. Thus the messengers of Jephthah say to the king of the Ammonites, "Dost thou not possess the country that Chemosh thy god has given thee as a heritage? So we possess the land of all those whom Jehovah our god has driven out before us." It is remarked very properly that all which is read upon the stela recently discovered, which Mesa the King of Moab had set up to his god Chemosh, might have been found upon a monument of the same kind, upon an ebenezer set up by a king of Judah or of Israel to his god Jehovah. Chemosh, angry with his people, had delivered them into the hands of their enemies; he became favorable to them again, and crushed the adversaries of the King of Moab. Jehovah, whose name is found upon this pillar, speaks and acts no otherwise in the books of his people.

The name of the divinity that recurs at almost every verse of the Bible, Elohim, is a plural. "Plural of majesty, plural of excellence," it is said. So be it. It is true that, wherever it was possible, the last writers of the sacred books have put in the singular words that at first were in the plural; but they have not been able so perfectly to efface all trace of polytheism that we do not find striking proofs of it in certain forms of speech which have survived the destruction of the ancient beliefs of Israel. The popular phraseology, the surest and most authentic monument of the ideas of a people, did not always lend itself to the pious scruples of the scribes. (Gen. x., 13; xxxv., 7. Exod. xxxii., 4, 8. Deut. v., 23. Jos. xiv., 10. I. Sam. xlvii., 26, 36. II. Sam. vii., 23. I. Kings xix., 2. Ps. lviii., 11. Jer. x., 10; xlii., 36.)

In certain parallel passages the oldest version makes the verb agree with Elohim, while the more modern puts it in the singular. They did still more. In certain passages of which we have a double recension, we see that everywhere the word Jehovah has been substituted for the word Elohim. (Psalms xiv. and lili.) In the books of the prophets the name Jehovah is the usual expression to designate the divinity. The word Elohim is very rare in this sense, and is seldom employed except in certain formulas or modes of speech consecrated by usage. On the contrary the nearer we ascend to the times of the oldest monuments of Hebrew literature, the more frequent we find the use of the word Elohim. Leviticus, and Numbers (except from xli.-xxiv.) are all Jehovahist, while in Exodus the Elohist and Jehovahist documents are of almost equal extent; in Genesis the first predominates. In our opinion Elohim is the plural of Eloah, and implies several Eloah. Elohim is the evident, undeniable proof of the primitive polytheism of the children of Israel.

The history of the religion of the Hebrews attests that among this people, also, the religious idea was born of the sentiment of terror. The fear of the Lord is the foundation of all the religion of Israel. The passages one might cite are innumerable. Jacob swears by the "terror" of his father Isaac. Jehovah, like Indra and Zeus, manifests himself in the forces of Nature and in atmospheric phenomena. The wind is his breath; his voice is the thunder that makes the desert tremble and breaks in pieces the cedars of Lebanon. He causes the snow and the hail to fall, he covers the ground with hoar-frost, he produces the ice and the cold. It is he who stirs up the sea when the waves thereof arise. But it is, above all, by fire that Jehovah reveals himself to his worshippers. The tempest, lightnings, and thunder announce his coming upon Horeb and upon Sinai, where he appeared in the flame, in the midst of a burning bush that the fire did not consume. We see him descend, the darkness under his feet, borne upon the wings of a cherub. Smoke issues from his nostrils, and a devouring fire goes out of his mouth. From the heavens Jehovah thunders, and Elion, the Most High of the Phœnicians, Carthaginians, etc., makes his voice heard. He shoots forth his arrows and disperses his enemies; he makes his lightnings to shine and devours them. In the desert Jehovah marched before the children of Israel in a pillar of cloud by day, in a pillar of fire by night. He appeared to Abraham in the midst of the night-adows as a smoking oven. To show that he was well-pleased with a sacrifice, he darted forth in flames between the morsels of the victims spread out upon the altar. He reveals himself thus to Abraham, to Gideon, to Elias. Let us remember that among the Hebrews, as among the Persians, fire is pure; that the everlasting fire was to be maintained upon the altar by a priest; that the same word designates both the fire and the sacrifice. Of the victims offered, bulls, rams, sheep, goats, birds, Jehovah reserves to himself the fat, of which he finds the odor agreeable when it rises to heaven as a sweet savor. All the fat belongs to Jehovah, we read in Leviticus. (Leviticus iii., 16.) He trembles with joy at the idea of a slaughter, a massacre, a butchery of men and beasts. He streams with blood and fat. The sword of Jehovah is drunk, says Isaiah; it drops blood; it is covered with fat, with the blood of lambs and of he-goats, with the fat of the reins of rams.

Naturally the young of man belongs to Jehovah as well as the young of beasts and the fruit of the tree. All the gods of the Semites, El-Schaddai, Adonis, Baal, Molech, Jehovah, Chemosh, are conceived as monarchs of the Orient. They have absolute rights over everything that is born or dies in their empire. Man acknowledges himself a vassal; he worships "the master," and brings to his lord the first fruits of his flock, of his field, of his family. So far as originally identical with Molech, Jehovah claimed all the first-born. "Sacrifice to me every one that openeth the womb, all the first-born among the children of Israel, the first-born of man, and the first-born of beasts, for all that is mine." Human sacrifices have without doubt existed among all peoples, but they held an exceptionally high place in the Semitic religions; it was long before they disappeared from them. Everywhere, indeed, where these religions have penetrated, even among other races, we find traces of Molech worship. In all the sanctuaries of the Phœnician colonies established upon the shores or in the islands of the Mediterranean, at Carthage, in Sicily, at Marseilles, at Rhodes, at Salamis, in Crete, there were bulls of metal or brazen statues of the god. At certain fixed epochs, in certain expiatory ceremonies, or when they wished to avert some scourge, they threw into the sides of the bull or upon the arms of the statue, heated to a white heat, men and children.

Nothing is better established than the existence of such sacrifices among the Hebrews in honor of Jehovah, and that down to the time of Josiah, perhaps even to that of the return from the captivity of Babylon. The epoch of the patriarchs offers us, in Genesis xlii., a notable example. During their sojourn in Egypt the Beni-Israel continued to offer to God their first-born (Ezek. xi., 26.) Thus the Israelites were, in the eyes of the Egyptians, worshippers of the evil principle, of Typhon, murderer of Osiris. In the time of the Judges we have the history of Jephthah and his daughter, of Samuel, and of Agag. David appeases the anger of Jehovah by putting to death seven sons and grandsons of Saul; he casts into the furnace prisoners of war. At Gilgal, a celebrated sanctuary, oxen and men were sacrificed to the molten bulls of Jehovah. A passage in Micah shows that an expiatory virtue attached to the sacrifice of the first-born. "Shall I offer my first-born to atone for my crime, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?" Throughout the duration of the monarchy these sacrifices were made in the kingdoms of Israel and of Judah, particularly in the valley of Hinnom near Jerusalem, to the south of Mount Sion. There was the famous Tophet, a sort of pyre, or sacred hearth, kept up by the priests. Here are some expressions of Isaiah which have not received all the attention they merit, for they seem to leave no doubt of the nature of Tophet: "Yes, since yesterday (long time) Tophet is prepared, it is prepared for Molech, it is deep and wide. Its pyre has fire and wood in abundance. The breath of Jehovah burns like a torrent of sulphur." Is. xxx., 33. Upon this smoking altar the Hebrews threw their first-born. Jehovah, the flame of the sacrifice, devoured these offerings. Numerous passages in the Bible show that the children were not merely passed through the fire, but given as food to the flames.

Later, after the captivity of Babylon, when monotheism had triumphed, they softened certain expressions which would have scandalized the pious Jews assembled in the synagogues upon the Sabbath day to hear the reading of the holy books. We have proof that the Biblical texts have undergone modifications of this kind in parallel passages like II. Chron. xxviii., 1-4; II. Kings xvi., 3. In one it is said the king of Judah, Achaz, burnt his sons in the fire; in the other he only passed them through the fire. The divine legends at need inspired in people and in kings these kinds of sacrifice.

Eusebius has preserved a fragment of the history of Phœnicia by Philo of Byblos, in which Kronos, whom the Phœnicians called El, immolated his only son to avert the perils of war that threatened the countries of which he was king. It is that which Mesa, king of Moab, also did, who, under the same circumstances, sacrificed to Chemosh his own first-born; for all the forms of Molech, as the Milcom of the Ammonites and the Chemosh of the Moabites, to whom Solomon built temples upon the hills of Jerusalem, or the Adramelech (II. Kings xvii., 31) and the Anammelech of the colonies of captive Chaldeans and Sussians whom Sennacherib had transported to Samaria; all these local forms of Molech had, like Jehovah, their devouring pyres and their valleys of Ben-Hinnom.

What is the consecration of the first-born to Jehovah? What is circumcision but a transformation of these sacrifices brought about inevitably by the softening of manners? Circumcision which, like the sacrifice, took place the eighth day after birth, was also a bloody rite whose object was to appease the divinity. The life of the first-born was redeemed by an indemnity of five shekels of silver for a male, and three shekels of silver for a female, which were paid to the priests.

II.

Besides Jehovah and the other forms of the Semitic Molech, the god who had the greatest number of altars and temples in Palestine was indisputably Baal. During the period of the Judges and of Samuel, almost two centuries, the worshippers of Jehovah associated the worship of Baal and of Ashera with that of the national god. If we see the name of Jehovah in the proper names of this time as Jom, Jothan, Jonathan, etc., we find that of Baal in other proper names of the same epoch. Gideon, a judge of Israel, calls himself Jerubbaal; Saul, the anointed of Jehovah, gives to one of his sons the name of Ebaal; and Jonathan, and the son of Jonathan in turn, are named Meribbaal. Under idolatrous and openly polytheistic kings, like David and Solomon, especially under their successors, the worship of Baal and Ashera was without any doubt the most popular in the two kingdoms of the north and the south. Under the reign of Ahab, the famous prophet, or nabi, of Jehovah, Elijah alone slays four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, and four hundred of Ashera. Jezebel and Athaliah, so ill-used by the Jehovahist writers of the books of the Kings and the Chronicles, loved to surround themselves with priests and priestesses of these cheerful and noisily sensuous divinities. The symbols and worship of Baal and Ashera were often introduced into the worship of the temple of Jehovah at Jerusalem. To a pietistic king like Hezekiah, who destroyed the "high places," broke the pillars of Baal, tore up, cut, or burned the symbols of Ashera, succeeded kings less intolerant, better politicians, like Manasseh and Amon, who, not to shock the beliefs of the majority, rebuilt the "high places," replaced Ashera in the temple at Jerusalem, and reestablished the worship of Baal. It was in vain that Josiah, the blind instrument of the sacerdotal coup d'état of Hilkiah, overturned all that Manasseh had set up. This Hebrew Don Quixote, whose brain was turned by the dark, mysterious discourses of his high priest, was impolitic enough to provoke Necho II., Pharaoh of Egypt. The man who slew the priests of Baal even in the cities of Samaria failed to be protected by his god Jehovah, for he was left among the dead in the valley of Megiddo.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

AN OPEN LETTER TO O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

DEAR SIR:—

I have looked upon you always as one of the broadest-minded and most comprehensive among our liberal thinkers and writers. Your views and opinions upon all subjects discussed by radicals I ever have awaited with happy anticipations, confident that you would indicate at least the true direction for all really catholic minds to take. I certainly never have expected from you the least word that should even seem to discourage any one of us from taking the most independent position, and pursuing the most independent line of action, that our individual judgments might dictate. However insistent and reiterative others might be upon any special idea, measure, or method; whatever near approach to dogmatism any other radical might make, in urging any to him favorite doctrine or scheme,—you of all men I have expected would avoid anything of this; would rather invite and encourage, first and last, to the freest thinking and acting, even though this should lead to divisions and diversions in our ranks; for I believed you wise enough with radical wisdom to value freedom and independence above any mere party expediency or party efficiency. In all my association with you on the staff of INDEX writers, I do not recall a single instance wherein you gave voice to any narrow counsel or politic appeal; wherein you uttered any cry that rallied radicals to close-knit, serried organization, or that had a strenuous sound to sweep them into phalanxes to be hurled against a particular enemy. On the contrary, the whole impression left upon me from your published utterances is that you are more of a philosopher than a reformer, more of a thinker than an organizer; and that your individual tastes and habits of mind commit you rather to private and personal methods of finding and furthering truth, than to any specific public, political, or party action.

Having this opinion of your general spirit, purpose, and aim, I confess to no little surprise in reading your editorial contribution in THE INDEX of March 30, entitled, "Concentrate." It reads, permit me to say, like something wholly foreign to your pen; and were not your ever welcome initials appended to it, you are the last writer to whom I should refer it. That I may the more effectively indicate my own dissent from the sentiments therein expressed, allow me to quote a few of its pregnant sentences:—

"The ineffectiveness so much complained of by liberals, and so justly too, is due in considerable measure to their diffusiveness. They scatter their force: worse than that, they divide their force, and set detachments against one another; they are jealous, factious, partisan. They support, or rather try to support, try desperately and vainly to support, too many papers; they undertake too many incidental projects; they stickle over too many points of purely speculative interest; they indulge in too many private crochets. The secret of combination is the willingness to concede some things for the sake of a few things of essential concern. . . .

"There are two interests of vital moment to all liberals of whatever school; the release of the civil powers from ecclesiastical influence, and the overthrow of authority in the realm of mind,—the complete separation of Church and State, and the complete enfranchisement of the intellect. These two things all liberals who deserve or claim the name have at heart sincerely. These two things are of prime consequence to them all as elementary conditions of their success in other directions. . . . There is money enough, and mind enough, and earnestness enough to make the Liberal League triumphant in their work of secularizing the government, and to beget modesty in the Catholics on the one side and the Protestants on the other. . . .

"If the organs of liberalism in different parts of the country would lay their emphasis, for six, or even for three, months on two or three primary ideas, nothing more would be required. . . .

"THE INDEX seems to be doing its part to infuse a working spirit into the liberal host. That its efforts should not be seconded would be indeed a misfortune."

In stating my objections to the foregoing remarks, I will concentrate all my minor points in one chief indictment. It is this: that in the whole article in question you speak of the radicals in this country as though they formed, or should form, some conscious party in the State, or sect in the Church, of America; and as though their deliberate purpose was, or should be, to overthrow some other party or sect.

Now my conception of the radical uprising is something quite different from this, and I had previously supposed that yours was. According to my idea, radicalism was not born at all as a new party or a new sect; it was not born with any party or sectarian mission whatsoever. It was born out of parties and out of sects, and its destiny was to grow away from both, and to be neither. The very thing that you complain of in it—namely, its tendency to "diffusiveness"—is in my eyes its very glory and attractiveness. To this end was it born, and for this cause came it into the world,—to be "diffusive." The very instant that radicalism shall begin to "concentrate," to organize, to form itself into leagues and combinations offensive and defensive; to say, with imperative self-consciousness, "Go to now, I will do so and so, I will oppose this, I will destroy that,"—in that same instant it will begin to stiffen, to harden, to fossilize, and to become itself an occasion for a new protest and a new departure. I believe you to be too careful and wise a student of history not to foresee that this would be the inevitable effect of any determinate organization of the radical elements in this country.

No! the very hope of radicalism, that shines as a nimbus on its brow to-day, is that it shall not "concentrate," that it shall not organize, that it shall not go up and down the country "leaguely" its forces together in wilful determination,—putting itself under distinguished leadership, lifting up banners with mottoes, uttering slogans and rallying cries. There is not inherent virtue enough in any possible party under heaven, that would long withhold it from becoming tyrannical and corrupt so soon as it should become fairly established and self-conscious. I say it with all conceivable respect and good feeling for those who hold a different view—nevertheless, I say it because I honestly believe it,—that those who advocate the "concentration" and "organization" of radicalism, the gathering together its individual elements and driving them against some objective point, are its most mistaken and unwise friends; and in the end, if that were possible, they would kill it, and cause it to die as disgraceful a death as ever attended any party that existed. The "ineffectiveness" of radicalism, of which you now complain, would surely begin when it was organized; it will not begin before. At present it is effective beyond calculation; it is effective as a thought, as an idea, as a spirit. By virtue of its very "diffusiveness" it prevails. When any man, or any set of men, wilfully try to spread it, it will stop spreading. How was it with Unitarianism? Those of us who came out of that ought to have brought some wisdom with us! So long as it was content and believing enough to remain a free and diffusive element in New England civilization, unharnessed with preambles and proclamations, unburdened with platforms and declarations, it was a real and respectable power; but when it began to organize, and to gather to itself a party consciousness, then it began to die,—and to-day it lies a woful wreck on the shore of the river of progress.

With dismay which would be despair, if I did not know that wisdom is wiser than some of her children, I see a similar experiment beginning to be tried by some radicals. Already, what may be called an Orthodox radicalism begins to peep over the horizon at certain points. Those who will not answer to the stentorian call and summons to "concentrate" and "organize," who will not follow "Douglas the true" when he blows his bugle blast, who will not turn aside from their private convictions and "stand up to be counted,"—such are made to feel the least perceptible pressure of a party power and spirit; are hearing themselves called "lazy," "indifferent," "impracticable," "inefficient." They know well enough that all this means that they are considered heterodox radicals, not alive to the imminent perils and exigent duties of the hour!

Suppose, my dear sir, that "there are but two interests of vital moment to all liberals of whatever school." Is there but one "Orthodox" method of promoting these interests? Is it demonstrated as inevitable that we must all go and join the Liberal League if we are in any wise earnest about these "two" things? Suppose some of us choose, in any paper we prefer, to speak as persuasively as may be of these two things and some others, without rushing to enroll our names on any League book,—must we then be considered and stamped as unwise, or false, or recreant radicals? Suppose we have a little "money," and less "mind," and a mere modicum of "earnestness,"—is it then the unequivocal and irresistible "demand" of the universe that we go and dedicate all these on the altar of the Liberal League? Will you point me to the infallible radical or radicals who can authoritatively answer these modest conundrums? "If the organs of liberalism in different parts of the country would lay their emphasis for six, or even for three, months on two or three primary ideas, nothing more would be required." Ah! but are you not astute enough, sir, to see that if we should have "two or three primary ideas" upon which every "organ" should be "required" to play with "emphasis" for the space of "six months," we should come very near by that time to having a radical creed, which only indeed it would be considered Orthodox to support? I scarcely can think that, when you wrote this, you fully realized how much it would sound like the good Unitarian "talk" with which the ears of some of us still ache from having heard so plentifully!

I pause with tender memories of friendship before the last paragraph which I have quoted from your article. Nothing can exceed my profound appreciation of the noble work which THE INDEX has done in time past, nor the measure of my admiration of the great ability of its editor. There is not a sentiment of my heart inconsistent with the most genuine desire for the welfare and prosperity of both. And yet I should be sorry to see even the support of THE INDEX made a test of Orthodoxy among radicals,—and I say this all the more freely because I have no pecuniary interest in any other journal. Those who agree with the "chief practical aim of THE INDEX" (I quote from its standing prospectus), "to organize a great national party of freedom," will of course support it,—and may they do so more and more effectually! But there are many radicals who do not agree with that "aim." Must they support it, or be accounted bad radicals? May they not prefer to support some other paper, and still be considered sound in the faith? If the vaunted law of "supply and demand" has any truth in it, this matter of newspaper support will take care of itself.

In conclusion, permit me to warn you, my dear sir, that, in your newly kindled zeal for the "concentration" and organization of radicals, you do not commit yourself to measures from which you may afterwards desire to depart. I know of no one who appears to me less likely to rest content in the traces of party organization than yourself.

I will only add that I have chosen the columns of the New Age as the means of communicating with you, because I did not wish to offer to THE INDEX anything that might tend in the slightest degree to abate the loyalty of even its least zealous supporters.

Very sincerely yours,

A. W. STEVENS.

—New Age.

"THE MAN OF THREE COUNTRIES AND DISOWNED BY ALL."

"The admirers of Thomas Paine held a meeting in Paine Memorial Hall, at Boston, on Tuesday evening, and adopted an address, saying that 'the present was a propitious time to place in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, a marble bust of Thomas Paine, as a recognition of his great services in behalf of the cause of human liberty.' The cost, it is believed, will be about $1,200."

Should this suggestion assume practical shape we shall be very much surprised if the managers of Independence Hall do not revive a document, numerously and respectfully signed, protesting against the admission of the proposed bust into the national pantheon. Yet in the long roll of Revolutionary heroes and statesmen, there are not more than a half-dozen names which better deserve the honor of marble commemoration; and there is no name in that roll which has been visited with so much miserable ingratitude, covered with so much unmerited reproach. That we celebrate our Centennial this year, and not later, is due to Thomas Paine more than to any other man. It was his bold and brilliant pen which, in the winter of 1775-76, roused public sentiment to a pitch that made a declaration of independence an imperative and immediate necessity. Such a declaration was certain to come at no very distant day; but Common Sense, that immortal pamphlet, stirred the people and spurred Congress to take the decisive step then and there, and not wait for a more favorable time and place. The author of that pamphlet saw, more clearly than any one else in America save Samuel Adams, that there could be no satisfactory and lasting compromise between the Colonies and the Mother Country; that the latter was determined to exert her authority to the utmost, regardless of consequences; that the former must either sink into slavery or rise to the dignity of freedom; and that if freedom was to be attained the blow of final and permanent separation must be struck at once. The persuasive and powerful arguments of Common Sense changed a dangerous and demoralizing indecision into prompt and emphatic action; action which literally drew the sword and flung away the scabbard; action which narrowed the issue down to the single and simple alternative of liberty or serfdom. Not less important was the work accomplished by that other immortal pamphlet, The Crisis. Coming, as it did, in the darkest hour of the war, and opening with the sentence, which thrills us even now,—"These are the times that try men's souls," it stimulated the flagging energies of a nation struggling against tremendous odds, put life and hope into a discouraged and defeated army which all the genius and devotion of Washington could hardly hold together, and was worth more to a falling, almost hopeless, cause, than ten regiments of fresh soldiers. It was at this dismal period, too, that the man whom Orthodox Americans have been taught to regard as a sort of brevet devil, not only refused to receive a cent of remuneration for these pamphlets—which were then having an enormous sale,—but drew a year's salary, due him as clerk of the Pennsylvania Assembly, and began with it a private subscription in aid of the starving troops. The salary was only $500 in Continental currency, but it was all he had, and it served to quicken the patriotism and liberality of those who had more. The following letter, written after the termination of hostilities, speaks for itself:—

"ROCKY HILL, Sept. 10, 1788.

"THOMAS PAINE, Esq.:

"My dear Sir,—I have learned since I have been at this place that you are at Bordentown. Whether for the sake of retirement or economy I know not. Be it for either, for both, or whatever it may be, if you will come to this place and partake with me, I shall be exceedingly happy to see you at it.

"Your presence may remind Congress of your past services to this country; and if it is in my power to impress them command my best exertions with freedom, as they will be cheerfully rendered by one who entertains a lively sense of the importance of your works, and who with much pleasure subscribes himself

Your sincere friend,

"G. WASHINGTON."

Well has Paine been called "the man of three countries and disowned by all." England, where he was born, could not forgive his love of liberty; America, whose liberties he helped to achieve, could not forgive his love of truth; and France, whose liberties he labored in vain to fix on sure foundations, could not forgive his love of mercy. When the French Assembly met to order the execution of Louis XVI., it was Paine who rose, and, in the name of liberty, protested against the deed which was both crime and blunder. "Destroy the king," he cried, "but save the man. Strike the crown, but spare the heart." "These are not the words of Thomas Paine," exclaimed a dozen members from different parts of the hall. "They are my words," said the brave Englishman of whom Englishmen are ashamed to be proud. He was arrested and sent to the prison of the Luxembourg; twice sentenced to the guillotine, and only escaped by an accident, which, had he been a saint, would have been heralded abroad as a miracle. It was while thus facing death in the depths of a dungeon that he wrote The Age of Reason. Among the innumerable enemies whom that book has raised up for its author, probably not one in ten ever read it, and probably not one in fifty ever read the other writings from the same pen. Yet, as a piece of literary work, The Age of Reason is the poorest that Paine did, and no man who is not familiar with his best ought to consider himself acquainted with English political literature. Common Sense and The Crisis are noble specimens of literary simplicity combined with literary power, while there are passages in the Rights of Man which breathe and burn with vigorous beauty. Take this, for instance, where Paine rebukes Edmund Burke for pitying the sufferings of the French aristocracy while forgetting the infamies of the Bastille:—

"Not one glance of compassion, not one commiserating reflection, that I can find throughout his book, has he bestowed on those that lingered out the most wretched of lives, a life without hope, in the most miserable of prisons. It is painful to behold a man employing his talents to corrupt himself. Nature has been kinder to Mr. Burke than he has to her. He is not affected by the reality of distress touching upon his heart, but by the showy resemblance of it striking his imagination. He pities the plumage, but forgets the dying bird. Accustomed to kiss the aristocratic hand that hath purloined him from himself, he degenerates into a composition of art, and the genuine soul of Nature forsakes him. His hero or heroine must be a tragedy-victim expiring in show, and not the real prisoner of misery sliding into death in the darkness of a dungeon."

Only two political writers whom we have studied, in our opinion, surpass Paine,—Jonathan Swift and "Junius." And Paine has caught the peculiar excellences of both Swift and "Junius" to a very rare degree, though in no sense the imitator of either.

As Paine has been and still is, to a certain extent, "the bugbear of the priest and the anti-Christ of the preacher," a brief glance at his religious views will not be out of place in an article intended to do some sort of justice to one who has been most shamefully belied. We present his creed in his own words:—

"I believe in one God and no more; and I hope for happiness beyond this life.

"I believe in the equality of man; and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy.

"The word of God is the creation we behold. It is an existing original which every man can read. It cannot be forged; it cannot be counterfeited; it cannot be lost; it cannot be altered; it cannot be suppressed. It publishes itself from one end of the earth to the other. It preaches to all nations and to all worlds; and this word reveals to man all that is necessary for him to know of God.

"The true deist has but one Deity, and his religion consists in contemplating his power, wisdom, and benignity, and in endeavoring to imitate him in every thing moral, scientific, and mechanical.

"I trouble myself not about the manner of future existence. I content myself with believing, even to positive conviction, that the power that gave me existence is able to continue it in any form and manner he pleases, either with or without this body; and it appears more probable to me that I shall continue to exist hereafter, than that I should have had existence, as I now have, before that existence began.

"The world is my country; to do good my religion."

In his last will and testament he says:—

"I have lived an honest and useful life to mankind; my time has been spent in doing good, and I die in perfect composure and resignation to the will of my Creator, God."

Paine's opinions in religious matters differed in no important particular from those of Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and John Adams. He put his opinions in print; they did not. Cannot the American people, in this Centennial year, afford to drop a few flowers of grateful remembrance on a grave which has been so long a target for the arrows of scorn and obloquy?—St. Louis Republican, Mar. 26.

MAMMA: Whatever are you crying for, Annie? Annie (who has suddenly burst into tears): Because—because—you've taken my orange. Mamma: Why, you asked me to have it two or three times. Annie: Yes, I know I did; but I thought you would say no, thank you, and give me another one as well.

"WELL, WELL, if the time has come when the 'fast males' must have a train of cars to themselves, I am glad I am an old woman, and haven't long to stay in this sinful world." And Aunt Betsey wiped the end of her nose with her best handkerchief.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 22.

B. F. Smith, $3.20; A. J. Davis, 85 cents; R. P. E. Thacher, 80 cents; R. W. Frazer, $3.20; A. M. Lathrop, $3.20; W. A. Jenkins, $1.25; M. M. Sherman, $3.20; J. D. Maxfield, $3.20; H. B. Clarke, $3.20; J. D. Thorley, 75 cents; E. S. Elder, 40 cents; F. S. Andrews, 50 cents; V. Keen, $3.20; Samuel Braake, $2.20; J. Alexander, $2.40; G. W. Davis, 75 cents; Thomas Douglass, $3; Thad. Ackley, $3; D. A. Cline, $4.40; L. T. Burch, $1.10; J. H. Watrous, 10 cents; S. J. Finley, 5 cents; F. L. Hosmer, $3.20; D. Humphrey, $3.25; J. M. Finotti, 50 cents; B. Shouse, 50 cents; E. F. Ring, $6.60; H. B. McNair, $1.20; Mrs. J. A. Needles, $1.20; M. Landberg, $3.20; H. M. Redington, $1.50; W. E. Sutton, $3.20; D. A. Robertson, $3.20; H. Nye, $3.20; Lucy Sandwith, $4.12; G. D. Haworth, $3.25; E. Wagner, $3.20; S. Roberts, $3.20; E. E. Denniston, $3.20; M. F. Adams, 50 cents; J. W. Griffin, $3.20; Geo. Henshaw, $13.20; T. Dean, $4; S. G. Shurtlen, 25 cents; Cash, 10 cents; A. Brentano, $13.20; American News Co., $4.50; E. D. Wileman, 40 cents; T. Knowles, $3.20; M. B. Guernsey, $2.25; A. Keith, 25 cents; W. H. White, $1.10; F. Little, $3.25; E. W. Gunn, $3.20; Thos. Marshall, $3.20; Harry Southworth, $3; —, $1; C. W. Fillmore, $1.25; Peter Cooper, 50 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

RECEIVED.

Books.

ANIMAL PARASITES AND MESSMATES. By P. J. Van Beneden, Professor at the University of Louvain, etc. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876. [International Scientific Series.] ON FERMENTATION. By P. Schützenberger, Director at the Chemical Laboratory at the Sorbonne. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876. [International Scientific Series.] THE GRAPHY. By W. H. Froese and J. Sivewright. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876. A PARAGRAPH HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. By Edward Abbott. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1876. SPIRIT INVOCATIONS. By Mrs. J. H. Conant and Allen Putnam. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1876. LIVING WATERS. A New Collection of Sacred Songs. By D. F. Hodges. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

APPLETON'S HAND-BOOK OF AMERICAN CITIES. New York: D. Appleton & Co. COMIN' THRO' THE RYE. A Novel. New York: D. Appleton & Co. MISSISSIPPI UND RHEIN. Centennial-Phantasee. Von Heinrich Ende. Milwaukee: Carl Doering. 1876. SECTAR VINDICATION IN THE STATE, and the Bible in the Public Schools. By E. P. Hulbut, formerly a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York. Albany: Joel Munsell. 1870. MATERIALISM, AND IRREVERENCE. Two Sermons by O. B. Frothingham, at Masonic Temple. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1876. GOD ON OUR SIDE, AND MAN AND THE BIBLE: Two Sermons by John W. Chadwick, in the Second Unitarian Church in Brooklyn. New York: Charles F. Sowerby. SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at the Langham Hall, London: "Light in the Darkness," "Is Death an Eternal Sleep?" "The Devil," "The Heart at Liberty," "Faith" (Parts I, II, III), "Delusions as Agents of a Moral Government" (Part I). PUBLICATIONS OF THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., No. 11, The Terrace, Fargahar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—"Christianity," by Charles Bray—"Hell,"—"The Athanasian Creed," by Rev. J. W. Lake—"The Ultimate Authority in Matters of Faith,"—"The Beauties of the Prayer-Book,"—"The Confounded Convert,"—"Signs of the Times": March and April. A REVIEW by the Minneapolis Liberal League of a Sermon by Rev. E. F. Sample. Published by the League. 1876. KING'S CHAPEL AND THE EVACUATION OF BOSTON. By Rev. H. W. Foote. Boston: Geo. H. Ellis. 1876. THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION. Speech of O. P. Morton in the United States Senate, Jan. 19, 1876. THE RESULT of the Brooklyn Advisory Council. New York: A. S. Barnes. TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Young Men's Mercantile Library, Pittsburg, for 1875. PHILOSOPHY of Devout and General Contemplation. Mason, Mich.: 1874. AN EPITOME OF SPIRITUALISM AND SPIRIT MAGNETISM. Boston: Colby & Rich. JOURNAL of the National Indian Association, in aid of Social Progress in India. March, 1876. London: Henry S. King & Co. JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. January, 1876. St. Louis: Gray, Baker & Co. THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. April and May Nos. New York: D. Appleton & Co. RECORD OF THE YEAR. May. New York: G. W. Carlton & Co. THE LANGHAM MAGAZINE. March and April, Nos. 1 and 2. Edited by the Rev. Charles Voysey. London: Deacon & Co. SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY. April and May Nos. New York: Scribner & Co. ST. NICHOLAS. April and May Nos. New York: Scribner & Co. THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. March, 1876. Boston: L. C. Bowles. THE WESTERN. March, 1876. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association. THE SATYRARIAN. May, 1876. New York: Campbell & Co. THE HERALD OF HEALTH. April, 1876. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 27, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only short articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnsdall, "	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaaki, N. Y.	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.	5.00
" 25.	" John Hlat, Winchester, Ind.	5.00
" 25.	" A Friend	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.	2.00
" 3.	" A Friend in New York City	50.00
" 3.	" Sank City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
" 3.	" E. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.	5.00
" 3.	" J. D. Lange, New York City	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, "	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipher, St. Louis	2.00
" 8.	" E. Hoogh, La Crosse, Wis.	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston	5.00
" 13.	" S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.	5.00
" 13.	" C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Me.	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.	10.00
" 13.	" G. P. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.")	8.00
" 17.	" J. M. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sulist, Salem, Ohio	5.00
" 17.	" J. B. Bonsall, "	.90
" 17.	" M. Schlesinger, Albany	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York	25.00

$343.90

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.

605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.00
A. Schelling, Philadelphia	1.00
A Friend	.50
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
E. M. J. Vail, Port Jarvis, N.Y.	1.00
Sank City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold, "	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Sisson, Port Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	2.00
S. R. Honey, "	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Minn.	2.50
J. M. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. B. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio	.90
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
A Friend, Philadelphia	5.00

$130.40

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

MR. KILGORE's report for this week had not arrived on going to press.

WE ARE REQUESTED to state that Mrs. Whipple will lecture in Investigator Hall, Paine Memorial Building, next Sunday forenoon, at half-past 10 o'clock. The public are cordially invited to attend.

AN ENVELOPE inclosing $1.00, without any letter or any clew to the sender, but postmarked "New York, April 21, 8 P. M.," was received at this office. Also an envelope with post-office order for $6.25, sent from Station G, New York, on February 5, has been held in the daily but vain expectation of hearing from the sender. Will the parties please notify us of their names and wishes?

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15. A Friend in Boston (paid) $100.00
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

THE LOTOS-EATERS.

Suppose that early in 1776, when the wisest and purest statesmen in the colonies were endeavoring to create a decisive public opinion and stimulate bold public action in favor of Independence, some of the people had publicly reasoned in this way:—

"These men are dangerous advisers. They are trying to form a conscious party of Patriots, with the deliberate purpose of overthrowing the party of Tories. They are turning patriotism into partisanship. According to our idea, patriotism is inconsistent with partisanship. Its divine mission is to grow away from parties of all sorts; to be diffusive; to avoid concentration; to form no organization; to propose no practical ends about which good men can possibly differ; to have no policy of action; to aim at no objective point; in short, to do nothing. Patriotism is only effective as a thought, an idea, a spirit; the moment it contemplates action, it begins to harden, to stiffen, to fossilize, and will necessitate an instant protest against itself. It cannot rally men for anything; its only hope is that it shall not organize at all. So long as it remains a mere disembodied and diffusive element in general civilization, it lives; but so soon as it begins to create a common consciousness of common objects, and to organize patriots into a party to accomplish them, it becomes a mere wreck,—it dies. These organizing patriots are ruining their own cause. We see with dismay that they are creating an Orthodox Patriotism, and that we are considered as Heterodox Patriots. We see that, if we do not believe that complete separation from Great Britain is the one commanding necessity of the hour, or if, believing this, we do not believe that the best way to achieve separation is to go to work and separate, then we come under suspicion of being indifferent, impracticable, inefficient. What we want is to form a Patriotic Club, and discuss patriotism—and some other things. We do not want to enlist in the army, for that involves slogans, and bugle-blats, and rallying cries; we do not want to fight for the Independence of the colonies, for fighting means fighting somebody, and nobody can do that without making himself a partisan. Perhaps we are as much in favor of Independence as these ambitious and stentorian bugle-blowers; but is there only one method of achieving it? Suppose we choose to write persuasive editorials about it, and to talk persuasively about it in our Patriotic Club; is that not better than to rush to enroll our names on the recruiting sergeant's lists? Shall we not soon succeed in persuading King George the Third to let us go? To fight his red-coated soldiers will only make him angry; we shall only become partisans, and irritate him into becoming a partisan too. If we regularly mail him our persuasive editorials and the reports of our persuasive discussions in the Patriotic Club, surely he will be persuaded, and the colonies will become independent without any Fourth of July Declarations of Independence and partisan Revolutionary Wars. To entertain a suspicion to the contrary would be to doubt our own persuasiveness! That is impossible. We believe that the best method of achieving Independence is moral suasion, administered cautiously and at intervals, and plentifully diluted with discussions on—some other things. Let us have no Orthodox Patriotism! Let us have no Patriotic Creed! Let us have an end of all this aggressive endeavor to rouse the country, recruit troops, raise supplies, organize a Continental Congress, lay the foundations of a mighty new nation. The Adamses, Otises, Hancocks, Warrens, Washingtons—all these and their like are mere partisans, and are transforming patriotism into partisanship. We prefer to call a meeting of the Patriotic Club, and listen to a persuasive essay on—some other things."

How would all this have sounded in the stern and earnest hours of 1776? Would the utterers of such well-meant obstructionism have been ranked as "heterodox patriots"? We fear they would hardly have got the credit of being "patriots" at all; for patriotism in that stringent crisis meant something more than "a thought, an idea, a spirit"—it meant Bunker Hill, and the long list of battle-fields where men were patriotic enough to die for the Independence they declared. Without a country, there can be no love of country; and we of 1876 would have had no country to centennialize, if they of 1776 had been all members of the Patriotic Club.

Yet one of the most conscientious men we know—a man of pure and glowing aspirations, a man enamored of truth and goodness and beauty, a man whose friendship it would grieve us greatly to lose—has just remonstrated in a precisely similar strain against the attempt to inspire definiteness of purpose and heroism of action into the aimless radicalism of our own day. He argues against the Liberal League movement on the grounds sketched above; and we are glad to be enabled, by Mr. Frothingham's cordial consent, to republish the "Open Letter" on a previous page. If there is anything in it which can possibly "abate the loyalty" of any INDEX reader to INDEX ideas, by all means let it be abated. All we wish is such support as rests on deliberate conviction of the essential value of our work; we are content to dispense with all other.

Radicalism is talking and writing and dreaming itself to death. It is opulent in scholarship, imagination, poetry, sentiment, culture; but it has too long been a pauper in the stern common-sense, the virile energy, the crystal-clear consciousness of something great to do, the self-sacrificing, resolute will to go ahead and do it, which alone can enable it to command the respect or win the confidence of this keen-eyed American people. It fritters itself away in interminable criticisms, wastes its vitality in discussions that begin nowhere and conduct nowhere, busies itself about anything and everything except doing for this generation the great work which it alone can do. Its work is threefold: to give to modern religious thinking an impregnable position, a positive method, and a practical object. This position is outside of and boldly opposed to Christianity, on the indestructible rock of pure Naturalism, which every historical religion denies point-blank at the very outset; this method is the method of modern science, which annihilates every pretence of supernatural "authority," and which alone has won positive knowledge since thought began; this object is the total emancipation of the State from the Church, to the end that human nature may work out its political and social problems by its own inherent laws, unhindered by the organized and tyrannical ignorance of the past.

More and more evident it is that radicalism must remain practically powerless to mould the destinies of the country, until it becomes, not only "a thought, an idea, a spirit" (which indeed it is), but also a mighty resolve to apply this thought, idea, spirit, to the further development of the national life. Orthodoxy is respected because it has the courage of its opinions, and asserts itself politically; radicalism is despised as either bloodless, cowardly, or selfish, because it tamely submits to political servitude. The sceptre of the Church is stronger to-day than George the Third's was a century ago; the most precious interests of the republic cry for its liberation as loudly as ever; the battle is still for Independence, and the Liberal Leagues are the Minute Men of 1876.

"Orthodox radicalism"? "Heterodox radicals"? Yes—the orthodoxy of radicalism is courage, earnestness, resolution, heroism, self-sacrifice, action; the heterodoxy of radicalism is timidity, apathy, purblindness, do-nothingism, love of ease, inaction. Whoever is satisfied with servitude will wear the yoke patiently, submit uncomplainingly to the indignities which willing slaves never escape, and wonder, or chafe, or rebel, at the summons to assert his right to be free; but whoever burns with the passion of independence will leap to his feet, and strike for it like a man. It is frivolous to stigmatize the demand for personal and national liberty as a "radical creed." Those who feel no need of it, and those who do, will never understand each other. But the radicalism which despises it, or which for any reason under heaven refuses to claim it at all costs, exactly fills out our own conception of conservatism. The cool, unsympathetic, hard common-sense of the people rates such radicalism as this at its real value, and sees more to admire and be influenced by in the unintelligent but vital earnestness of bigots and fanatics. The master who believes in and maintains his own divine right to rule is more of a man than the slave who does not believe in or maintain his own natural right to be free; and the common people flock after him accordingly. Who can blame them? Inaction when action is imperatively demanded by self respect and the public weal tells its own story—the story of simple insensibility to duties imposed by the situation itself. The Patriotic Club might have held their persuasive sessions nightly through the whole Revolutionary War; but the patriotism which expended itself in talk, when citizen-soldiers were dropping dead in their bloody tracks in defence of Independence, would have been voted by the men of 1776 as practically no better than Toryism. It would have been useless to protest against such a valuation: human nature permits no other.

Homer tells of the land of the Lotos-eaters, where the traveller who once tasted the "pleasant food of the Lotos" lost all desire to return home, and chose to live a soft life of dreamy exile rather than encounter again the hardships of the sea. Tennyson, singing with his own exquisite melody the song of the Lotos-eaters, might well be Post-Laureate of the Patriotic Club:—

"All things have rest: why should we toll alone,
We only toll, who are the first of things,
And make perpetual moan,
Still from one sorrow to another thrown;
Nor ever fold our wings
And cease from wanderings;
Nor steep our brows in slumber's holy balm;
Nor hearken what the inner spirit sings,
'There is no joy but calm!'
Why should we only toll, the roof and crown of things?"

Let us alone. What pleasure can we have To war with evil?"

"What pleasure can we have to war with evil?" Nay, there is no "pleasure" in it—nothing but duty! To liberate the Republic, to break the yoke of the Church, to vindicate the rights of natural intelligence and natural conscience against the haughty claim of Theology to control the legislation of the State, to emancipate free-thought from the heavy pressure of unjust discrimination and disadvantage in the struggle for existence with antiquated error, to win for free-thinkers the pellucid consciousness of State-respected equal rights and the self-respect which comes therewith—all this is toil and fatigue, sacrifice and battle; but it is duty! It has been in deliberate defiance and disregard of all "policy" that THE INDEX has for years proclaimed this duty to the sleepy and Lotos-eating radicalism of America. Supporters have dropped away; friends have been offended; and THE INDEX still keeps its flag flying only because others, with noble generosity, have done double their share in its support. If it had shunned all agitation for the political equality of free-thinkers with Christians, suppressed the "Demands of Liberalism," and spared itself the distasteful toil of advocating the Liberal League,—if it had with shrewd self-interest avoided a distinct issue with Christianity, confined itself to indirect thrusts and side-blows, adapted itself to the actual state of public opinion among the liberally-disposed, and published only essays and articles of a speculative and tenderly emotional character,—its circulation would to-day be many times what it is. But THE INDEX has never, no, not for an instant, aimed first and foremost at its own prosperity. It has been, and is, only a tool, a weapon, a means to an end. There is a redundancy of purposeless journalism in America; but there is also at least one journal that has a purpose, to achieve which it would cheerfully and rejoicingly sacrifice its own existence. This purpose is to make radicalism worthy of itself, by devoting itself with iron will and high, heroic, generous enthusiasm, no matter at what cost, to the task of establishing the Republic of Humanity, the Commonwealth of Man, on the rock of soul-freedom and equal political and social rights. This task means something more than talk; it means combined, whole-souled, unquenchable determination and action to put the ideal into fit embodiment in the State. And signs of ultimate success are bringing new hope and courage. If the Centennial Congress of Liberals only proves to be what the Liberals can easily make it, a great national movement will be begun which will by and by make them forgive THE INDEX for its aggravating pertinacity in urging them to be something nobler than mere Lotos-eaters.

LOGIC A NEW TOUCH-STONE OF TRUTH.

The ancient touch-stone was faith; but this is now held to be the test of credulity, the voucher of superstition. The new criterion is supposed to be much simpler and more satisfactory; easy as A B C; plain as "twice two are four"; so evident that all but the blind can see it; so obligatory and persuasive that none but the cowardly and insincere venture to evade it. Given a statement, another statement follows by necessity of reason, as a train of cars, once set on rails and impelled in a certain direction, goes where the iron lines carry it. There is no other alternative.

The error consists in assuming that a statement is a definite, limited object that is set on rails, and propelled in a particular direction. That it is nothing of the kind need not be said. Make a statement! Yes, but that is more easily said than done. To make an exhaustive statement, that shall express the whole mental contents of the thinking intelligence, that shall cover all the requisitions, and meet all the contingencies of inference and deduction, is an achievement which only the most accomplished minds are capable of. To make a statement that shall convey to all other minds the exact and full meaning which the originating mind put into it, is an achievement that even the most accomplished minds are incapable of. That would be equivalent to furnishing men with brains, which many a writer and speaker has distinctly declined to do. So little does the train feel compelled to obey the originating impulse, that it flies off in the most unforeseen directions, setting the laws of traction at defiance, and often driving off into the very quagmires and sandbanks which the first projector was especially anxious to avoid. The bother is that the officious and misleading party who offers his services as conductor, professing a perfect acquaintance with the road, is at heart unfriendly to the company, and secretly determined to wreck the train. The "logician" is the foe of the philosopher, and "logic" is the instrument by which he proposes to bring him to grief, the stone which is to throw him from the track. Men would find themselves in strange predicaments, if they accepted the "logic" of their adversaries. It takes the Unitarian but five minutes to bring the Trinitarian to a pass compared to which Balaam's was broad. The Universalist will bring the Calvinist to his knees in two seconds. What if the "evangelical Christian" were to intrust the speculative outcome of his system to the rationalist, or the rationalist were to intrust his to the evangelical? We know very well what logic, in Christian hands, will reduce Free Religion to; what logic, in "infidel" hands, will reduce all religion to. Thinkers must claim the right to keep the logic of their beliefs in their own hands, and refuse to be responsible for conclusions not fairly involved in their thought. Logic is the method of reason. Its office is to formulate ideas. A just logic is that which formulates ideas justly, not that which formulates them partially, or distortedly, or arbitrarily.

Does logic compel one who rejects every accepted definition of God to drop the word God entirely? Does logic compel the disbeliever in individual immortality to cease all speculation into the future and avow himself a beast? Does logic compel the disbeliever in prayer, as usually practised, to avoid every expression or attitude that in the eyes of any careless observer looks like prayer? Is the utterance of an aspiration dishonest? Is the spoken meditation insincere? Is the breathing forth of desire a disloyalty? Is the earnest lifting up of the heart a cowardly concession to popular usage? Is the man shamming or practising an imposition who tries to persuade himself or others of the power of an ideal world? It is absurd to say it. The only reply that can be made to those who insist on the logical duty of avoiding everything that is unintelligible to literal or uncongenial minds is the steady persistence in those very things till they be understood.

Logic is so respectable a thing that simple souls are tempted to yield at the first challenge, like the timid traveller who gives up his purse to the footpad without even making sure that the threatening pistol is not a harmless stick. A little honest fidelity to convictions on the part of sincere men will be of the greatest service by exposing the fraud, and proving the doughty assailant to be a scarecrow. O. B. F.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY E. C.

President Grant has returned to Congress the bill reducing the salary of the President to $25,000. In his veto message he shows that, when the salary was fixed at this sum, the salary of a member of Congress was only about $750 per annum; and although this latter has been increased until it is now $5,000, no addition has been made, until recently, to the salary of the President. We are glad that the President has had the courage to veto this bill, which was introduced evidently for the purpose of gaining a little cheap political capital, and should never have been allowed to pass the Senate. The present popular method of reducing public expenditure by curtailing the salaries of officials—practised, or at least attempted, in town-meetings, city councils, State legislatures, and Congress—is a petty sham, into the acceptance of which unfortunately some excellent people allow themselves to be humbugged. We repeat, what we have more than once expressed or indicated in these columns, that no public salaries, so far as we know, are larger than or even as large as they should be; but on the contrary our public officers are, to a considerable extent, miserably underpaid. We require men, for $2,000, to shoulder responsibilities which in the business world they would not be expected to take up under ten times that amount, and then we wonder that so many of our public servants help themselves from the Treasury whenever they have a good chance to do so. First-rate men are worth a first-rate price, and government must pay it, if it would retain the services of the men whom it needs. As matter of fact, the occupant of the White House is obliged to spend nearly $100,000 a year, and our Presidents have been able to retain their places heretofore only by reason of the fact that Congress has annually paid a large part of their domestic expenses,—expenses which nearly all other men, including public officers, are obliged to pay out of their regular incomes.

A National Labor Convention was held at Pittsburgh last week, and the delegates adopted a platform in the shape of a long set of resolutions. They urge a repeal of the treaty with China; demand a repeal of the Resumption Act, and the issue of "government money"; request a periodical publication of the cost of manufacturing all kinds of machinery; ask for such an amendment of the patent laws that every manufacturer of a patented article shall be limited in his profit; request Congress (we do not know what this means) to select some branch of industry, and appropriate a loan, payable in twenty years at a low rate of interest; demand a strong protective tariff, and a strict enforcement of the eight-hour law; require Congress to pass stringent usury laws; condemn "store-order" systems, and the prison-contract system of labor; ask the enactment of laws to give money due for labor precedence of all other claims; ask also for laws against all discrimination by common carriers; recommend a liberal system of internal improvements; and urge the enactment of "apprentice" laws. In our opinion this platform is very faulty, because unnecessarily lengthy, and dealing with too many subjects. The purpose of the Convention could have been attained in a simpler and much more effective way by the adoption of the petition which is said to have been signed by a large number of people in Michigan, and which Mr. Howe recently presented in Congress, requesting the passage of a law directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to each single man in the country $10, every Saturday night, and a larger sum to each head of a family in proportion to the number of his children. How long this practice might be kept up, could such a law be passed, we do not know; but it could be continued certainly for a longer time than the country would exist if the labor-reformers were able to carry out the doctrines of their platform.

Secretaries Bristow and Jewell deserve credit for their recent action with reference to certain demands of two of the Investigating Committees. The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department requested Mr. Bristow to bring before it and to leave in its care some original records belonging to his Department. This he declined to do for the reasons (1) that as legal custodian of these records he had no right to allow them to go out of his possession; (2) that certified copies of these records are accepted as evidence in all courts of justice, and should be accepted also by the Committee; (3) that the originals are open to the inspection of the Committee at any time; and (4) that the clerk of the Committee, in whose care the records would be left, was discharged recently from the Treasury Department for drunkenness. Mr. Jewell took similar ground with reference to a like request from the Committee on Post-Office Expenditures, and it is a curious fact that the clerk of this Committee also is a discharged employé of the Post-Office Department. The appointments to clerkships made by the Democrats since they obtained control of the House have been, upon the whole, singularly bad, and would of themselves justify the suspicion that the party is not fit to be entrusted with the control of the government.

About the same time last week that we were writing of the late Mr. A. T. Stewart, a "roaring farce," as the play-bills say, was enacted with reference to his estate, and our comments were fully justified before they appeared in print. Mr. Stewart's will was admitted to probate, and his widow immediately made over her entire interest in her husband's business and personal estate to his executor and lawyer, Judge Hilton, who thus became head of the firm of A. T. Stewart & Co., and the possessor of property valued at from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. Hilton gave up the million bequeathed him by Mr. Stewart, and Mrs. Stewart reserved her husband's real estate. The public is permitted to understand that Hilton accepts this immense fortune with the implied provision that he is to carry out Mr. Stewart's benevolent projects, and his fitness for this mission can be better appreciated when we recall the fact that he was a prominent member of the Tammany Ring in the palmy days of Tweed, and belonged to the notorious Central Park Commission. Hilton as philanthropist, therefore, can be paralleled only by the devil as monk, or by Tweed as statesman. His appearance as Stewart's executor was sufficiently surprising, but his serious assumption of this new rôle presents a burlesque spectacle such as, outside of New York, could be seen only among the natives of Senegambia, or perhaps among some of the officers of our civil service.

Moody and Sankey have closed their exercises at the New York Hippodrome, which the evening following their departure was turned into a ball-room, and a very worldly military band took the place of the choir of Christian singers. The amount of money contributed during the last two days of the revival performances was something enormous, and shows the hold which these two men have upon the sympathies of a large portion of the people who listen to them. It is the fashion, we observe, for the press to speak kindly of these evangelists and their work, and the assurances that they really do a great deal of good are almost unanimous. If this be true, we can only deplore the existence and the denseness of the ignorance which can be benefited by their efforts. Mr. Moody's sermons, those at least which we have been able to read, contain a very large amount of cheap exhortation and vehement assertion, and are interlarded with those suspicious and in many instances manifestly untrue stories which abound in the trade-stock of all ignorant preachers. That this poor stuff is enjoyed by and really benefits the numerous thousands who listen to it, furnishes a sad commentary upon our much-boasted public intelligence; and the fact that it can be recommended by eminent merchants and divines, who help to pay for its propagation, shows that merchandise and theology may alike be acquired without great gain of intelligence.

A farm was sold because of the non-payment of taxes last week in Worcester,—a very prosaic statement in itself, but of special interest in this case on account of the peculiar circumstances connected with it. About three years ago Mr. Stephen S. Foster refused to pay the taxes upon his farm because his wife was not permitted to vote. For some length of time prior to this refusal Mr. Foster had been making speeches in which he declared that the cause of woman-suffrage needed a martyr; that it was going along too quietly; that the cause of antislavery made but little headway until men began to be stoned and dragged in the dirt; that woman-suffrage, in short, needed a row, at least, and possibly a martyrdom. Finally, Mr. Foster refused, with a great blare of trumpets, to pay his taxes, and was haled immediately as the coming martyr of the cause. Of course the city of Worcester had no resource but to advertise the farm for sale. It was sold once, a year or two ago, but the purchaser refused to take the deed, and last week it was again put up at auction. The bidding was spirited, and when the farm was at last knocked down to the highest bidder, the crowd, which awaited the announcement of the name, learned that the purchaser was—Stephen S. Foster. In fact, Mr. Foster has reconsidered his loudly-announced determination, has made up his mind that a farm without suffrage is better than the possibility of suffrage without a farm, has paid his taxes therefore, or, in his own phraseology, has bought up the bargains, has compromised with the devil, and has left "the cause," alas! to seek another martyr.

An invention which may bring about a change in the nature of sea-coast defences was tested the other day at the Navy Yard in Washington. It consists of a cigar-shaped torpedo boat, moving under water at a faster rate than that of any steamer, and at a depth which insures safety from the heaviest shot. The machinery which drives it, and which is within the boat, is controlled by an electric battery which is managed by an operator on shore, who sends his orders through a wire which unrolls from a reel as the boat advances. By means of this wire the operator can send the boat forward, turn it to the right or left, stop it, back it, or fire the charge which it contains. The inventor is Mr. John S. Gray, of New York, and the invention, which was tested successfully, is pronounced by some of the naval officers one of the most wonderful implements of war ever contrived.

The Senate did very little work last week. Its principal debate was upon the question of paying Pennsylvania Avenue, the repair of which was finally ordered. It also authorized the Congressional printer to furnish copies of the records to Congressmen at cost price; passed, with amendments, the House Deficiency Bill; and also the House bill defining the tax on fermented and malt liquors. Belknap appeared before the Senate, and the impeachment trial began, but was almost immediately adjourned in order to allow the Managers to prepare arguments in support of the jurisdiction of the Senate which was denied by Belknap's lawyers. The House released Kilbourne, or, more properly, directed the Sergeant-at-arms to obey the writ of habeas corpus. A question which threatened to prove a very troublesome one was thus disposed of for the present at least. The House agreed with the Senate amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill; accepted some and rejected some of the Senate amendments to the Deficiency bill; passed an act concerning distilleries making stockholders liable for taxes, penalties, etc.; and debated at length, and finally passed, by a vote of 139 to 84, the bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, the act to take effect July 1st, so that, if the Senate concur, we are to have another experiment with the Indians. Among the accepted amendments to this bill was one admitting Indians to citizenship upon compliance with certain conditions, the most important condition being self-support for five years preceding application.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, April 1, 1876.

I promised last week to give the readers of THE INDEX an account of the reception accorded to Moncure D. Conway on his return from America, and I now redeem my word. The place was South Place Chapel, Finsbury; the time, Monday, March 27. Americans well know how great is the influence exerted by Mr. Conway in the English capital. His independence of thought, his rare honesty of utterance, his originality, and his courage, have won for him a position quite unique. He is a thorough heretic, and yet is in society; he is boldly unorthodox, and yet is not slandered. At his house may be met the intellectual cream of society. For rank and wealth he cares not, but chooses his friends among the honest-thinking, the large-brained, the scientific, whether or no they add to these qualities the adventitious attractions of social standing and large banker's balance. South Place Chapel is as unique as its lecturer. A "Unitarian place of worship" in days gone by, it is now a hall from whose platform are taught the most advanced views. Prayer is one of the things of the past within its walls; hymns are still sung, but they are of a transitional character,—the book containing them having many theistic productions in its pages, although these are but seldom heard now-a-days. A very good choir leads the singing, and an anthem forms part of the "service." The "lessons" are drawn from Mr. Conway's Sacred Anthology, or from any of the writings of great moral teachers, elder or modern, from Plato to Emerson. The lecture is the great attraction of the whole, and is a discourse on some ethical point, some political question, some sign of the onward movement of the age, some struggle of the dying superstition; now and then it will be some quaintly fanciful subject, embellished with delicate humor and much poetico-artistic antiquarian lore. Mr. Conway's most salient features are an intense and bitter hatred against Christianity, as one of the slaveries of the world; an indignant passion against everything that savors of tyranny or of injustice; an enthusiastic devotion to his ideal of progress; and a deep interest in, and reverence for, the scientific researches of the day. His thought is well described by the word "artistic," as he shrinks much from crude or from harsh forms of thought. In the Stuart's days he would have been a Puritan from conviction, and would have followed Cromwell against Charles; but he would have shuddered inwardly at the rough outside of the hero-captain, would have revolted against the cant of his comrades, and would have lamented that to their solid worth there was not joined the chivalrous grace of Buckingham and the delicate poesy of George Herbert.

The chapel on Monday evening was well filled with smiling faces; and when Mr. and Mrs. Conway appeared, the applause was both loud and long. It was remarked that the former was looking wonderfully well, and appeared to be all the better for the breath of native air. South Place thanks you, American friends, for treating its favorite so well, although it would have grudged him to you, if your clasp had been so tight as to keep him away from his English home. And here let me say that much anxiety has been felt lest Mr. Conway should return to the land of his birth and permanently settle there. We have all felt that the work he has carried on here is too important to be allowed to lapse, and that it would suffer if confided into strange hands. The tendrils which through years have learned to cling round a tree cannot roughly be torn away without injury to both; and when a man's name has become identified with a movement, he, to a certain extent, belongs to that movement, and is bound to consider its welfare in any course open to him. We rejoice that Mr. Conway has determined to remain at his post, and we cannot but feel that, in so deciding, he has done what those who honor him most expected that he would do. Mrs. Conway leaning on her husband's arm, looked her best and brightest, and that is saying much. She is as great a favorite as her husband, uniting the most thorough boldness and honesty with very perfect and gentle womanliness. I know of no woman who is, at once, so charming a woman, and so true, right through. What Mrs. Conway thinks right, that she will do, let who will say nay; and if the world growls, the world may smooth down again, for turn for it will she by no means. The consequence is that she is very much respected, and has considerable influence. On this special evening she looked her most attractive, dressed with delicate taste, and holding in her hand a magnificent bouquet of roses and ferns, presented to her by a number of young ladies connected with South Place.

Mr. Hickson, the Treasurer of the South Place Chapel Committee, was the chairman of the evening, and was entrusted with a handsomely illuminated address of welcome, which, after reading aloud, he presented to Mr. Conway. I do not know if THE INDEX can spare room for the text, which ran as follows:—

ADDRESS TO MR. MONCURE D. CONWAY ON HIS RETURN FROM AMERICA.

Str,—Among the numerous friends who hail your safe return to England with heartfelt gratification, the members of the two societies over which you have presided so many years in London are anxious to give full expression to the enthusiasm and hope which animate them upon once again welcoming your presence in their midst.

They will be glad to receive the assurance, for which your interesting communications from America have, in a measure, prepared them, that the pleasing anticipations with which you started have been more than realized; and that you have reaped in the land of your birth the happiness which springs from the renewal of genial intercourse with kindred and early friends, and from the recognition of a marked progress in the intellectual and social condition of your countrymen.

It is their hope and belief that your addresses have contributed to the elevation and advancement of freethought in America, by inciting its followers to persevere faithfully in the manly course upon which they have entered, and by affording encouragement to those who may fear lest, in the earnest pursuit of truth, restraints should be weakened which have been considered necessary to the welfare of the human race.

It would, indeed, have been surprising had your reception by your compatriots been less enthusiastic, remembering, as they must, your sacrifices for conscience' sake, and for principles which, however obnoxious in years gone by, are now seen by them to have been the highest inspirations of an enlightened mind. But some degree of pride may be pardoned in recalling that in England you found absolute freedom of utterance and opportunity for literary effort.

They well know that there have been times when you would gladly have spared old and honored friends a shock to their religious sensibilities, from the infliction of which, at the call of duty, in the spirit of a true reformer, you dared not shrink.

In the honor conferred upon you by the overtures emanating from the most liberal society in the intellectual centre of the New World, which singled you out as the most worthy successor to one of the greatest religious teachers of modern times—Theodore Parker,—they see reflected the high admiration, so keenly entertained here, of the importance of the work done by you in this country. Here, too, it is recognized that you have manfully walked in the footsteps, and are a worthy pupil of that brave and good man.

Gratulations were high yielding to apprehension lest an even greater need, a higher duty, and a wider field, should have claimed your future efforts, and called you from among them.

They dare not selfishly stand in the way of your personal and family prosperity; they hope, notwithstanding, that you will recognize the great work that lies before you in this country, the promotion of which must receive a serious check should you withdraw from its leadership. Already the results achieved, but yet to be consolidated, give promise, under well-sustained endeavor, of ripening into national importance; and the time appears at hand when, with increased numbers and resources, this aspiration may be realized.

Your return is hailed no less as a pleasing augury of the advancement of religious progress in England, than as a pledge of international good-will between liberal thought on both sides of the Atlantic; and it is earnestly hoped that the happiness experienced in rejoining the home you have built up in the Old Country may be heightened by this inadequate, but sincere expression of a most fervent welcome, and that your temporary absence may but have served to strengthen the tie which has grown under united efforts in a high and exalted cause.

LONDON, the 27th of March, 1876.

I extract the following report of Mr. Conway's speech from the National Reformer, the only paper that has given a full account of the proceedings:—

Mr. Conway, on commencing his reply, was welcomed by cheering, repeated again and again, until the building almost shook with the rounds of applause. When silence was at length restored, he said that it afforded him much pleasure to see his friends again, and he could not help expressing his thankfulness to them for their more than friendly greeting and their kindly address. He felt it hard to realize that his absence had only been measured by months, so long had it seemed to him even in happy days, separated from home and from the work that he loved. Specially had he thought of them on the Sundays, and wondered what they were doing, and what they were hearing here. Some of the lectures had been forwarded to him, and he had read them in the far West, and had rejoiced at the strong and able teaching which they were receiving. He was glad to tell them that his visit had fulfilled the main purposes for which he went. He had spent some very happy weeks in the scenes where his boyhood had passed. With the Virginians, blood was much thicker than water, and their love for the land of their birth was very passionate. He felt that he had reinforced his whole life, as he sat there beside his aged parents, and found that the old love was as strong as ever, and the old ties were binding still. In Cincinnati, too, he had met many old friends belonging to that noble and gallant church which had supported him in days when it was not so easy to assail supernaturalism as it was to-day. He had tried to tell Americans something of the method of progress here, and of the great leaders of men. He had told them, also, somewhat of that personage who had lately come into English courts, which did not seem to think much of him, which had even seemed inclined to doubt his existence; that personage known as the devil, who, during his absence, had been non-suited with costs. He had tried to carry into the West some of that information which he had gathered from Orientalists here, for he thought that his countrymen needed to be familiarized with the habit of thought of the disciples of Buddha, and of the Hindu and the Japanese. He had not been idle; for he had travelled some twenty-five thousand miles, and had addressed public assemblies nearly one hundred times since he left them. He had not done much pulpit-work, but he had thoroughly enjoyed speaking to his old Cincinnati friends and conversing with the leading freethinkers of America. He had spoken five times in Theodore Parker's pulpit, and he had felt that, since he sat there as one of the great man's congregation, Time and Fate had marked him enough to engrave on his heart reverence for those great pioneers who had worked such a revolution in thought, and had overthrown the slavery of superstition. When the congregation there invited him to take Theodore Parker's place among them, he recognized the honor that they did him,—an honor not so much to himself, as a recognition of the truth of the principles that he had been trying to advance, and which were the natural working out of the principles taught by Theodore Parker and William Johnson Fox. Mr. Conway then explained the circumstances of the invitation and his feeling of the gravity of the decision that rested upon him, since it was his countrymen who called him, and who desired that he should serve them. He wrote home to ask the counsel of his South Place friends, and when he returned he found that the decision had practically been taken out of his hands, for events had elapsed such an expression of feeling that it had gone to his heart, "making it simply impossible for me to leave such friends as surround me here. So I return to my work, under auspices that I feel to be fresher and happier than ever." It was just twenty-five years since he had left his father's house to go forth to his ministry, and he had since travelled along the rough and dusty road that all must tread who strive to follow Truth; many a cup of cold water had been proffered to him by kindly hands for the sake of the Truth whose disciple he was, but he felt that now his cup ran over. He felt that they all desired one thing,—to learn more of Truth, to embrace it, to press it close to their hearts, to culture their thought into harmony of life, to keep abreast of the great scientific discoveries of the day, and to let them pass into their lives and minds. There was part of a great work. In America, on every side, he had seen superstition crumbling, and the seed they had drawn from the Saxon land was burgeoning out into fuller flowers of truth and fuller blossoms of progress. The work here was the same as there; he had seen and felt it in the eagerness of the people to learn the thought going on in London, and he believed that intercourse would lead to a fuller expansion of the mind of that race to which they all belonged. He had been in contact with the mind of America, had seen and talked with her poets, her philosophers, her men of science; and everywhere he had felt that they belonged to the new era of thought, and that we and they were destined to move abreast in this grand search after Truth. "I have come back with a determination to work, and to do my very best, with your sympathy and aid, to labor for the diffusion of truth; and to that work I, in my turn, welcome you."

After this a presentation was made to Mrs. Conway by the ladies of Camden Town, and Mr. and Mrs. Conway then held a perfect levee, friends pressing forward to shake hands, and passing across the platform in one continuous stream to exchange a hearty handshake of welcome and congratulation.

Communications.

CONSCIENCE.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Bishop McQuaid, in his late lecture on the School Question, has laid great stress on the Catholic conscience, and the compunction Catholics feel to have their children taught at our public schools, or to pay taxes to help sustain the latter. Now, sir, conscience is a serious thing; and I believe no nation on earth reverences it more, and is more jealous of the fullest freedom of conscience, than Americans,—a natural consequence of their long enjoyment of this great boon. Legally and constitutionally at least, if not also practically, here Church and State are divorced; while in Europe, even in the freest countries (e. g., in England), they are united, and wherever this unholy union exists the freedom of conscience is practically impossible. The Bishop knew, then, quite well what he was about, and there can be no doubt that this great reverence of the American people for the freedom and sacredness of conscience gained him the sympathy of many a good man for his plausible claim of the violation of the Catholic conscience. And yet this talk about the Catholic conscience is all sheer sophistry, as are, in fact (one or two points excepted), all the claims and arguments of the Bishop.

With regard to his claims for the Catholic conscience, the good Bishop seems to ignore the important fact that there are two widely different kinds of conscience,—the genuine conscience and the spurious conscience, or the "reasonable" and the "unreasonable" conscience, as you rightly styled them in your lecture. The former is inherent in man, and forms an essential part of his humanity,—is founded in, or rather is but a particular mode of action of, his Reason. Hence we find it the same in all men of all times, nations, and climes, merely modified in degree and proportion as their reason itself varies, first in its intensity, and then in its development and culture. As a further proof of the oneness of conscience and reason, and of the former's dependence on the greater or lesser enlightenment of the latter, I would only call attention to the well-known fact that we also find some unmistakable manifestations of "conscience" in animals,—at least in the higher classes of them, as dogs, horses, apes, etc.

Now it is claimed to be the domain of conscience to distinguish between right and wrong; to approve of and foster the one in man, and to disapprove of and suppress the other; to reward the one by the serene happiness and sweetest pleasure resulting from its approval, and to punish the other by the most excruciating remorse resulting from its disapproval. But to know good and evil is the function of reason; to judge of our thoughts and sentiments simultaneously as they arise in us, and of our acts, as well before as after their commission, is the function of the moral sense in us; and to reward our obedience or punish our disobedience to them is the function of conscience. Yet all three of these functions are but different modes of actions of one and the same faculty, Reason. Any one, then, truly conscientious, must and will necessarily also be reasonable and moral. He may, though, because humanly imperfect, also have his foibles, and even "do that he willed not"; but he can and will not persist in the wrong. His conscience will "trouble" him, and he will "repent" and "amend."

The other, the pseudo-conscience, on the contrary, is neither inherent in man, nor is it always in agreement with Reason, but very often in opposition to it. It is also not universal, but individual, varying in every individual according to his accidental circumstances. For this pseudo-conscience is not, like the real conscience, the "inner voice" of Reason; but the combined effect of casual and exterior influences, such as nativity, parentage, society, and other environments. It varies furthermore, and is eminently biased by, the religious (sectarian) education and training the child receives, the religious doctrines and tenets the man believes in, or at least the sect he belongs to. But as every positive religion has more or less of the erroneous and unreasonable in it, this pseudo-conscience must necessarily partake of them, must do so just in proportion to the intensity and honesty of a man's religious belief. As his theology, so will be his conscience. But whatever the doctrines or tenets of the Church or sect to which he belongs may be, his individual theology or belief, and hence his conscience, will be in the same degree superstitious, or enlightened, as the child is kept in ignorance. "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined," is no more true of a real tree than it is of the child and man. The pseudo-conscience may, then, make a man a devotee to his sectarian religion, a zealot, fanatic, and bigot, but never a truly conscientious man. He may be most sincerely and honestly conscientious in this false way, and yet with all his conscientiousness be a bad and dangerous man, and commit the most irrational, immoral, and inhuman deeds; yea, he may even commit them because of his conscientiousness, because his wrong conscience may delude him to believe acts right and meritorious, which are horribly shocking to a reasonable, enlightened conscience. Daily life, every page of history, and even of the Bible itself, furnish thousands of instances of this kind. A man to whom the pseudo-conscience is the only conscience may thus be very conscientious, and yet at the same time most unreasonable, immoral, and highly dangerous for society and the State.

If the foregoing distinction between the two kinds of consciences is correct, the morality of any man, his value to society, and his usefulness to himself and the State, must primarily depend on the nature of his conscience; or this again on the kind of education the child receives, and more especially on the direction given to his mental faculties. Have, then, the parent and the Church the only interest in the education of the child—its nascent citizen,—as the Bishop claims? If not the sole, at least the first and paramount aim of the Church is to make the child a sectarian, to train him to become a believer in and a member of the Church, and to make not his Reason, but the Church, the basis of his conscience. The Church has thus an interest of her own in the child which frequently is antagonistic to that of the child, and which she ever strives to promote at the cost of the child; while the interests of the State and of the child are identical. Must it then not be the higher interest, nay, the prime duty, of the State to see to it that every child in the land gets his share of right education,—that his mental as well as physical faculties are rightly developed, his reason enhanced, his moral sense awakened and strengthened, and his conscience enlightened? The Bishop, however, claims that this is the domain and function of the Church alone; that the State, in its public schools, does not and cannot teach morality unless it also teaches religion, for "there can be no morals without religion." According to Catholicism, then, morality is dependent on religion (!), and therefore the Catholic conscience is averse to public schools where the Catholic religion is not taught. This assertion of the Bishop is, however, a most egregious mistake or a cunning sophistry. The Catholic, like every other sectarian conscience, must either be in harmony with the one, universal, true, human conscience, or it must oppose it. If the former, it cannot be averse to general education in public schools; if the latter, it is but a pseudo-conscience, and its unjust demands must give way to the reasonable and just demands of the State. The Bishop can now take which horn of the dilemma he pleases.

Moreover, the Catholic, like every sectarian religion, holds doctrines and tenets utterly antagonistic to the interest of society and the stability of the State. For instance, it teaches that there is "a higher sovereign" (Pope or Church) than the State, and a citizen's allegiance due to this foreign "higher sovereign" before it is due to the State; and it claims authority over others, in clear violation of the statutes of the State and the equal rights of the citizens. Is, then, the State to acknowledge the sacredness of such an unreasonable, sectarian, pseudo-conscience, and conform to it? Certainly not! The State is the collective enlightened Reason of the nation, and the guardian of public morals; and since the State is neither a sect nor can have any positive religion, all consciences, even the pseudo-consciences of its individual members, are alike sacred to it. They are so, however, only in the individual as to his individual religious belief, and only so long as this belief and conscience do not bring him into antagonism to the public welfare, whether to menace the stability of the State, or to infringe on the rights of any of its citizens. But as soon as any believer does either, his claim to the right of his conscience cannot shield him against the consequences of his deeds.

MORRIS EINHSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Penn., March 22, 1876.

PRIESTLY INTIMIDATION AGAIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

My dear Sir,—I may be mistaken, but I cannot help thinking you will before long see cause to change your opinion on the question to which the heading of this letter refers. You seem momentarily to misunderstand what I meant, when I wrote that—"everything depends on the answer we give to this one question: In granting or withholding the benefit of its ordinances, is the Church dealing with its own?" You take "its own" to mean its own people, for you ask: "Why should the Church not be permitted to 'deal with its own' by burning them, if heretical, at the stake? Simply because the free State will not and cannot concede that any man is the Church's own," etc. But surely it was tolerably plain that by "its own" I referred solely to the "ordinances," the sacraments and rites of the Church. Just read the question as I put it, and see if it lends itself to any other interpretation. Then glance at the illustration I used of a rich man withholding his custom from a poor man, because the poor man, in the exercise of his natural or civil rights, has displeased him; and it will seem still stranger that you should have supposed me to be speaking of the citizens of a free State as the property of a priesthood. My position is that the Church is no more responsible to the State for the manner in which it dispenses such benefits as it has at its command, than the rich man for the manner in which he bestows his custom, lends his credit, or distributes his property.

Suppose a case. A man is heard complaining that he cannot send his children to a public school. "Why not?" some one asks. "Because, if I do, I cannot have the sacraments of my church." What would be the proper answer to make to that? The proper answer, it seems to me, would be to say: "Well, the State has provided you with a school, but it cannot guarantee you sacraments; and, if you cannot have both, you must only take your choice." Upon your theory, as I understand it, the answer ought to be: "Send your children to the school, and we shall see that you get the sacraments too, if we have to imprison the priest for it." I must confess that I fail to see the reason or justice of this.

You seem to admit, at the outset of your remarks on my last letter, that, if no "threatenings" were made use of, no penalties (under the law we are supposing) could be imposed. Are we then to understand that under such a law it might be legal to do the thing which it was illegal to threaten to do,—that a priest might, as a matter of fact, exclude from the altar those who sent their children to the public schools, provided it could not be proved that he had previously threatened to do so? Imagine, then, how efficacious such a law would be, and how rational it would appear to make the doing of a thing legal, but the threatening to do it a crime! No one can feel more deeply than I how terrible an evil Roman Catholicism is inflicting on the rising generation, how cruelly it warps their minds and perverts their hearts; but, for all that, I could not bring myself to vote for a law which should prescribe a course of action for the Church within its own sphere of purely moral suasion. If the doctrine of liberty is good for anything, it must be good even for a case like this. Let us not do evil that good may come.

Believe me, as ever, faithfully yours,

WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, April 9, 1876.

[We are very sorry to have misunderstood our correspondent's phrase, "dealing with its own," and of course accept unhesitatingly his present explanation of it. The general difficulty, however, is not cleared up to our own mind by the considerations above presented. The "terrible evil" confessedly inflicted on children by this priestly intimidation introduces an element into the discussion which involves the whole duty of the State to protect its citizens from wrongs which are at the same time wrongs to the community. Our main point is not at all met; namely, that it is (or ought to be) a punishable crime to intimidate anybody so as to prevent him from enjoying his civil rights or from discharging his parental obligations. The question is—can the State permit force or intimidation for any purpose whatever, when directed against unoffending citizens? And this question becomes all the more grave, when the whole future happiness and public usefulness of the rising generation is concerned. The ground we are inclined still to take is that the State should care nothing for the kind of intimidation practised, but simply punish intimidation itself, as an infraction of the personal rights both of parent and child. It should stop with the overt act of threatening; if it stops short of that, it refuses to protect its own citizens from acts of violence which are as wicked in principle as the auto da fé. This alone is the real point at issue, and we are open to conviction, if we are in error.—ED.]

FREETHOUGHT IN NEW HAVEN.

NEW HAVEN, April 15, 1876.

DEAR SIR:—

Below you will find appended the constitution of the Free Lecture Association of New Haven, which we wish you to publish. By so doing you will confer a favor which will be appreciated by the Liberal friends of New Haven.

Respectfully yours,

W. W. STOW, Secretary.

CONSTITUTION OF THE FREE LECTURE ASSOCIATION.

Article 1. This Society shall be known as the Free Lecture Association of New Haven.

Article 2. Being established upon the basis of a Free Platform, the object of this Association shall be to maintain the intellectual and spiritual freedom of every individual by encouraging and supporting the broadest liberality of thought and speech upon all subjects pertaining to the highest interests of humanity, in all the ways demanded by an age of universal emancipation of men's minds from all limitations of creed-worship and fellowship.

The means to be employed for the furtherance of these objects shall be regular local meetings, lectures, addresses, and free discussions upon all subjects having for these objects the advancement and progression of the race, whether spiritual, intellectual, scientific, social, religious, or secular: our motto being, "A free platform, free speech, and freedom in our individual opinions."—holding to the old adage, "Hear all sides and then judge,"—and believing with one of the grand exponents of liberalism, Thomas Jefferson, that "there is no danger from error of opinions so long as truth is left free to combat it."

Article 3. The officers of this Association shall consist of a President, Vice-President, Treasurer, Financial, Recording, and Corresponding Secretaries. These officers shall constitute an executive board. All financial affairs of this Society shall be regulated by this board. All accounts of the Treasurer and Financial Secretary shall be audited by a special committee. These officers shall hold office for one year, or until others are appointed.

Article 4. Meetings of this Society shall be held quarterly. Annual meetings shall be held, at which time all officers of this Association shall be elected by ballot by members of this Association.

W. W. STOW, Secretary.

30 BRADLEY ST., NEW HAVEN, CONN.

A NEW-MADE minister, having occasion to marry a couple as his first official act, and there being quite an assemblage present, determined to strike them dumb with awe, and so, in winding up, he said, "I pronounce you man and wife, and the Lord have mercy on your sinful souls!"

AN AMERICANIZED citizen was called on as a witness in a case before one of the justices lately, and when the oath was administered he raised both hands and said: "I shall spoke nodding what sin't drew, if ever I hope to die so quick as a minute!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quick advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	6 " "
" 52 " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BEONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.35
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	8.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	8.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D., 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Obedience.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrsewski, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.50
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHNING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising-- Adam Bede.....	1.50
Romola.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Felix Holt.....	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARBAE'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	5.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. E.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.50
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Outpost Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journey.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Outlines of Darwin and Adam Sedgwick's Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	3.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROST. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERKE (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.50
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty--both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MOBLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Psychology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. On Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kickoo from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Original and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans--Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeeds of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations--A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Free Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHWELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.25
Essays Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.00
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Boom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Doyal, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Fancie in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.25
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.25
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	4.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.00
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS.
PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom.
Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.
Sixth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.
Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.
§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.
§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

DR. EDWARD E. DENNIS-
TON'S

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

—AT—

REHSTEIN, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

NUMBER LIMITED TO THIRTY.

T H E

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Beade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

MATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.00

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

PERRY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

T H E I N D E X

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by

James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.;

one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60

cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13

and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one

hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by F. H. Channing.

25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts.

each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfits and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE'S Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Re-fitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1775. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States. All of these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them, and everything connected with them, will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in The Sun.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by The Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of GRANT'S administration, and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this The Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.

The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon GRANT'S aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read The Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting, and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence, and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year, postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to Clubs, Agents, Postmasters, or anyone.

The Daily Sun, a large, four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55c. a month, or $6.50 a year. Sunday edition extra, $1.20 per year. We have no travelling agents.

Address THE SUN, New York City.

THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

805 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance, having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $800 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 805 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed:

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

ALEXANDER LOOS,

ISAAC RHEN,

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,

H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1876.

WHOLE No. 332.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

tion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSSES.

AMERICANS have justly the reputation of great mechanical inventiveness; but the worst machine they ever invented is "machine politics."

MISS SUSAN H. WIXON will lecture at the Paine Memorial next Sunday, at 10:30 A. M. A patriotic poem by Annie F. Brown, eleven years of age, will be recited.

A NEW "Science Hall" was dedicated recently in New York, at 141 Eighth Street, by the Religious-Scientific Society. The First Congregational Society of the Religion of Humanity is to occupy it on Sundays, and the New York Liberal Club will make the Hall its head-quarters.

ALL ENEMIES of a "venal and licentious press" will take a savage satisfaction in the indictment brought against it in a recent editorial on "The Labor Question and the Press": a sympathetic versification of which may be found in another column, entitled "The Sword of Buncombe Hill."

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says of Secretary Bristow: "He has done what others were contented to say ought to be done." What better thing could be said of any man? What better type of genuine radicalism could be found? What does religious liberalism need more profoundly than a double portion of Bristow's spirit? May it manifest itself this summer at the Congress of Liberals!

THE LIBERALS of Stockton, California, are preparing to celebrate the Fourth of July in true "Centennial" fashion. They have ordered of Mr. Morse a copy of his noble bust of Paine, also busts of Washington, Franklin, and Jefferson. The model of the latter Mr. Morse has nearly completed in clay. The others he will furnish from models already made. He is making the Jefferson to match his Paine in size, and the two appear to be quite at home in each other's company.

THE CENTENNIAL COMMISSIONERS, according to a Philadelphia despatch of April 29, "to-day reconsidered the resolution closing the buildings and keeping the grounds open, free, on Sundays, and a resolution was adopted closing both the buildings and grounds on Sundays,—only two voting against it." This is the way in which Orthodoxy tramples on the rights of the liberals, who are taxed at the same rate as the Orthodox to pay the National bounty of $1,500,000 to the Exposition. The explanation is short: the Liberals are unorganized.

A DISPATCH from Washington on April 30 states that the German American citizens of the District of Columbia have "issued a call for a national convention in this city to insist that the Cincinnati platform shall contain a declaration against the present discrimination in treaties with foreign nations between native and naturalized citizens living abroad, in favor of taxation of church property, against interference with personal liberty by prohibitory laws, and against any encroachments upon the non-sectarian school system." There is no use in trying to postpone the settlement of the religious questions forced into politics by the present usurpations of the Church; the agitation has begun; all the politicians cannot stop it; and the German Americans are doing their duty like brave men and patriots.

A CABLE DISPATCH sent from Rome on April 27

states: "Representatives of some of the great powers were recently in conference with several influential cardinals, with a view of ascertaining the best means of bringing to an end the conflicts between the various States and the Church. The cardinals unanimously declared peace impossible, unless the spiritual independence of the Church is acknowledged. The alliance and agreement between the Church and State were regulated by the Concordat without either party being made subordinate." This means that the Catholic Church, as an institution, shall be an independent power, co-equal with the State, and not subject to its laws. On the contrary, the American Republic is absolutely supreme within its own territory, refuses to divide its authority with any other organization, treats all Catholics as merely common citizens, exacts from them obedience to the civil laws, and does not even recognize the existence of the Catholic Church except as one of countless voluntary and private corporations. The instant it departs from this just and safe policy, it will begin to die. Yet the Catholic Church is steadily plotting to acquire an independent status, hoping to compel the American Union to enter into a Concordat with it as a co-equal power. This once being won, the Church will proceed to make the State practically "subordinate" to itself, by claiming its own supremacy in "faith and morals"—the latter, as Mr. Gladstone has eloquently shown, covering the whole domain of political and individual life. Can anything be clearer than that the Church is just as surely sowing the seeds of rebellion against the national authority as ever the dead Slave Power did? It is to-day preaching a crusade against the modern State; and he is no wise man who despises her power to create fanatical commotion.

THIS EXTRACT from an editorial in Zion's Herald, a leading Methodist journal of Boston, arrests attention: "It is proposed to procure and forward, during the great Exposition in Philadelphia, a marble bust of Thomas Paine, to be placed in Independence Hall. If Paine's reputation rested chiefly upon his admirable Revolutionary papers, this might not be an unwelcome gift to the city of brotherly love; but as his after reputation, as the author of the Age of Reason, and the most blatant and blasphemous atheism, quite overshadowed his previous estimation as a political writer, the patriotic significance of his bust would be lost. We would, therefore, with proper deference to the tastes of the free-thinking friends of Mr. Paine, suggest that, as Mr. Paine, without any doubt, fell a wretched victim to his unconquerable appetite for intoxicating liquors, his bust be placed in the 'star-shaped' building which is to be erected by the beer manufacturers for the exposition of their flourishing trade. It might serve as the 'awful illustration' if it failed to awaken grateful reminiscences, or lively respect for the original." This oft-repeated story of Paine's drunkenness, which we believe to have been totally disproved, was reiterated lately in the New York Tribune on the authority of an old journal of Stephen Grellet, a "noted minister of the Society of Friends." It is ministers, we notice, who are so quick to accuse Paine of atheism and drunkenness in one breath. Now we all know that the charge of atheism is grossly and maliciously false, as Paine's works are delictic from beginning to end; and the falsity of the other charge, if for no other reason, might be naturally suspected. In fact, these slanders, which are so evidently prompted by unworthy motives, deserve no more serious answer than this stanza from Robert Burns' "Death and Dr. Horn-book":—

"Some books are lies frae end to end,
And some great lies were never penned;
E'en ministers, they has been kenned,
In holy rapture,
A rousing whid at times to vend,
And naill't wi' Scripture."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VERMONT, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NHB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BRIDGEVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OMAHA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAST CLAIR, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallase.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 BLANK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zuning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. O. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSTOWN, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

The Bible with Reference to Recent Archaeological Discoveries.

TRANSLATED FROM THE "REVUE DES DEUX MONDES" BY KATE NEWELL DOGGETT.

BY JULES SOURY.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

After the religious terror of the reign of Josiah, polytheism, and especially the worship of Baal, was renewed with incomparable splendor, attested by every page of Habakkuk, Zechariah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. "O Judah," cries Jeremiah in the reign of Joachim, "the number of thy gods is as many as of thy cities. As many streets as there are in Jerusalem, so many altars hast thou raised to infamy, altars of incense to Baal." The prophets of Samaria more than ever prophesied in the name of Baal. The more intimate relations of the Hebrews with Phoenicia, Egypt, Assyria, the exchange of religious ideas, the profound scepticism of the sages who, like the author of the book of Job, hardly believed in the necessary dependence of happiness upon piety, and for whom Jehovah, his heaven and his Satan, were only poetical figures, all seemed to conspire together towards the annihilation of the work of the great religious reformers of the eighth and seventh centuries. Happy to exist, careless of the future, gayly drinking his wine under the trellis, accompanied by the Bacchic songs and lascivious dances of the daughters of Syria (Amos v., 5; Isaiah v., 12), the voluptuous sons of Jacob became so profoundly pagan that the prophet, despairing of triumphing over the inveterate habits of idolatry, exclaimed in his discouragement: "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?" (Jer. xiii., 23.)

Those who have read the Bible, particularly the old books, know that in them we are always meeting people ascending to the "high places," or descending from them, prophets or seers at their head, with players upon the flute, the lute, the harp, and the cymbals. Every hill shaded by a thicket of trees, a wood of oak, or terebinth, was a "high place," a bāmāh, where was set up the pillar of Baal beside the (Ez. xx., 29) stake of Asherah. We have spoken of these blocks of stone set up upon the mountains, to which were attached certain legends of the mythologic and heroic times. Sanctuaries were built upon these mountains. Priests sacrificed there. There the people ascended to offer victims and incense to Jehovah and other divinities, especially to Baal and Asherah. This continued to the reign of Josiah, or rather to the epoch of the captivity, 586. In the time of Samuel the most famous "high places" were Ramah, Gilgal, Bethel, and Mizpah. Often the sanctuary of the "high place" was not a temple of stone, but a simple tent. Upon the altars of Baal were set up cippi of stone, images of the sun having the form of a cone or of a pyramid, and typifying flames. The mention of these columns is almost always accompanied by that of the Asherim, symbols of Asherah.

The mountain was Baal's, the wood Asherah's. Baal, or Bel, was the "lord," the "master of heaven"; Baal-Schammam, as all the peoples of Semitic race called him, like the Homeric Apollo, is the god who darts afar his arrows; Baal-Schillekh is the "flaming lord"; Baal-Hamman, as he is called in the inscriptions, is, in one word, the sun (II. Kings xxiii., 5), no longer considered as Molech, the god of destruction and death in the universe, but as father of life, as supreme dispenser of light and heat, as principle and cause of the renewal which every year covers the earth with a luxuriant vegetation.

It is this god, the ancient Baal, or Belitan, to whom the city of Itanos, in Crete, referred its foundation, whom the most ancient Phœnician colonies worshipped. They placed their cities under his protection, and called him Melkarth, "lord of the city." Upon the Babylonian cylinders Bel, father of the gods, holds the circle, the symbol of eternity. Among the Hebrews, to Baal was attributed the influence which the sun exercises upon vegetation and the fruits of the earth, the wheat, the vine, the olive, the fig. Cities of the sun, veritable Heliopolises, were not rare in Palestine. In Syria the worship of the prophet Elias, thanks to the similarity of names, in many places replaced the worship of the sun. The Dahites had openly adopted this latter worship. The story of Samson (Shimshon, from shemesh, sun), the Hercules of their tribe, is a solar myth. Upon the obelisk of Salmezar III, the sun is called lord of the celestial legions, and the word used in the inscription to signify legions corresponds to the Hebrew word Teebāth, "armies," so often in the Bible united to the name of Jehovah.

The Jehovah, Teebāth, of the Hebrews is the sun, the dazzling orb that rules the heavenly host, the moon, the planets, and the stars, which, after the primitive signification of the grand solar myths was lost among the Semites as among the Aryans, was worshipped at Jerusalem in the temple of Jehovah. Ezekiel shows us the worshippers of the sun, the face turned towards the East, prostrate between the porch and the altar. The emblems of the god at Jerusalem were those horses and chariots which the kings of Judah had placed at the entrance of the temple (Ez. viii., 16; Deut. iv., 19; II. Kings xxiii., 11).

Inferior to the ancient Baal, ordinarily designated in the Bible by the word hab-baal, with the article, there is a younger Baal who, under a thousand diverse forms, represents the special and varied action of the sun upon the earth. According to the distinctive characteristic attributed to him by the popular faith, the god bore a different surname. Thence those innumerable Baals in the kingdoms of Israel and Judah to which the prophet refers. "As many as are thy cities, so many are thy gods, O Judah," (Jer. xl., 13). In Phœnicia also, as Renan has shown, every city, every corner of a city, had its worship, which often differed only in words from the neighboring worship, but those words were important. Nomina, nomina. Thus Baal-Berith, adored at Sichem, was the titular god, or Baal, of the political alliance of the tribes; Baal-Zeboub (the Beelzebub of the Gospels, in which the old divinity has become a mere devil,) was a famous oracle at Ekron, in the land of the Philistines, which the king of Israel, Ahaziah, sent to consult. Baal-Peor was the god of the wild pleasures, the unrestrained love that rent the bosom of the virgins. If we except the worship of Asherah, of which we shall speak presently, no deity had more naturalistic rites.

As to the local forms of Baal, Baal-Hamon, Baal-Hazor, etc., they are much more numerous. The name of the deity assessor of Baal—his wife Baalath—is found more than once in the geography of Palestine, and attests the extent and importance of her worship. We will cite only Baalath-Beer, or, as we should say, "Our Lady of the Fountain or Well." The inscriptions tell us of Jaribol, or Jerah-Baal, Baal united to the moon, Astarte; Agibol, or Ezel-Baal, Baal adored under the form of a bullock, etc. Upon the figured monuments we find Baal under the form of a bull; and Asherah under that of a cow.

In the time of the Seleucids, at the epoch of Antiochus Epiphanes (died 97 B.C.), they engraved images of the god, which recall the Hellenic Zeus seated upon his throne with his eagle, and images of Ashtoreth with head crowned with towers.

But the most popular form of Baal, in so far as he represents the annual course of the sun, was that of Adonis (Adōn, Adonai), or rather Tammuz. The Semitic religions were familiar with gods young and beautiful, who died in autumn and rose again in spring. In Palestine, even at Jerusalem, Adonies were celebrated. "There were seated-women weeping for Tammuz," says Ezekiel, speaking of the temple. This worship must have rooted itself deeply in Judea, for it survived the destruction of both temples at Jerusalem, and the dispersion of the Israelites throughout the whole world. From the monastery at Bethlehem, in 398, St. Jerome wrote to Paula that "in the cave where the infant Christ once cried, the lover of Venus was bewailed." He also speaks of a wood, sacred to Tammuz, in the environs of Bethlehem. In the Bible this god is designated as the "Only one" (Jer. vi., 26; Amos viii., 10; Zech. xii., 10; cf. II. Chron. xxxv., 25). The funeral lamentations for this Only one were an universal mourning-feast, especially among the women, who, in the midst of the sobs and cries of the official mourners, repeated, like the refrain of a litaney, "Ah! Lord. Ah! his glory!" (Jer. xxii., 18; xxxiv., 5). These lamentations were "a custom in Israel." The daughters of Israel every year wept four days for the daughter of Jephthah, whom the Samaritans worshipped as a goddess.

It was at Byblos, a holy city to which pilgrimages were made by the inhabitants of Lebanon, who seem to have resembled the Hebrews more closely than the Canaanites of Tyre, Sidon, and Aradus, especially in the valley of the river Adonis, that the most venerated sanctuaries of the god were erected. In an admirable page of his Mission of Phœnicia, M. Renan describes these mountains of Lebanon, these smiling Alps, and the race inhabiting Byblos, "animated, wide-awake, good, sensuous, among whom we find recurring types as in Egypt." Speaking of the country, he says: "The infinite charm of Nature leads ever to the thought of death, conceived not as cruel, but as a sort of dangerous attraction to which one yields, and lulls himself to sleep. There religious emotions float between voluptuousness, sleep, and tears. To-day, even, the Syriac hymns I have heard sung in honor of the Virgin are a sort of tearful sigh, a broken sob."

In the valley still exist numerous remains of these "tombs of Adonis," "holy sepulchres," to which the women of the old mysteries, in the intoxication of a voluptuous grief, came, to cover with tears and kisses the cenotaph of the beautiful youth whom a savage beast, a bear, or a wild boar had killed upon the mountain, and whose blood reddened the water of the river. (Every year after the rainy season the Nahr-Ibrahim takes on a reddish tint.) The piety of the people of Lebanon had certainly localized in many places the death of Adonis. At Ghineh, upon the walls of rock, the passion of the god is sculptured. Upon one side a man clothed in a short tunic, with lance in rest, receives the attack of a bear; upon the other a woman seated, in an attitude of grief,—Baalath, the inconsolable spouse of the god of light and life, "the great goddess," the celestial goddess, as the inscriptions of Syria call her; the lover, fevered with amorous desire, who will not be comforted, who will not, cannot, believe the death of the beloved, and who is everywhere seeking her Adonis, as Isis sought her Osiris, and Cybele her Atys.

After the harvest in autumn, when from the heights of ether the paling sun sends only feeble rays to mourning Nature, the fêtes of Adonis took place at Byblos. To represent symbolically the death of the god, women planted in vases lettuce, barley, and fennel, and exposed these plants upon the terraces of the houses. Soon, faded and withered, these plants were the image of the dead god. In the sanctuary clouds of incense rose around the death-bed where, upon carpets "softer than sleep," lay the simulacrum of Adonis, embalmed in myrrh, and pungent perfumes and aromatic herbs of enervating odor. Later, they lowered the god into a sepulchral chamber. On the seventh day Adonis rose again. Then burst forth those accents of delirious joy which in the Orient follow "hard upon" groans and sobs. Every woman, not merely the hired weepers for Adonis, must sacrifice her hair to the god, or for a whole day abandon herself to strangers, and consecrate to Baalath the price of the sanctified prostitution.

As the god of spring, Adonis had a second fête to which the month of May was consecrated. The devouring ardor of June, month which among the Arameans was called haziran, or month of the wild boar, was killing the sun of the young year which they wept in July under the name of Tammuz. This month in the Syrian and Hebrew calendar bore the name of the god, which is, as we know, of Chaldeo-Assyrian origin. It was this feast of Tammuz which was celebrated at Jerusalem and in all Palestine, as in Syria and Phœnicia, and which penetrated even to Babylonia. It is to the myth of Adonis, or Tammuz, killed by a wild boar in the forests of Lebanon, that the prohibition, still in force among the Israelites, must be referred. That which would seem to prove that this prohibition is not the result of a hygienic necessity, but the effect of a mythological idea, is that we find the same custom among all the peoples where the worship of Adonis penetrated, whatever may be the soil and the climate; among the Phœnicians and Syrians as among the Arabs; among the Sabians as in the island of Cyprus.

III.

The good goddess Asherah, the Baalath of Baal, less tearful than the spouse of Adonis, was neither less tender nor less voluptuous. Every year made fruitful by the celestial lover, she exhales the joy, the serenity, the profound peace of the mother-goddesses of the Aryan race, of our Demeter, for instance. And, in fact, whether as divinity assessor of the god of light, of warmth, and of life, or as spouse of Baal, Asherah is no other than Nature waking from the heavy sleep of winter. Under the warm rays of April she awakes; she hears the rustling of innumerable germs, the seeds of things which move in her bosom; and while her body, bathed in the luminous air, covers itself with a new vegetation, she causes the fish to breed in the viscous water of the havens, and heightens the ardor of the doves whose nests people the black cypresses. Like Isis, this goddess might be called "Myrionymos." At Nineveh she was Belit; at Askalon, Derketo. Hence, women recovering from childbirth, lepers, etc., brought doves and pigeons to the temple. Hence the ancient worship of fish, very popular in all Syria, has maintained itself to our times in the village of Deschon, and in a little musselman mosque near Tripoli.

Identical at bottom with the Astarte of the Phœnicians, the Tanit, or Rabat-Tanit, of Carthage, the Allat (Allāhet) of the Arabs, the Baaltis of Byblos, the Syrian goddess of Hieropolis, and the Mylitta (Zarpanit) of Assyria, Asherah must, nevertheless, be distinguished from all her divine sisters. Among peoples so devoid of plastic imagination and artistic sense, the gods remained always in the condition of vague, indetermined forms. No precision in the contour, no sensible determination, nothing that recalls the life and personality of the Homeric gods.

The Semitic divinities resembled rather those gods of the infancy of the Aryan race, those divinities without substance of the Vedas, in which Varuna, Indra, Agni are confounded with each other, and in which the god invoked—Indra, Savitri, or Roudra—is always the highest and most powerful of the gods. We may also compare them to the Greek Titans; to Okeanos, Helios, Gea; or, better still, to the divine abstractions of the Romans,—Fides, Virtus, etc. It is very difficult to distinguish with precision the diverse divinities of the Semitic pantheon. In the Bible, as we have seen, El, Baal, Molech, and Jehovah are frequently confounded, one with another. There are, however, at least three distinct gods, though from the distinctions we discern, so to say, only differences in the same thing, modifications, delicate approximations, often subtle, but not arbitrary, and resting, as in the case of Ashera, upon solid historical and geographical arguments.

This goddess, whose worship in the kingdoms of Judah and of Israel was associated with that of Baal, and even with that of Jehovah (Deut. xiv., 21; II. Kings xxi., 7; xxiii., 15; xvii., 18), belonged originally to the Canaanite tribes of the South, but not at all to Phœnicia or the country of the Philistines. Banned by the pietistic kings Hezekiah and Josiah, she had, nevertheless, altars and worshippers everywhere, even in the temple of Jerusalem down to the captivity of Babylon, since Jeremiah speaks of her, and in Deuteronomy, a century after Isaiah, the setting up of her symbol near the altar of Jehovah was forbidden. As we do not read her name in any classic author, we may conclude that the worship of Ashera had almost entirely disappeared before the Hellenic period in the Orient.

Astarte (Ashtoreth), who was never popular among the Hebrews, is known only from Greek writers. We find the Astarte of the Phœnicians in the plural name of the double Istar of Assyria, the Istar of Arbēes, and that of Nineveh; the warlike character of the first corresponds very well to the Astarte of Phœnicia; the voluptuous character of the second to the good goddess Ashera of Palestine. These two faces of the feminine divinity of the Semites appear also in Anat, goddess assessor of Anu, who enters into a great number of the proper names of Palestine, and whose two aspects, corresponding to the two sides of her divine rôle, we may study upon the Egyptian pillars of the nineteenth dynasty. Here she is represented naked, full face, like the Zarpanit of Babylon, standing upon a lion passant, with one or two serpents in the left hand, and a bouquet of lotus in the right; there she is clothed, helmeted, armed with lance, buckler, and battle-axe.

The books of Samuel and of the Kings tell us clearly that Astarte is a foreign divinity worshipped by the Phœnicians and the Philistines. Although the name of Astarte, either alone or associated with Baal, appears early in the Bible (Judges x., 8), it is nowhere mentioned in the Pentateuch. The goddess, however, was known from a remote antiquity upon the shores of Syria and to the east of the Jordan, where we find the village of Ashteroth-Karnaim, two-horned Astarte, mentioned in Genesis. A passage in Sanchoniathon represents Astarte with the head of a bull or a cow. No doubt, originally she was a celestial rather than a telluric divinity like Ashera. In Phœnicia and the Phœnician colonies, the horns of Astarte typified the waxing of the moon. Thence the names of Luna, Selene, celestial Aphrodite, which have been given her by Greek and Latin writers. It was Solomon who introduced officially, as it were, the worship of Astarte at Jerusalem, and till the time of Josiah the goddess had a temple in that city. It is she assuredly whom Jeremiah calls the queen of the heavens, "mele cheth ha-schaimaim." The prophet depicts the children gathering wood, the fathers lighting the fire, and the women kneading the dough to make the cakes of the sacrifice which they offered, with libations and incense, to the goddess. What were "the blessings of the moon" which the Israelites still recite from the sixth to the seventh day of each new moon, in the evening at moonrise, but a relic of this old nature-worship? They repeat thrice, "Let that be a good omen for us and for all Israel." In addressing this prayer to the new moon, the Israelite stretches out his hands towards it, and, with eyes fixed upon the heavenly crescent, adds: "May fear and terror fall upon my enemies! May they become motionless as stones! Selah! Selah! Selah!"

From I. Samuel xxxi., 10, we see that the Philistines, who also worshipped this goddess, deposited in her temple the arms and spoils of the conquered. This warlike character is one of the features which may serve to distinguish Astarte from Ashera. It was in the temple of Astarte, perhaps at Askalon, where was the oldest temple of the goddess, that the arms of Saul were placed, while, according to the chronicle, the head of the hero was sent to the temple of Dagon. This strange god, whose name clearly indicates his character and form (dog, fish), had famous temples, served by a great number of priests at Ashdod, Gaza, Askalon, etc. The names of places, Kephar-Dagon, Beth-Dagon, prove that his worship was widely diffused in Palestine in the time of the Judges. It is now known that this god is, with Marduk, one of the secondary forms of the Demiurge Bel of Babylon. Dagon's head was crowned with the tiara; both hands were free, not attached to the body, which from the trunk to the lower extremity represented the tail of a fish. This god is found upon the Phœnician medals, the bass-reliefs of Nineveh, and the Babylonian cylinders. The assessor goddess Derketo had the same form. They are Semitic divinities of very great antiquity, whose nature could not well be determined till after an immediate study of the monuments of Nineveh and Babylon.

As to Ashera, we only know her from some Hebrew texts of the Bible. Her symbol was set up under the shade of green trees, upon high hills, beside the pillar of Baal. As a telluric divinity manifesting her power, especially in vegetation, she was adored in woods and forests. The worship of trees disappeared very late in Syria. If the books of the Kings and the Chronicles scarcely speak of it, it is not so in the older books of the Judges, of Samuel, and Genesis. Every tree, every sacred wood was in ancient days a place of sacrifice. When Abraham came to establish himself under the oaks of Mamre, he built there an altar. The grove which the patriarch planted at Beersheba, where Isaac erected an altar, had become in the time of the prophet Amos one of the most renowned centres of idolatrous worship. In the time of Joshua the holy ark was under the oaks and the terebinths of Sichem. It was under a tree "which was near the ark of Jehovah" that the hero set up a stone, saying to the people: "Behold, this stone shall serve as a witness, for it has heard all the words of Jehovah that he has spoken with us" (Josh. xxiv., 32). The famous black stone of the Kaaba of the anti-Islamites also had eyes and ears. In the time of the Judges, it was under the oaks of Sichem (Shechem) that the Sichemites gathered themselves together to deliberate upon public affairs. There was there a road called the road of Elon-Meonim,—"oaks of the soothsayers." The prophetess Deborah delivers her oracles under a palm-tree. The murmur of the trees serves as an oracle to David. The largest, tallest trees, the evergreens, have been worshipped as gods. A great number of Semitic myths are attached to vegetables. The pomegranate, remarkable for the richness of its seed, was consecrated to Adonis and Aphrodite. The almond which, when all Nature seems lifeless, is first to come forth from the sleep of winter, the amygdala (that is, "the great mother") has given birth to a host of Semitic legends. That among the cedars and cypresses of Lebanon some may have been worshipped for their great age or their beauty, is apparent from some passages of Isaiah and Habakkuk (Is. xiv., 8; xxvii., 24; Heb. ii., 27).

Upon the site of the sacred groves, near the venerated trees, were erected the sanctuaries of the divinities which successively have been worshipped in those places from Ashera, Baal, and Jehovah, to St. George, Mary, and Christ. In the Lebanon a chapel has always replaced a ruined temple. A century-old carob tree, a little wood of oaks or laurel, ordinarily shade these ruins. Sozomenus speaks of a pagan festival that in the time of Constantine was celebrated under the oaks of Mamre. It was a sort of fair to which crowds came, where oxen, rams, and sheep were sacrificed, with libations and incense.

In spite of Judaism, Christianity, and Islamism, the veneration for trees has continued in Palestine. Every traveller has seen these isolated trees to which the inhabitants offer a veritable worship. It is not rare in this country to find them covered with rags and shreds of cloth. These rags have been suspended to the branches by Arabs or Syrians to drive away fever, or to obtain the cure of certain maladies.

In Palestine the woods belonged to the worship of Ashera. That explains why, in mentioning this worship, the Bible often speaks of verdant trees, of trees with thick foliage, of oaks, poplars, terebinths, under the shade of which the priestesses of Ashera observed the voluptuous rites of the good goddess (II. Kings xvi., 4; Jer. ii., 20; iii., 16; Ezek. xx., 28; Hosea iv., 13). These sanctuaries of Ashera were charming places, shady thickets often watered by a flowing stream, mysterious asylums from which issued no sound save the cooing of the doves sacred to the goddess. The symbol of Ashera, a simple stake, a trunk of a tree despoiled of its leaves and branches, was the emblem of generative power. It was also consecrated, as the symbol of the fertility of Nature, to all the sister goddesses of Ashera, to Astarte, to the Syrian goddess, to her of Cyprus, etc. Ashera is the Istar of Nineveh, the voluptuous Istar, called also Asurit, "the lucky," "good fortune." Upon the stela of Mera we read Astar-Kamos. Istar has been identified with the Athtar of the Hymyaritic inscriptions (II. Kings xvi., 4; Jer. ii., 20; iii., 16-18; Ezek. xx., 28; vi., 13; Hos. iv., 13). According to M. Merx, Ashera can signify only "the bringer of good luck," the goddess who gives happiness.

The symbol of Ashera was not rarer in Palestine than was that of her divine sisters in Phœnicia, in Syria, in Egypt, and among nearly all the peoples of the earth. These symbolic stakes later became idols, as among the Latins; they were placed in gardens and vineyards. Jeremiah and Isaiah, like Horace, scoff at these "gods of the gardens." Those used as objects of worship were always of wood; hence the words, "to cut," "to tear up," "to burn," constantly recurring in the Bible when the destruction of the Acherem is spoken of. The size of these idols must often have been considerable. Of the cut wood of an Ashera, which ten men had helped him cast down, Gideon constructed an altar upon which he offered a holocaust of an ox; but later, under the kings of Judah and Israel, the symbol of Ashera certainly became an object of common reverence to be found in every house. So in the provinces of France we see on the highway and in the public squares pieces of wood that serve as altars for the processions of Corpus Christi and gigantic crosses; while under the porch of the church the vendors of religious trumpery sell for a few sous little Christs of wood or metal. The rich women of Israel, the wives of the bourgeois of Jerusalem, carried upon their persons symbols of Ashera in gold or silver, a kind of "medals of the Virgin" of those days, which were at the same time ornaments and objects of devotion (Ezek. xvi., 17). This worship has generally been the affair of women, as witnesses the history of the queen Maacha (I. Kings xv., 13; II. Chron. xv., 16). The son of this queen, a pietistic king of Judah, Asa, cut to pieces and burned in the valley of Kedron the idol which this pious princess had caused to be made for Ashera. In the spring, as with us on rogation-days, long processions of priests and hierodules walked in the field where the wheat was beginning to form shrines of Adonis, represented by a symbol of the same kind.

After human sacrifices, consecrated prostitution is the essential characteristic of the primitive religion of the Beni-Israel. The same was true of the other families of the Semitic races; but we speak only of the Jews and Syrians. Truly it is not without reason that in Deuteronomy (xxiii., 17), a book of edifying piety, written some years before the captivity of Babylon, prostitution is forbidden to the sons and daughters of Israel.

Goddess of the fertilized earth, Ashera was also of conception. François Lenormant remarks that the Mylitta of Herodotus reproduces very exactly the epithet Mulidit, "the generatrix," borne by the great Nature-goddess of Assyria, Belit, mother of all gods and of all beings. Considered as Mulidit, Belit, in the religion of Babylonia, was confounded with Zarpanit, or Zirbanit, the producer of germs, associated as spouse with Bel-Marduk. Upon the Babylonian cylinders Zarpanit is represented naked, full face, both hands upon the breast. This goddess, to whom was consecrated the tents of the girls, in Babylonia is also invoked as presiding over childbirth, and her prerogative as Lucina has made Diodorus Siculus identify her with Here. In the inscriptions discovered at Babylon among the ruins of the temple of the goddess, we read a prayer (translated by Oppert), which fully confirms this character. In the same inscription we find the singular of the word which in the Bible designates the tents of which we speak. The sanctuary of Zarpanit was a sort of caravansary, a large building furnished with cells. Cells of the same kind, serving the same purpose, existed at Jerusalem in the very temple of Jehovah, where Ashera had her symbol, and was worshipped. Josiah demolished the houses of the prostitutes which were in the temple of Jehovah, where the women wove tents for Ashera (II. Kings xxvii., 7).

The prostitutes were of both sexes. The men were called kedeschim, the women kedeschoth; that is, "set apart, devoted, consecrated." From Deuteronomy we learn that both brought to the treasury of the temple of Jehovah the proceeds of their prostitution. That paid in part the expenses of the worship at Jerusalem, as at Byblos, Carthage, Paphos, Hieropolis. These expenses must have been enormous, if we may judge from the sumptuous character of the religious ceremonies, and the almost infinite number of priests of all ranks, and slaves of both sexes. At Comana, in Cappadocia, Strabo saw not less than six thousand of them. In Armenia and the neighboring countries, where the worship of Anaitis, the Babylonian Anat, wife of Anu, ascending towards the North with the influence of the Chaldeo-Assyrian civilization, had reached a development as considerable as at Comana in Cappadocia, at Comana in Pontus, and at Zela, the goddess possessed around her temple a vast territory, cultivated by numerous hierodules,—consecrated slaves or serfs of the goddess. The worship of Anaitis was accompanied by prostitutions similar to those of Babylon.

There were different classes of priests. At the head of the hierarchy a high priest, next in rank to the king, as at Comana in Cappadocia, which office was often hereditary, as among the Hebrews, in Phœnicia, at Paphos; next came the priests and theopores,—the divinely inspired; then those who, like the Levites of Israel, fulfilled inferior functions in the temple, the singers, the players upon the flute, harp, etc.; those who cut down and split the wood for the pyres upon which the flesh of the victims was burned; those who brought water for the lustrations; finally, the nethinim, or slaves, of the temple. The priests of every important sanctuary possessed as their own one or several cities, with a considerable domain, whose population, laborers, or shepherds were vassals of the temple. We know that the Levites could reside in a great number of cities situated in the territory of the tribes of Israel, with the right of pasturage outside the walls of each of these cities. They possessed forty-two cities, and six cities of refuge. They also levied tithes of the fruits of the fields and gardens, and of domestic animals.

Among the priests some lived in the temple; others worked here and there in the fields and cities, taking service where they found it (Jud. xvii., 18). For in ancient days every head of a family who could maintain one or several priests in his family did not fail to do so. Micah bought one, a Bethlehemite of Judah, for ten pieces of silver a year. Micah had under his roof an idol of brass, doubtless a bull, an ephod, and teraphim (I. Sam. xix., 13-18; Jud. xvii., 3-6; xviii., 17-20; Zech. x., 2; I. Sam. xv., 22, 23; II. Kings xxiii., 24; Ezra xxi., 19), so that to the people of the country his house was a house of the gods,—Beth-Elohim. But the bands of hierodules were composed above all of kedeschim. Several times expelled from the kingdom of Judah by pietistic princes, like Asa and Josaphat, they were still there in great numbers in the last days of the kings, since in Deuteronomy they are pointed out as living in the temple itself, at Jerusalem. The Sacred Book gives to these devotees of Ashera the significant name of "dogs." These consecrated cinéti wore women's garments of brilliant colors; about the head they wore a turban of linen or yellow silk; they painted the face and put antimony around the eyes. Who does not know the myth of Hercules and Omphale? Who does not know that the union of Adonis and Astarte was figured by hermaphrodite representations? The Aphrodite of Cyprus had a beard upon the chin. Hence the prohibition in Deut. xxii., 5: "A woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man; neither shall a man put on a woman's garment."

These kedeschim went through the cities and villages, preceded by trumpeters and flute-players. With arms naked to the shoulder, they brandished knives, whips garnished with little bones—a sort of scourge,—and danced in the streets to the sound of a savage music of flutes, rattles, citherns, fifes, cymbals, and tabors. Reaching the court of a farm-house, or a public square, they filled the air with cries, and, with head thrown back and neck twisted, cut their arms with the knives. The most infuriated of the band, dripping with blood, began to prophesy (I. Kings xviii., 28). The whole ended with alms-begging, by which the kedeschim collected figs, oil, cheese, and bits of money. The female slaves, the kedeschoth, also roamed through the country playing the psaltery, cymbals, and double flute. The Syrian women of antiquity had the reputation of being good musicians. These bayaderes seem to have been very numerous in the cities of Phœnicia and Judea. Isaiah xxiii., 16, has preserved for us a fragment of a popular song of which they were the subject: "Take an harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered."

We have tried to demonstrate that the primitive religion of the children of Israel, like that of Chaldeæ and Assyria, was a naturalistic religion, in which the sidereal element dominated. And yet we have said nothing of the worship of the stars and constellations of the zodiac in "celestial mansions," which the people of Jehovah adored upon the terraces of the houses and in the courts of the temple of Jerusalem, as they were worshipped on the shores of the Euphrates and Tigris. Among the divinities which in the Chaldeo-Assyrian religious system are placed below Bel, we find the god of fate, Menn, associated with the goddess of fortune, Gad, of whom Isaiah speaks; Bau, who is evidently the chaos of Genesis; Ueu, the Esau of the mythological epoch of the Bible; Kimmur, the god of the constellation of the serpent, or rather of the Pleiades of the book of Job, etc. We have said nothing of the sacred rivers which, like the Adonis of Gebel, and the Bélus of St. Jean d'Acre, bore the name of a divinity. Bathing seven times in the waters of Jordan cured of leprosy (II. Kings v., 10; xli., 14). We have said nothing of Lake Méron, and the other lakes consecrated to the goddesses of Aekalon and Hierapolis; nor of the venerated source of the Jordan, and the other fountains, equally holy, of Palestine. We have recalled that sacrifices were offered upon the hills and mountains, and that all the famous temples of the Semites were built upon high places; but we have not spoken of Moriah, of Tabor, of Horeb, of all those holy mountains where Jehovah revealed himself in fire to his worshippers. He dwelt forever upon the mountain of Bashan (Ps. lxxviii., 17). He showed himself in all his majesty to the eyes of the man in the thicket of Cape Theou-Protopon—Phaniel or Phaniel—face of El. A ramification of snowy Hermon is called the mountain of Baal-Hermon (Judges iii., 8), and was still in the fourth century of the Christian era revered as a god by the Syro-Phœnician people. In Jewish tradition this mountain became a sort of Brocken where, as upon Walpurgis-Nacht, angels were united to the daughters of men. The Hebrews certainly worshipped Lebanon as a god. Carmel, where in the first century of our era there still existed a celebrated oracle, was, says Tacitus, both a mountain and a god (I. Kings xviii., 32; Micah vii., 14).

Finally, after having studied the divinities of the heavens, the rivers, the lakes, the springs, and the mountains, it would still be necessary to learn what were those divinities of the plains and the forests, those satyrs, of which we read in Isaiah, bounding here and there in the desert, calling to and meeting each other in the solitudes (Isaiah xlii., 21; xxxiv., 14). The Hebrews were familiar with the spectres of the morning, the demons of noon-day, and the swarms of malevolent spirits of the night. The Babylonian and Phœnician divinities among the Jews, and, later, among the first Christians, often became demons. François Lenormant informs us upon this subject that, in the magic formulas of the silver leaf of Jewish origin in the Campana collection of the Louvre, the serpent-shaped demons are called barbar, an Accadian appellation of the god Marduk (the planet Jupiter). The Hebrews have in their demonology a strange and truly Semitic monster, Lilit, originally one of the wives of the Assyrian god Samas, the sun, in which we see the night, a sort of ghoul, a nocturnal larva which takes the form and dress of a young bride; a demon of lewdness and cruelty, who cunningly kills children; and leads astray in the desert the belated traveller, watches him in the darkness when sleep overcomes him, enfolds him in its spectral arms, and drinks his life in a kiss of fire.

The deciphering of the cuneiform inscriptions, and the study of the monuments of Chaldeæ, Assyria, and Phœnicia, would offer us many other subjects of profound meditation, if we should interrogate those sciences upon the oldest cosmogonic myths of the Semitic peoples. The two recitals of the creation in the Hebrew Genesis, the tradition of the deluge, the construction of the Tower of Babel, the notion of the "god-law" Thouro, or Thora, the ten antediluvian patriarchs identical with the ten antediluvian kings of Babylon, whose sidereal and zodiacal character cannot be mistaken,—are so many questions of Oriental archaeology whose last elements are reducible to the Chaldeo-Assyrian theology and mythology.

The mythology of the Semites, less rich certainly than that of the Aryans, is, nevertheless, one of those studies of infinite importance, without which we can scarcely comprehend the historic development of the peoples of the Occident. The old nations of Asia have not merely given us our actual religions. Did not the Greeks who have civilized us owe their civilization to Phœnicia, Assyria, and Egypt? If to us there is an abyss between the monuments of Asiatic art and the grand, ideal art of the Hellenes; if a science empirical and without general ideas cannot be compared with the scientific conceptions of the world of a Democritus or an Aristotle; if the astronomical tables and medical prescriptions leave us very far from the Treatise upon Heaven, the Physics, and the History of Animals,—nevertheless these works of Greek genius and all the ulterior progress of Western civilization presuppose a slow and laborious initiation, during which the Hellenes must have learned to read, to write, to reckon, to measure, to make astronomical observations. Egypt and Chaldeæ had an advance of several thousand years over Greece. Thus it is always towards these ancient civilizations of the Orient we must go back, when to understand what is we must know what has been.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

AGGRESSIVE SABBATARIANISM.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY:

Gentlemen,—The "Circular" recently addressed to you by the Sabbatarians of Philadelphia, in the name of the Methodist and Presbyterian clergy, together with a number of religious societies, asking you to discontinue your public exhibitions in the Zoological Garden on Sundays, contains statements which are not only incorrect in themselves, but would, if acted on as they desire, be injurious to the rights of other people. I propose very briefly to review them.

I. Under the first head it is boldly alleged that "such exhibitions are in open violation of God's most sacred law concerning the Sabbath."

This is a terrible charge to bring against a set of respectable and conscientious men such as those who compose the Zoological Society; and it becomes an arrogant assumption, when it is remembered that it is made in the face and teeth of both the teachings and practice of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, as they are recorded in the New Testament. It ignores the fact altogether, and by ignoring it attempts to impress a falsehood on the public mind, that all the Church Fathers of the sixteenth century, illustrious for their knowledge of the Scriptures, and especially John Calvin and Martin Luther, taught that the Christian religion, as distinguished from Judaism, knows no "Sabbath" of a single day in the week, but that every day is holy unto the Lord. Who but bigoted ecclesiastics, believing that the end sanctifies the means, could so misrepresent the doctrines of the New Testament, ignore the facts of history, and so arrogate to themselves wisdom and authority superior to all the rest of the world? The "Circular" alleges under the same head that "the Fourth Commandment [of the Decalogue] is of universal and perpetual obligation, and has never been abrogated." But the Sabbatarians themselves, knowingly and notoriously, trample upon the law of the Sabbath as contained in the Fourth Commandment, every week of their lives. For the law says expressly that "the seventh day is the Sabbath," whereas they have annulled it by changing it to the first day of the week without the least warrant of authority whatever.

The Sabbath law, moreover, when it was in force upon the Jews, required, in explicit terms, that no work should be done by man or beast on the Sabbath,—"In it thou shalt do no manner of work." But the Sabbatarians in the "Circular" have the presumption, in defiance of the clear text and spirit of the law, to except what they call "works of necessity and mercy," and proceed to kindle fires in their habitations on the Sabbath, cook victuals, travel in carriages, by steam and horse-power, and do many other things for which they would have been put to death had they lived in Israel when this Sabbath law was in force. Yet, in the face of their own transgressions of the law, they have the hardihood to ask you to shut the gates of your Zoological Garden against students of Natural History, who may wish to go there on Sunday to acquaint themselves with God in the works of his hands, in preference to accepting the bribe of good music, and listening to the commonplaces and inanities of the pulpit.

II. The Sabbatarians allege, in the second place, that "your Sabbath exhibitions are in violation of the laws of Pennsylvania."

How is it, then, that church-trains, street-cars, ferry-boats, bridge-companies, to say nothing of bridge-building, Monday newspapers, which do all their work on Sunday, all pay and receive money for service rendered without being called to account for breaking the State law? How comes it, too, that the Sabbatarian church-members to so great an extent all over the Commonwealth hold stock in companies of all kinds that make money by violating the law, while their religious sensibilities are terribly shocked at an orderly crowd of people visiting the Zoological Garden for study and recreation on a bright Sunday morning? Verily, the men who can line their pockets with bank-bills gotten by violating "the laws of God and man" on a large scale, and yet condemn you for opening your doors to all comers on Sunday, are related in spirit to that distinguished class of strict religionists who were so ticklish in their tastes that they strained out an infinitesimal gnat from their cup of water, while they had mouths big enough to swallow down a camel, hump, hoofs, and all!

III. The Sabbatarians, in their Encyclical Letter and Syllabus Errorum say, in the third place, that they "believe your Society has no more right to open its garden for gain on the Lord's day, than any merchant or mechanic has to open his place of business for gain," etc.

This truism only has the effect to show the emptiness of the argument set forth. For if, as Jesus Christ so plainly taught, all days are alike holy under the New Testament dispensation, there is no more sin in a clothier selling a garment, or a butcher a joint of meat, on Sunday, than there is in visiting the Zoological Garden, or selling tickets for railroad travel on Sunday, and distributing the profits pro rata among those of the Sabbatarians who are stockholders in such companies.

IV. The "Circular" says, in the next place, that "such desecration of the Lord's day [in showing the animals], if imitated, would lead to the virtual abrogation of all religion."

What a presumptuous assertion is this that the sacred and precious sentiment of true religion, which, according to the teaching of Christ, consisted entirely in love to God and love to man, depends, for its existence on the earth, upon the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath, in the way and spirit practiced by the Sabbatarians! What an unprovoked insult these men offer to all the Jews, all the Seventh-day Baptists, and all the outsiders, who, disgusted with the emptiness and hypocrisy of the churches, prefer to worship in botanical and zoological gardens, and in the groves which are still God's temples!

Philadelphia has a population of 800,000 souls. It has 400 churches of all sects, Catholic and Protestant, which, if every seat were occupied, would only accommodate 300,000 persons. Here, then, are 500,000 of our people who could find no admittance into the churches if they wished to go! And yet, when the laboring classes, who, during all the week are creating wealth for their employers, rise from their beds on Sunday morning, wash off the grime of toil, and take their wives and children to the Zoological Garden to enjoy instruction and recreation in each others' society, and in the fresh, free air of heaven, these Sabbatarians, in defiance of the clear doctrine of the New Testament, would chase them back again to their homes, for there is no room for them in the churches! Verily, the tender mercies of these men are cruel.

V. The "Circular," in the fifth place, alleges that "your example, if followed, would soon rob the laboring man of his needed day of rest."

What a dishonest and shameless misrepresentation of fact is this! By closing their churches against 500,000 of the people of Philadelphia; by shutting the gates of the Zoological Garden and the International Exhibition against them on the only day they can conveniently visit them; by closing other places of improvement in knowledge and taste,—these anti-Christian Sabbatarians themselves insult and degrade the masses, throw obstacles in the way of their progress, and by breaking their spirit would soon rob them of their day of rest, and prepare them to become hewers of wood and drawers of water to the lordly and unscrupulous rich. For history teaches us that, if the masses of mankind are treated as brutes, they will soon degenerate into brutes in their feelings and ways.

VI. The Sabbatarians in their authoritative "Circular" say they "regard your Sabbath exhibitions as exceedingly demoralizing to the community at large, old and young, by tempting the masses to forsake their places of worship," etc.

But is there any tendency to immorality in the act of visiting the Zoological Garden on Sunday, and studying the animals that are kept there for exhibition? Or, if such a visitor, after leaving the grounds, gets drunk, and becomes criminal, could the Pharisees justly blame the garden and the animals for it? According to this argument, joining the Church and going the round of religious ceremonies on the Sabbath would be a preventive of, or a cure for, demoralization of all kinds. Whereas it is a notorious fact that a large number of the Credit Mobilier bribe-takers, the Freedman's Bank thieves, defaulters, and ring-masters, who plunder the public money by the million, are members of the Church in full communion, and good and regular standing, and distinguished "Christian" statesmen! Indeed, membership in the Church, and zeal in observing its ceremonies, seem to be the leverage which the tribe of scoundrels know so well how to use in gaining the confidence of the credulous that they may the more effectually rob them of their money. Witness our distinguished brother Winslow, and the rest of his class of thieves and liars. Some of them when detected in their roguery, and exposed before all Israel and the sun, instead of imitating the decency of their illustrious predecessor, the Rev. Judas Iscariot, who took a rope and went out and hanged himself, send round for the prayers of the Church that their fall may be specially sanctified to their future use, to the glory of God, and the peace and welfare of our beloved Zion.

VII. The seventh charge against the Directors of the Zoological Society is that "such exhibitions as they give on Sunday encourage the masses to disregard God's right to one-seventh part of our time."

What an anthropomorphic idea of God we have here! What a low and ignoble conception of him who filleth immensity with his presence, that, like a greedy old curmudgeon, he comes chaffering into court with a disputed claim to one-seventh part of his creatures' time, which he feels afraid he shall be robbed of! This is the view of the character of God as given to the world by the Sunday School Union, the American Tract Society, and the Methodist and Presbyterian clergymen of the city of Philadelphia in the seventy-sixth year of the nineteenth century after Christ! Is such a God any more worthy of worship than the Chinese Joss? No wonder the men who worship such a being, and require others to do so, wind up their imbecile paragraph by a laughable attempt to hurl against their fellow-citizens who reject their grovelling conceptions "the just and awful judgments of God."

VIII. The eighth and last reason in the "Circular" for urging the Directors to close the Zoological Garden on Sunday is, that they "wish to show the gathered nations during the Centennial Year what Christianity has done for us in the way of establishing civil and religious liberty," etc.

If the Directors of the Zoological Garden, and the Centennial Commissioners of the Exhibition shall, in obedience to a handful of Sabbatarians, remarkable only for their bigotry and audacity, shut their gates respectively on Sunday, it will indeed be a showing that the Church, in defiance of the teachings and example of Christ and his Apostles, as recorded in the New Testament, has succeeded in a hundred years after the founding of a free government, in subjecting the American people to a spiritual vassalage which would not be tolerated for an hour any where else on earth!

A. B. B.

A LETTER FROM GLASGOW.

GLASGOW, 9th April, 1876.

DEAR INDEX:—

The second triennial school-board election is now in progress all over Scotland, and proves the engrossing theme of interest. The first election, which took place three years ago when I was with you in America, followed immediately on the passing of the Scotch Education Act. Previous to that, the only public schools we had in Scotland were the parish schools, in connection with, and under the supervision of, the Established Church; and, like it, endowed out of a rate levied on the land-owners in the parish. The Act disestablished the connection between the Church and the school, placed the latter under the control of a board to be elected by the inhabitants of each town or district, provided for its maintenance by a special rate, and rendered education compulsory. The great defect in the act is that it does not restrict the education to be imparted in the public school to purely secular subjects. Unwilling, probably, to incur the odium of such an enactment, Parliament left it to each school-board to decide whether religious instruction, and what kind of religious instruction, should find a place in the schools under its charge; and thus entailed on every parish in the country a little theological war at three-year intervals,—a state of matters which is likely to last for many years to come.

In Glasgow we have just elected our second board; but, before I proceed to speak of it, I shall recur to the election of the first board, so as to put a connected view of the subject before your readers. Before doing so, however, I may premise that the constituency consists of every man and woman of full age who owns or occupies a house of the annual value of £4 sterling ($20), which is in effect equivalent to universal suffrage. As there are fifteen candidates to be elected, each elector has fifteen votes, which he can dispose of as he pleases, giving one vote each to fifteen candidates, or fifteen votes to one candidate, or dividing them among any other number to suit himself. Should a voter, however, chance to record more than fifteen votes, his paper is vitiated. This is styled the cumulative system of voting, and is admirably adapted to secure the representation of minorities.

Being a new thing three years ago, the first election elicited a far greater amount of enthusiasm than the present one. The churches, of course, came to the front with a multiplicity of candidates pledged to uphold "Use and Wont," i. e., Bible and Catechism instruction for half an hour or an hour every morning, opening the schools, and even the meetings of the board, with prayer, and so on. Every individual who had an educational hobby to ride sought to get himself put in nomination. The Scotch Education League, a body since defunct, representing the more cultured minds, notably patronized by the University professors, put forward seven or eight candidates in favor of religious, but opposed to sectarian or dogmatic instruction. These were willing to retain the Bible, but objected to any comments on the lesson read, and altogether excluded the Catechism. The Catholics nominated three members, and in opposition to them the Orangemen were asked to record their votes on behalf of their hired lecturer or missionary, a fellow named Long, whose business it is to hold open-air meetings, at which he denounces Catholicism, and on occasions Secularism (the nearest thing we have here to Free Religion) also. Only the other day this fellow was taken to the Police Court for impudently interrupting a Secularist lecturer in one of our public parks, and, I am sorry to say, such is the force of religious bigotry here, dismissed without even so much as a reprimand. Lastly, the Secularists nominated Rev. John Page Hopps, the Unitarian minister, a well-known, active, public-spirited citizen, highly esteemed by his own party, and hated worse than sin by all respectable Presbyterians. Altogether some sixty or seventy candidates were nominated, of whom a large number withdrew; but still thirty-eight went to the poll to contest the fifteen seats. In the result, the Orangemen came out at the top of the poll with 108,000 votes, considerably more than double the number given to any other candidate. Then followed the three Roman Catholics. Next came six Presbyterians, Bible and Catechism men. Then Mr. Hopps, followed by an advocate of religious as opposed to sectarian instruction. Another Presbyterian, a second unsectarian advocate, and lastly a Presbyterian again. The board thus consisted of nine "Use and Wont" advocates, and an opposition of six,—three Roman Catholics, two unsectarian religious advocates, and one secularist. Many a lively contest was waged by Mr. Hopps, the opposition champion, and not altogether fruitlessly, as will be seen when I come to speak of the second election.

The publication of the voting at the first election revealed the total want of organization among several of the parties. The Orangemen had wasted more than three-fourths of their votes; the Catholics might have returned four, or even five, instead of three; the Education League, by running seven or eight instead of three or four, had also returned fewer representatives than they might if they had concentrated their strength. The lesson, thus taught, was not thrown away.

As the time for the second election drew nigh, a self-elected committee, whose names were withheld from the public, set forth in an advertisement in the public prints that, desirous of avoiding the expense to the rate-payers of a contested election, they had been constituted to secure the return of ten gentlemen upholding "Use and Wont," which they impudently stated would preserve the complexion of the first board intact. Their ground for this unvarnished statement was this: one of the unsectarian religious instruction advocates happened to be a Free Church minister, and, as he was retiring from the board, they insidiously replaced him by another Free Churchman, who, however, was an advocate not only of religious, but of dogmatic instruction as well. Roused by this, and miscalculating the increase of the secularist vote, or, perhaps, unwilling to return to the board without a supporter, Mr. Hopps appeared with a colleague, a member of his own congregation. This selection was unfortunate, although perhaps unavoidable, as it gave their opponents the opportunity of taunting them as representatives of Unitarians exclusively, whereas I know personally that many members of the Baptist and other Christian denominations voted for these gentlemen. Again two advocates of unsectarian religious instruction turned up; and finally two more bigoted adherents of the "Use and Wont" party appeared, calling upon the Orangemen for a share of their support. I have omitted to state that the Catholics, with unexampled, and to me inexplicable, moderation, only put forward three candidates, although it must have been plain to them, as to every one else, that they had clearly power to return four. The issue of the contest was that the three Catholics, ten out of the twelve "Use and Wont" men, and the two unsectarian religious advocates were returned,—the two secularists being left at the foot of the poll, although the voting showed that in three years they had gained 14,000 additional votes, and could have placed Mr. Hopps, had he run alone, well up in the list of successful candidates. The various parties had learned also from the first election to economize their strength; for, whereas on that occasion the highest candidate polled 108,000 votes, and the lowest only 433, at this second election the highest candidate had only 52,000, and the lowest 14,400. Although "cast down," I imagine the secularists, on the whole, do not feel themselves, as the Tory journal here would gladly make them believe themselves, "destroyed."

I cannot bring this letter to a close without mentioning one or two of the incidents of the election, which are far from cheering. The first is that a very large proportion of the voters could neither read nor write. The majority of these were Catholics, yet a considerable minority were Protestants, and many, Scotch Protestants to boot. Several of these manifested a curious misapprehension as to the meaning of the ballot act. For while they frankly stated for whom they wished their votes to be recorded, they resolutely refused to give their own names,—some of them preferring even to retire without voting than violate, as they supposed, the secrecy insured by the ballot. One old lady, unable to read or write, when asked by the polling officer for whom she wished to vote, told him to "dae as he thoct best himself." A stalwart Irishman, who had been fortifying himself for the discharge of his arduous duty by imbibing a considerable quantity of his native whiskey, after being in one of the compartments for half an hour, declared to the official that he could not see the names of his men on the paper "at all, at all." He wished to vote for "Long and another fellow," whose name he forgot; nor was it found possible to suggest to him from the whole list of candidates the name he was in search of. Another Irishman, being asked to spell his name, gave it as F. i. n. When told by the official that it was "Phin," he very good-naturedly replied, "Shure you may please yourself about it. There's mighty little difference betwixt a P and a F when all's said and done." At one polling-station, of which there were altogether twenty-two throughout the city, no less than thirty-nine illiterates presented themselves in unbroken succession. When it is added to this that a very large number of the respectable classes abstained from voting, less than half the electors having availed themselves of their privileges, the election might seem somewhat of a sham; and yet, I believe, it is very fairly representative of the religious parties in the city.

Another noteworthy feature of the contest is that, as yet, in Scotland, the press is no match for the pulpit in the matter of education at least. Our two most influential papers pleaded the cause of the secularist candidates, and yet these were left, at the bidding of the pulpit, at the foot of the poll. It is to be hoped that this may not be the case when another election comes round three years hence, and at all events it is some comfort to know that we are to-day by 14,000 votes stronger than at the last election.

Magna est veritas, et prevalebit!

Cordially yours,

JAMES BOYD.

AN INQUIRING Frenchman, landing from the boat at Dover, deciphered, with the aid of his pocket dictionary, an inscription to this effect: "By order of the corporation,—only ten files (cabs) allowed to stand here." He immediately entered in his notebook a remark, which may be translated as follows: "The municipal police are frightfully rigid in England. The assembling of files even is forbidden."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE "SWORD OF BUNCOMBE HILL."

RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO THE "NEW AGE."

I.

"The Press is false!" cried the editor wroth,
"And has traded its soul for a penny;
If you ask the De'il what his bargain is worth,
He will pensively sigh—'Not any!'
The Press on the other side goes by,
The heartless and venal crew!
All the rest of the editors truckle; but I—
I alone am the Editor True!"

CHORUS.

So the editor he climbed up a tree,
(You can hear the echoes still!)
And lustily sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
He truly sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"

II.

"The Press is cold-blooded! With ice in its veins,
It stares at the wrongs of Labor,
And thinks of its patrons, and reckons its gains,
And cares not a red for its neighbor.
It prates of its wicked 'demand and supply,'
And dreams of its new corner-lot;
All virtuous heat for my hobby have I—
I alone am the Editor Hot!"

CHORUS.

So the editor he climbed up a tree,
(You can hear the echoes still!)
And lustily sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
He hotly sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"

III.

"The Press is conceited—has got no taste!
Its self-puffery, Sir, is eternal;
But my modesty blooms like a rose in the waste,
And is well advertised in my journal.
I am praised to the skies, I would have you all know,
But to tell what is said would be hasty:
The roofs would fly off, if I chose, Sir, to crow—
I alone am the Editor Tasty!"

CHORUS.

So the editor he climbed up a tree,
(You can hear the echoes still!)
And lustily sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
He tastily sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"

IV.

"The Press is ignorant! Day by day
It dispenses its watery chowder;
To be sure, I haven't got much to say,
But I say it all the louder.
The Press is silent—has much to lose;
Whenever it speaks, it lies;
But Wisdom walks in my humble shoes—
I alone am the Editor Wise!"

CHORUS.

So the editor he climbed up a tree,
(You can hear the echoes still!)
And lustily sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
He wisely sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"

V.

"The Press is cowardly! Whew! At a crack
It runs like a frightened rabbit;
Its liver's as white as its ink is black;
'Tis all the effect of habit!
It dares not say that its soul is its own:
Reason why? Its soul it has sold.
But hurrah for My Courage! For I alone—
I alone am the Editor Bold!"

CHORUS.

So the editor he climbed up a tree,
(You can hear the echoes still!)
And lustily sang, till the welkin rang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill,"
He fiercely sang, till the welkin rang,
With a cannon refrain and a big slam-bang,
The "Sword of Buncombe Hill!"

ASTERISK.

April 29, 1876.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 29.

P. M. McDonald, $3.20; E. T. Bartlett, $3.40; G. P. Putnam's Sons, $2.20; C. Parsons, $1.50; F. H. Badger, $3.20; F. W. Brigham, $3.25; J. Underhill, $1; H. N. Carver, $1.60; G. McMurray, $3.20; J. McMahon, 70 cents; H. C. Orth, 50 cents; Chas. Moran, $3.20; John Carson, $3; K. B. Mercer, $1.50; N. W. Covell, 85 cents; E. H. Hunter, 50 cents; C. Whitaker, $1.15; T. W. Higginson, 50 cents; Thos. D. James, $3.38; Cash, 50 cents; E. C. Miller, $3; Mrs. M. J. Perry, $3.20; H. Southworth, 20 cents; Cash, 25 cents; W. A. Clarke, 50 cents; P. N. Miller, 15 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 4, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FERRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES
VOTSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnard, ".....	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.....	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.....	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston.....	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston.....	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N. Y.....	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.....	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" John Hlat, Winchester, Ind.....	5.00
" 25.	" A Friend.....	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston.....	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleve- land, O.....	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.....	2.00
" 3.	" A Friend in New York City.....	60.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Mass.....	5.00
" 3.	" J. D. Lange, New York City.....	5.00
" 3.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston.....	2.00
" 3.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
" 3.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.....	10.00
" 3.	" Warren Griswold, ".....	5.00
" 3.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.....	4.00
" 3.	" F. E. Nipher, St. Louis.....	2.00
" 3.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.....	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.....	5.00
" 13.	" C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.....	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa.....	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.....	10.00
" 13.	" G. F. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.").....	8.00
" 17.	" J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia.....	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sullot, Salem, Ohio.....	5.75
" 17.	" J. S. Bonsall, ".....	.90
" 17.	" M. Schlesinger, Albany.....	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York.....	25.00
" 25.	" Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.....	90.00
" 25.	" Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.....	5.00
" 25.	" W. H. Crowell, ".....	5.00
" 25.	" J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.....	1.00
" 25.	" Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.....	2.00
" 25.	" C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee.....	2.00
" 25.	" J. A. Heintzelman, Phila.....	5.00
" 25.	" D. G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.....	1.00
" 25.	" S. R. Koehler, Boston.....	3.00
" 25.	" Geo. McMahon, New York city.....	1.50
" 25.	" H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" C. A. Simpson, Saxtonville.....	5.00
" 25.	" J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon.....	5.00

$475.45

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.

605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York.....	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia.....	1.00
Friends in Boston.....	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	2.00
A. Scheffing, Philadelphia.....	1.00
Richard Hackett, Philadelphia.....	1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.....	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore.....	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y.....	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia.....	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.....	2.00
Warren Griswold, ".....	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.....	1.00
Wm. Sisson, Port Hope, Ontario.....	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.....	4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.....	2.00
S. R. Honey, ".....	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.....	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.....	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa.....	2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia.....	.90
J. S. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio.....	5.00
O. B. Frothingham, New York.....	10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia.....	5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia.....	1.00
George Langford, ".....	1.00
Thos. Phillips, ".....	1.00
Carl Doerflinger, Milwaukee.....	1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass.....	1.00
A Friend, New Bedford, Mass.....	10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y.....	10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y.....	20.00
S. R. Koehler, Boston.....	2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa.....	1.00
H. C. Gray, Painesville, O., (collection).....	5.50
J. Sedgbeer, ".....	.50
Through Banner of Light.....	15.50
" Boston Investigator.....	16.75
" New Age.....	5.50
M. Altman, New York city.....	20.00
F. A. Green, Boston.....	5.00
Friends in Boston.....	2.00

May 1.....$234.81

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.

605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE
CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15.	A Friend in Boston (paid).....	$100.00
April 28.	Miss Marian Hovey, Boston (paid).....	100.00
		$200.00

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

SUNDAY SLAVERY.

The New York Evangelist is quoted as follows:—

"Judge Taft, our new Cincinnati Secretary of War, has entered upon the discharge of his office in such hot haste as to run right over the laws of God and man. He and General Sherman disregarded, not to say outraged, the feelings of nine-tenths of the respectable portion of this community by arriving here from Washington on Sunday morning last, and entering forthwith upon the formal inspection of the forts and military defenses of the harbor of New York. Now, we respectfully assure these prominent officials that they have, so far as their example goes, done both themselves and us a moral injury. On the very lowest view of the matter they are bound, in their official capacity, to do us and our wholesome laws and time-honored observances no harm, however great, as would appear, their personal contempt for what so many regard as most important and sacred. We respectfully suggest to them that their duties are no more pressing than those of many thousands of their fellow-citizens here in New York, who find time to show a decent outward respect for that peculiarly American institution, the Christian Sabbath."

Even the New York Independent characterizes the entirely proper course of Secretary Taft, in choosing such days to travel as best suited his own convenience or inclination, as "high-toned superiority to the laws of man and the convictions of the great mass of the people, as shown in his recent Sabbath-breaking visit to Fort Hamilton on a tour of inspection."

Analyze the offence here pretended to have been committed. If there is any "law of man" forbidding the Secretary of War or the General of the Army to attend to their duties in their own way, or forbidding any citizen or class of citizens to travel all day on every one of the fifty-two Sundays of the year, if they so choose, we should like to know it. Sunday trains are run on all the great lines of travel regularly; hosts of people make use of them; nobody, not even the authors of this insulting outcry, dares to interfere with them; nobody even complains, so far as we know, of the now well-established right and common practice of the American citizen to travel on these Sunday trains.

Why this violent umbrage, when Secretary Taft and General Sherman do the same?

Because it is arrogantly claimed that they are "bound in their official capacity" to observe the "Christian Sabbath." There you have it, in a nutshell. There you see the mischief of Sunday-Sabbath laws,—the spirit, though not the letter, of which would undoubtedly prohibit Sunday travelling. There you see a bitter but honest blurring out of the secret claim of Orthodoxy to own this government, to be proprietor of the American nation, to be the established religion of the country. This is a claim which roots itself deep in the innermost soul of Orthodox Christianity—a claim of a divine right to rule the world. But it is a claim stamped as false, insolent, insufferable, by the United States Constitution, every provision of which rests on the will of the people and a quiet ignoring even of the very existence of Christianity. It is a claim which, boldly stated and as boldly enforced, would raise an immense army in a week to defend the Constitution against the treason which thus aims to subvert the very foundations of the government. It is time for the nation to wake up, rub its eyes, and set its foot forever on a claim which is every whit as dangerous to its peace and prosperity as the now-exploded doctrine of "State Rights." The ambition at bottom is just as sleepless, just as insatiable, just as destructive of republican liberties and institutions. The United States must go on or go back; they cannot balance themselves forever on a tight-rope, or maintain forever the present unstable equilibrium of Titanic moral forces. Every man of deep insight and undaunted patriotism sees more and more clearly every day the absolute necessity of STATE SECULARIZATION to the perpetuation of the republic.

But there are thousands and millions of people who can never comprehend an abstraction, or see that a house is in any danger of falling till the first bricks come actually tumbling about their ears. It was so in 1861; it will be so again. Such people are more impressed by a single case of petty tyranny than by any possible demonstration of an "irrepress-ble conflict" of principles. But this, too, is not far to seek.

The Boston Herald of April 24, 1876, contained an admirable article, conceived in the very best spirit of American institutions and couched in terse and vigorous English, under the caption of "A Christian Country." It stated some facts which we will briefly recapitulate.

"It is true that the Christians are most numerous in this country, hold all the offices, judicial, civil, and military; but under the Constitution they have not a single right the Jews are not as fully entitled to." After more of the same sort which we should be glad to quote, and may yet reprint, the writer explains that Mr. H. E. Dann, in a letter to the American Israelite dated March 16, 1876 (we are particular to repeat the year, for it is, as some are aware, the "Centennial Year" of American Independence), rehearsed a tale of persecution by the city of Boston, on account of his religion. It ought to make Boston itself go to Philadelphia to attend the Congress of Liberals this summer.

Mr. Dann is only a Jew, only a poor man with a family of eleven children to support, only a dealer in second-hand clothing on Salem Street, in this city. What religious rights has he that the city government should respect? If he has any, it does not respect them. For about twelve years this Jew without any rights has lived in Boston, and for the last eight of them he has kept his second-hand clothing store under a license from the Board of Aldermen. He declares he never had any trouble with the authorities in times past; they never oppressed him. The municipal regulations covering transactions in old clothes, junk, etc., provide that business can be done between certain hours on all week-days, and extend the time on Saturdays into the night. On applying early in March for a renewal of his license, he was informed by Mr. McCausland, the Superintendent of licenses in that line, that he could not receive it, because he kept his store open on Sundays. Following the account of Mr. Bigelow himself, the Alderman who had ultimate jurisdiction and to whom the matter was referred,—although the account of Mr. Dann makes the treatment he received much more harsh and intolerant,—Mr. Bigelow "did say that, as this was a Christian country, the keeping open of a store on Sunday was offensive to the people, and was, besides, contrary to the laws and usages of the country." Hence he refused the license, pleading the fact of the law as his justification.

But it is the law itself which is the persecutor; the circumstances attendant on the refusal of the license are comparatively unimportant. Mr. Dann has always kept Saturday (which is the best day for trade), as the Sabbath commanded by his own religion; he is required by this "Christian country" to keep a second Sabbath also, out of deference to the feelings of Christians, who are not required, as in equity they should be, to keep Saturday as a second Sabbath out of deference to his. Why should the Jew be made to keep two Sabbaths, and the Christian only one? Why should either be required by law to keep any Sabbath at all? The whole case is a miserable multiplication of wrongs—"Ossa on Pelion piled."

Mr. Dann still keeps his store open, but cannot buy second-hand clothing without a license, has no capital to buy new clothing, and can only sell what he has in stock. He says the refusal of his license deprives him of the means he had established for the support of his family of eleven children dependent upon him. But what does the Christian government of the Christian city of Boston care for a Jew's children? Let him "pass them through the fire to Moloch"; that will reduce his expenses, and enable him to begin again in some new business and earn enough in a week, which is cut down to five days in his case, to fill his own stomach. What right has a Jew to have any children at all, if he objects to pay deference to the Christian Sabbath, when the Christian is not expected to pay deference to the Jewish Sabbath? The "feelings" of the Christian public are so superlatively tender that the feelings of a Jewish father and his eleven children crying for bread are of no account whatever. "Let the carrion rot!" says Boston Christianity.

Alas, when will Christians learn to be satisfied with their own Bible rule—"to do justly and love mercy and walk humbly with their God,"—and forbear to lay the haughty hand of power on the equal rights of the weak? Or when will those who hold a better than the Christian faith "remember those in bonds as bound with them," and unite to make the tyrannies of power impossible in a land dedicated to the equal rights of ALL?

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The ninth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, June 1st, 7½ o'clock, annual business meeting in Horticultural Hall, for the election of officers, reading of reports, and addresses on the practical aims and work of the Association.

Friday, June 2d, at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "Free Religion and the State." Afternoon subject: "Free Religion and the Church."

A social festival will be held in Horticultural Hall on Friday evening.

W. J. POTTER,
Secretary.

THE WANTS OF RADICALISM.

The following letter is printed in evidence that the criticism of Mr. Stevens is not in all quarters applauded:—

C—, April 23, 1876.

DEAR MR. FROTHINGHAM:—

Your striking article on "Concentration" in a late number of THE INDEX is so timely and suggestive that I cannot forbear expressing my general assent to your views as therein expressed. I have in my present position renewed opportunities for studying the different phases of radical religion, and there is much in it that discourages, even disgusts, me. Organization of radicals on some such platform as you suggest, and which seems to me quite definite and yet inclusive, would at least accomplish this one thing: it would show how much that calls itself radical is really so from conviction, and how much from indifference to all ideal causes, egotistic self-assertion, general love of destruction, and mental dyspepsia.

Two-thirds of the so-called radicalism I meet with is a mere cloak for apathy and selfishness. We are weakened by such rotten timber in our temple structures. There is, however, a nobler type, thoughtful, unselfish, courageous, earnest, which needs to be specially distinguished from the mass, rallied around a common centre, and organized on a simple basis for effective work in the cause of freethought and free-fellowship. How miserably weak our radical cause appears, when we compare the lavish giving of Orthodox believers with the stinted, petty contributions of our radicals to their most favorite objects! I know this is not to be used as a sufficient and satisfactory test of the power of radicalism in our day; still it is one test, and a very important one, as society is constituted to-day. I do not agree with Mr. Stevens in his reply to you. Let the dreamers, the indifferentes, the individualists, those who are mutually jealous of one another's thought or action, stay where they are; but let us have some centre to rally our young blood and enthusiasm around, some purpose to enlist sympathy and insure cooperation, or we (not our cause) shall die of stagnation. The radicals at the East, especially the young men, seem to me either helpless or hopeless. I wish you could come to our Western Conference (May 11 to 14th) at Louisville. You would be warmly welcomed. We are to have a visit from some of our Eastern conservative friends,—J. F. Clarke, E. E. Hale, etc., etc. Now if they can make the sacrifices to come and look after their Evangelical sheep out West, don't you think some of our radical brethren of experience and repute might come and give us the right hand of fellowship? Our Conference is overwhelmingly radical so far as the preachers are concerned, and the people follow our lead, even if not always convinced. I purpose to present resolutions indorsing the Free Religious Association tracts, and recommending them to our Western societies. Perhaps we can arrange to act as Western agents for them. Also a resolution of sympathy with the action of English Unitarians with regard to Parker's writings, etc.

While I agree substantially with your article just referred to, I cannot find in the antagonism and narrowness of THE INDEX the broad, sweet, optimistic organ that is needed for our work. I hope we shall be able to start a paper at the Western Conference of a "larger" character. The Christian Register is worse than THE INDEX. Cannot W. T. Clarke be put at the head of such a paper as we need? My work here grows in scope and interest.

Cheerily yours,

The writer, whose name is withheld out of a feeling of delicacy at printing what was not intended for publication, is a radical of pronounced opinions and fearless attitude, frank, ingenuous, manly, a hard worker, a young man, and yet of more experience than many older ones,—one of those to whom I turn with hearty hope for the future. His language is sharp, sharper than I should use; but its acerbity is due to the circumstance that he is a practical man, and not a closet thinker. His criticism on my closing remark touching THE INDEX calls for a word of explanation, but a single word. Both he and Mr. Stevens fall into the same error—a natural one, which I do not wonder at or complain of,—of supposing me to approve of THE INDEX as a whole, to extol it as a model paper, and claim support for it as it is. The editor of THE INDEX knows what I think, has known it for a long time, and agrees with me, that THE INDEX as it is falls short of being the paper we need,—is not what it might be, and would be, if the purposes of its best friends could be carried into effect. The one feature of THE INDEX which I commended, the only feature visible to me at the time of writing, was its determination to do something, to talk to some definite point, instead of ventilating aimless and idle opinions on matters of no immediate moment. It means business,—and therefore claims the sympathy and support of those who mean business. That it is not all it ought to be, is too evident to be spoken. And the reason why it is not, is too evident to be spoken. It is the organ, actually, of a single intensely earnest and vital man, who, being under the necessity, the self-imposed necessity, of supplying material for its columns, furnishes such material as he can, puts himself into every number, and makes every number express himself. It was, however, his desire originally, and is his desire still, to present other aspects of the Free Religious Idea. His columns are open to earnest pens; he solicits able contributions on other questions than those he himself is engrossed by, and laments the backwardness of others which lays on him the duty and subjects him to the charge of making his paper the organ of a single idea. If the radicals would take the editor at his word, and by the quantity and quality of their contributions compel him to enlarge and widen his paper till it represented the Free Religious movement in all its vital phases, they would satisfy, I believe, his deepest desire.

We do need an "organ," with a complete array of stops, and a full supply of pipes. But to start a new one would be laborious and expensive. When a beginning has been made as in THE INDEX, why not carry forward and complete that? With the utmost respect for Dr. Clarke, admiration for his ability, loving veneration of his character, it does not seem to me that he is the man to conduct a Free Religious paper. He is doing work, excellent, indispensable work; but it is only indirectly the work of Free Religion. That movement is for younger men, who feel in their veins the blood of the new generation. The organ of Free Religion should be broad, comprehensive, inclusive at once and exclusive, sympathetic and analytic, hospitable and discerning, ideal and practical, with definite principles to start from, and definite objects to attain, wide in knowledge, keen in criticism, able to stop long enough to ponder without falling into a brown study, and to proceed without losing itself in thickets.

O. B. F.

SECULAR PROPAGANDISM IN ENGLAND.

In a previous communication I gave some account of a form of secular advocacy which my recovering health is likely to enable me to undertake. It was proposed to issue a periodical bearing the name of the Secularist. My hope was that a colleague I proposed to work with would facilitate the publication of papers which I thought important. When I found this was not likely to be the case, I left the paper (which had been set up by funds readily furnished by my friends) in the hands of my colleague. I less regretted the step, because articles began to appear in the paper assailing Mr. Bradlaugh. From the first I gave my friend to understand that I would be no party to this. It is quite possible to discuss any difference of opinion when it arises, without personal hostility to any one. Mutual criticism and friendly rivalry, I consider, may be beneficially displayed in the Freethought party. It is indeed useful to set the example of doing this in good taste and good feeling. Without criticism and emulation there is neither freedom nor progress.

In the propagandist experience I have had, it has often been necessary to change the method by means of advocacy. A new paper has often been the only method of continuing the same work under the varying circumstances which have arisen. People unacquainted with the nature of the conflict in which new opinion has to engage, count a change of warfare as a failure. It is merely a new resource such as a general has often to employ in the field. The variation is not to be judged by the tactics, but by the result. The secular principles, which for so many years I have endeavored to explain, have of late years acquired a national interest beyond my expectation. When I first suggested a secular advocacy, it was thought to be merely a new name for old freethinking; it was not understood as a restatement and recasting of principles won in debate, with a view to the better organization of forces of freethought. Since that time secular education has come to be heard of all over the land, and a large public have become interested in knowing what it means. My friends were well assured that when health was restored to me, I should devote myself to this work. Those who so readily gave guarantees to promote the establishment of a journal for this purpose naturally expect me to go on with the work. Accordingly I have announced that, at an early date, I shall edit a paper for this purpose, to be entitled the Secular Review—a Journal of Daily Life,—in which I propose to review the nature of the increasing advocacy which bears this name. The duties and secular possibilities of daily life, as disclosed by reason and science, so far as they can be seen to rest on principles, clear, definite, and independent, are the objects of this new journal. Secularism and cooperation are the two rising ideas of the age—secularism the religion of duty, cooperation the new force of industry,—which attains competency without mendicancy, and effaces inequality by equalizing fortunes.

Thinkers, owning no allegiance save to truth, fought for, and won, the right to speak. Now the world asks, "What have they to say?" Secularism, is one answer to the question. Free inquiry went forth on its intrepid errand alone. The timorous, who never ventured out, now demand, "What has been found?" Secular principles, is the reply,—principles fruitful, guiding, advancing. Glad to learn truth of churches or priests, whenever it appears, secularism does not, and need not, depend upon them; it can rely upon itself. Inspired by realities, it moves by their strength, and walks by their light. It claims to be a new form of constructive freethought, which establishes agreements by discussion, seeks what to believe, not what to disbelieve; holds intelligent sincerity as sincere, and order as a condition of progress; exchanges authority for reason, denunciation for exposition; is independent without outrage, fearless without carelessness, and daring without irreverence.

The Secular Review will be no scavenger of the churches, collecting the defamation and narrowness of their unworthiest preachers, or their most imputative publications; but rather giving heed and currency to the noblest thought of their best representatives. Believing that opinions held without good grounds for them are held disastrously, if not criminally, it will not, as is commonly done, regard the adversary as an enemy. It will respect him as an assistant in the search for truth—honoring his motives when they are good, disregarding them when bad,—attending only to his arguments, praying they may be relevant, and grateful when they are strong.

It is my intention in this journal to review cooperation as a new form of social economy, and advocate a revival of labor exchanges,—destroyed by their premature success forty years ago. Replanned, they constitute a form of cooperation, popular, practical, and serviceable to thousands in all large towns, to whom the industrial form is unknown, irksome, or inapplicable.

Another object of the Review in question will be to vindicate secular education by freeing it from the perilous, hindering, and untrue assertion that it is atheistic. The editor of this Review (if I may speak of myself) originated the term secularism, and selected it as implying and expressing absolute separateness from atheism. The origin of Nature is an abstract, philosophical question, while the existence of the universe is indisputable, and the knowledge of its laws and uses is the lofty and enduring worship of the understanding, by the side of which all other worship, however ardent, is mean and capricious.

The Secular Review will not be of the school of the genteel successors of the old Tory Chartists; namely, the Tory Radicals, who, professing to serve the people, disparaged the greatest minister the people ever had, and aided in putting into power the foes of advancement, with the view of promoting progress. In politics it will be, as in most things, wilful, but not wayward, and, if possible, genial. The day of howling is over. The people have carried the bridge against those who opposed their advance, and need only common-sense to possess their fair share of the country. What confusion, what indecision, what supineness, what incompetence prevail among popular parties! To this day no politicians explain to the people the conditions of the ballot. Freethought is made the nightmare, instead of the light, of the churches. After twenty years of agitation, the fifty-two Sundays of the year are still the Dead Days of the working-people, when no work of art or genius can gladden their eyes. Society is encumbered by movements which do not move. Secularism is but a new futility, if it cannot help to alter this.

The Secular Review will aim to recast worn-out forms of propagandism, and, as an addition to the doctrine of the usefulness of piety, it will preach the piety of usefulness. There never was antagonism between the sincerity of freethought and the moral aims of religion; and, now that persecution no longer blinds discernment, the contradiction should die, and the unity be stated and maintained. The rival of no paper, the antagonist of no person, the organ of principles rather than party, this journal will seek readers wherever men of thought and action are found. The total circulation of the three papers of approximating principles does not exceed 15,000. The Secular Review, adventurous by conviction, will look for readers among the 29,985,000 persons who otherwise make up the people of Great Britain.

So much may possibly be acceptable information to many of your readers who may desire to know on what principles we base Secular Propagandism in England.

Ever as ever, and hereafter (if it can be so arranged),
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.
22 Essex St., Temple Bar, London.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

Of the men most frequently named for the Presidency, Mr. Tilden, of the Democrats, and Mr. Bristow, of the Republicans, seem to have gained most in public favor during the past week. The action of the Massachusetts Convention has undoubtedly increased the chances of the latter for the nomination, and the most notable speech of the Convention—that of Mr. James Freeman Clarke—was favorably received by the delegates, notwithstanding its direct presentation of the issue between the two wings of the Republican party, and its evident hits at the supporters of Mr. Blaine. Mr. Morton has secured the State of Arkansas, which sends a pledged delegation to Cincinnati; but notwithstanding this apparent gain, Morton, Conkling, Hayes, and Hartranft are generally regarded as out of the race, while many are ready to make the same affirmation with regard to Mr. Blaine. Indeed, the contest for the Republican nomination may yet be between the "Great Unknown"—the candidate most acceptable to the politicians when it becomes apparent that Blaine, Morton, or Conkling cannot be obtained,—and Mr. Bristow, whose name is daily received with increased favor by the Independents and by that large portion of the Republicans who are sincerely desirous of reform.

The action of the Independent Conference, to be held this month in New York, begins to be looked forward to with considerable interest by the politicians, to whom it becomes daily more apparent that, without the vote of the Independents, the Republican party will almost certainly lose the next election. Mr. Carl Schurz has written a letter explanatory of the objects of the Conference, and some of the most rigid of the Republican papers have given to this letter a degree of consideration and of approval which a few months ago would have been impossible. Very many men believe that at the last Presidential election they were obliged, in voting, to accept only a choice of evils, and that the coming election should possess a very different character. The party politicians would be very glad doubtless to have all voters obliged to choose between Morton and Hendricks, or Conkling and Davis, or Tilden and Blaine; but very many Republicans who cast their votes for Grant at the last election will not vote again for any man whose administration is likely to be a continuation of Grant's with only a change of name. That we may have something better than a presentation of this "choice of evils," is the primary object of the New York Conference.

The Investigating Committee have not made many important discoveries of late, and it is to be feared that some of the investigations are now prosecuted more for the sake of political capital than for the good of the public. The Republicans have turned the tables upon the Democrats by procuring the appointment of committees to investigate the conduct of several Democratic officials recently appointed; and one of the Investigating Committees made the ridiculous blunder of examining at great length a witness who brought serious charges against the President, but who was finally discovered to be insane. Some past actions of Mr. Bristow have been investigated, with most excellent results so far as that gentleman is concerned, but greatly to the humiliation of Mr. Cate, of Wisconsin, who initiated the investigation. Morton is now to be investigated, and possibly also Conkling and Blaine, so that if any one of these should become President it will not be necessary to "look him up" after election.

A member of Congress is reported to have said recently that he could congratulate himself heartily upon one thing; viz., that he had never made a fool of himself by delivering a speech on the currency. Senator Jones, of Nevada, certainly "made a fool of himself" by a huge speech upon the currency last week, and we are very much afraid that Mr. Banks intends to do the same thing this week. Of Mr. Jones' speech we need state only that it advocated the use of silver as a legal-tender, that it was lengthy, pretentious, and ridiculous, and that it completely destroyed the reputation gained for Mr. Jones by his hard-money speech of a year or two ago. General Banks, we are informed, has invented a scheme for a new currency, the main provisions of which, in brief, are as follows: Owners of bullion, upon depositing the same at mints or assay offices, are to receive in exchange deposit-notes, which are receivable for all dues to the United States, and are redeemable at any time in gold or silver bars. The object of the scheme (which has been put into the form of a bill) is to avoid the expense of coinage, to maintain the value of gold and silver, and to provide a circulating medium "unlimited in quantity, and incapable of fluctuating in value,—a stable paper currency as good as gold." The comments which we are tempted to make upon this specious scheme would take more room than we can give to them just now, and we are obliged to content ourselves for the present, therefore, by referring it to "the august majesty of the people" for consideration.

As no one has appeared before the Committee of Three, appointed by the Advisory Council, to make charges against Mr. Beecher, the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church has requested that Committee to appoint the Commission of Five to make further investigations. Those, however, who believe that the Commission of Five would not be an impartial tribunal are requesting witnesses not to appear before it, but to await further action by the Andover Church. While this action and counteraction are going on, arrangements have been made to argue before the full bench at the General Term the application of Mr. Moulton for a re-opening of the suit of Mr. Beecher against himself, in order that the case may be carried to the Court of Appeals. In the mean time, however, Mr. Moulton has offered to waive all technicalities, and to have the question at issue between him and Mr. Beecher tried upon its merits, proposing to carry it before three referees, one to be chosen by each party, and a third by these two; or he is willing that the case be tried by a jury, to be chosen by President Woolsey, or by Mr. Robinson, one of Beecher's deacons; or that the case be tried before a jury of twelve men, six to be chosen by Shearman and Edward Beecher, and six by two men appointed by Moulton. In one or another of these three ways, surely, it would seem possible to get at "bottom facts." As we write, nothing has been heard from Mr. Beecher in reply to this offer, which, the Nation asserts, cannot be refused with impunity.

The Legislative Committee on Railways finished last week its investigation of the management of the Boston and Albany Railroad, and reported to the Legislature, or, more correctly, submitted three reports signed by different members of the Committee. The first report asserts that Mr. Kimball held stock in the road, contrary to law, while acting as a State Director; that his purchase of the gravel farm was, under the circumstances, a "dangerous" transaction; that as regards the Ware River matter, his action was indefensible, and that the same is true of the action of Chapin, who used his official position to further his personal interests. The other two reports agree with the first in all statements of fact, and differ only in being more decidedly condemnatory of the actions of Messrs. Chapin, Kimball, and Sargent. The three reports agree in the adoption of a resolution directing the Attorney-General of the State to take action for the recovery, on behalf of the Commonwealth, of its interest in any money or property in the hands of any officer, director, or agent of the road. The resolution was adopted, by very large majorities, by both Houses, together with a preamble stating that "the President and certain of the Directors of the Boston and Albany Railroad have been engaged in certain pecuniary transactions inconsistent with an honorable and faithful discharge of their trusts."

The above action of the Legislature is certainly to be commended, notwithstanding some natural regret at seeing the good name of Mr. Kimball (who is a member of the Legislature, and who made a lengthy speech in his own defence) thus called in question at the close of an active and in many respects useful life. He vehemently asserts his innocence of any intentional wrong, and while we may be willing to accept this assertion, it shows that the standard of conduct of many prominent men in business transactions and in the maintenance of official trusts, is not thoroughly honorable. If a man can be allowed to do the things done by Chapin and Kimball, and thereafter be commended (as Mr. Kimball's defence was commended by an influential journal) as "manly and straightforward," we should not be surprised at the length of the line of the Belknap and Babcocks, the Averys, Joyces, and Shepherds, who, after all, are doing only the same thing; namely, making use of official position to further personal interests. The absence of a delicate sense of honor throughout the community is shown by the facts that Chapin is still a member of Congress, and that he has been re-elected President of the railroad the true interests of which he so shamefully abused for his personal profit.

But little business of importance was finished last week by either House of Congress. The report of a conference committee on the Deficiency Bill was accepted by both Houses, in addition to which the only bill passing the Senate was one to facilitate the printing of public documents. The House passed the District of Columbia Tax Bill; concurred with the Senate amendments to the bill defining the tax on fermented and malt liquors; passed a mining bill, and a resolution requesting the President to take the steps necessary to obtain the release of E. O. M. Condon, a Fenian, from imprisonment in England. The Impeachment Trial proceeds with great slowness, but the important question of the Senate's jurisdiction has at last been reached, and will be debated this week. Speaker Kerr made a very important decision during a debate upon one of the appropriation bills—a decision which it is to be hoped will put a stop to the attempts often made to pass new measures by attaching them to appropriation bills. The decision, in the present instance, prevented the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. The House passed a resolution permitting the Speaker, whose health is quite poor, to appoint a substitute for ten days, the rules heretofore having limited the length of all such appointments to one day.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, April 8, 1876.

Last night I betook myself to the Royal Institution, Albemarle Street, to hear E. B. Tylor, Esq., discourse upon "Oaths and Ordeals." The subject sounded interesting, and, anticipating a crush, I started early, only to be rewarded by an extensive view of empty benches, and a desert of green baize. Slowly dropped in visitor after visitor, and wandered gently towards some point of vantage; yet more slowly dribbled in a member from time to time, and with melancholy air of suppressed science sank on to one of the dignified benches reserved to the habitués of the Albemarle temple. As the minute-hand of the clock approached the fated hour, members and visitors entered in increasing numbers, and at the stroke of nine the hall was well filled, but not crowded. The audiences at the Royal Institution are very select, admission being only granted by ticket from a member, and, it being the custom of the place to go there "dressed," the auditorium is filled with gayly-robed human flowers, and brilliant opera-cloaks of scarlet, and mauve, and white, gold-embroidered, lend an unusual air of brightness to a scientific lecture-hall. The gayety, however, was confined to the opera-cloaks; solemn faces gloomed above them, as befitted the subject-matter of the evening. Mr. Justice Brett was there to listen to the history of the oaths he hears so much of in his daily life; Professor Tyndall was there, in the seat of honor, facing the lecturer as president for the evening, and beside him the lady to whom he has lately sworn an oath of fidelity; Monseur D. Conway was there, "a child taking notes" with evident malevolent intent; and at my own side was Charles Bradlaugh, looking critically grave, with private views of his own upon the subject of oaths, and with a glance now and then at his near neighbor, that same Mr. Justice Brett, with whom he has tilted in court of law, breaking lance, amid suppressed buzz of applause from barrister-crowd around.

The lecture was disappointing as a whole. Some curious tales were told of ancient custom, but there was lack of insight into the root-ideas of some of the customs touched upon, and scarce allowance enough made for possible physical agencies at work in some ancient ordeals. The most interesting part of the whole thing was the fact that the non-belief of the lecturer in spiritual influences was evident throughout, and that, though he drew distinctions between magic and religion, he yet conveyed the impression that they had much in common. He gave many instances of the ancient ordeals; the walking over red-hot ploughshares by Queen Emma, which performance he sneered at, more than hinting that the lady's feet—or feet—were safe enough, the ploughshares being more likely red-painted than red-hot. As to licking a white-heated iron poker, nothing was easier; he had done it himself, and, provided the tongue were moist, no harm would be experienced. (N. B. I would not recommend American friends to put themselves through this ordeal; especially if they happen to be public speakers.) The magic water, harmless to the innocent, but death-bearing to the wicked, probably drew its efficacy from the superstition of the drinkers, while some drug-potions were injurious or innocuous according to the strength of the dose, and the officiating trier could regulate the effect according to his private ideas or desires.

Dealing with oaths, the lecturer divided them into three classes: those which imprecated a curse on the forswearer; those of "conditional favor," "so help me God as I keep my word; and those of "judgment," condemning the soul to punishment hereafter in case of perjury. Historically, they might also be divided into three: the "mundane," the "mixed," and the "post-mundane"; the first being the one common to all savage nations, and the last usual among the more civilized. The old expression "by my halldom" was explained, as all oaths of the post-mundane class—i. e., where the penalties succeeding to the breach were beyond the grave,—were, and are, sworn on a halldom—synonymous with the German Heilighthum,—a sacred thing: either a shrine containing relics, or an altar, or Bible, or Testament. Several instances of the "mundane" oath, whose penalties fall on the offender in this world, were given. Among the Astiaks the oath was sworn on a bear's head, and the swearer delivered himself over to the bear if he broke his oath, and might be torn in pieces, devoured by the sacred animal,—a proceeding surely unbearable. Or the oath might be sworn on the sword, which would smite the perjurer, or holding lance, arrow, stone, thunderbolt, or other lethal weapon. The essence of the oath throughout was that the words spoken on oath should be words spoken under a penalty, if the words were false. The post-mundane penalties were imprecated as civilization advanced, and it was remarked that the sacred bear, or the thunderbolt, or the sword, had a bad habit of slaying innocent and guilty indiscriminately. One may suppose—though Mr. Tylor did not put it so—that the post-mundane penalties, being unknown and unknowable, might be asserted, without fear of contradiction, to fall always on the right head. Arguing from analogy, the belief seems open to attack, as no reason is advanced why God's method should be different beyond the grave to that which he prefers to use on this side of it. If he often strikes the wrong people here, why not there? If the evil are often triumphant here, why not there? If the good often suffer here, why not there? If God be powerful and loving now, he has done the best he can for his children already. Is there any reason to suppose either that his power or his love will increase, so that he may do better for them hereafter?

Mr. Tylor expressed himself strongly as against the administration of oaths to children, the giving of possibly valuable evidence by a child being now dependent upon that child's knowledge of some dubious theological dogmas. He pointed out that many a sharp, intelligent child might be able to give evidence, and, from its training, might know nothing about these beliefs. So far as I understood Mr. Tylor, though he sorely lacked clearness of expression on this point, he looked forward to a time when the judicial oath may be unnecessary, and may well be done away with. If by this he only meant that the oath resting on religion should be abolished, I should, of course, entirely agree with him; but it appears to me that "truth under penalties" should be enforced in every court of law. A declaration that truth shall be spoken in the evidence given, which declaration shall, if broken, carry with it all the penalties of perjury, seems a rightful part of the administration of justice; for society, which gives advantages to the witness, and which may inflict punishment on others because of his evidence, ought, in justice, to inflict punishment on him if he speak falsely. A simple promise to speak truth, with heavy penalties attached to the breach of it, appears to be a process which would be fair to members of every creed; and as civilization advances, and brings with it increasing heresy, as States learn to leave their members undisturbed as to faith, provided that their citizen-duties are fully and righteously discharged, some such formula will be necessary instead of the present oath, and the right of affirmation which non-believers may now claim will become the regular and appointed method of procedure in judicial courts.

The lowering storm-clouds are rolling up rapidly round the Establishment from every side. The Public Worship Regulation Act of last session appears likely to have the most fatal consequences to the Church; for by giving an easy way of prosecuting offending clergymen, it puts a weapon into the hand of every spiteful dissenter in the parish. "Three aggrieved parishioners" are the moving agents, and these parishioners need not be communicants, nor members of the Church at all. If any person of influence, or of money, happen to have a grudge against the incumbent, he or she can easily find three aggrieved parishioners who will pose as prosecutors. The effect may be imagined. Prosecutions are threatened in every direction. No clergyman is safe; he may be beloved, revered, honored, but it only needs three persons in his parish willing to attack him, and he may be subjected to all the annoyance and worry of a legal prosecution, out of which he may emerge condemned or acquitted, according to the half-known provisions of a doubtful and disputed law. No wonder that the clerical journals are full of complaints and forebodings of coming trouble. The clergy suffering just now are of the ritualistic party, but the other school are quite as open to attack. The High Church are talking gravely of secession, of "forming a Unitate Church," or a "Free Episcopal Church." They have great wealth on their side, are very numerous, and very devoted. Take away the High Church, and the whole life and strength of the Establishment is gone. They are essentially the party of work, and are the only really difficult obstacle standing in the way of the advance of freethought. Practically they are Roman Catholic, with much of the strength of that only consistent Christianity. They lend culture, beauty, grace, and devotion to the Establishment, and, if they become its foes, the days of the State Church will be numbered. All forms of Protestantism tend towards Rationalism. Low Churchism, Orthodox Dissent, Broad Churchism, Unitarianism, Theism, are all steps in the ascending ladder whose top is lost in the white clouds of the heaven of truth; those who dare to begin to climb that ladder can find no sure resting-place on any rung thereof. If their heads be steady, and their limbs vigorous, and their muscles strong to effort, ever upwards must they travel, step after step. Taunts may strike them from those they leave behind; sneers may pursue them as steadily they go upwards; the snakes of slander may bite at their heels as they climb; loneliness and dreariness of heart may be theirs as still they press higher. But there is a reward for the searchers for Truth only tasted by those who seek her; there is sound of music from the choirs round her Throne, snatches of whose melody are caught from time to time; and at last, at last, when the strength is gone, and the days of the journey are over, I think that, as the climber sinks exhausted, and the clear eyes begin to fall, the sweet, glorious face of Truth will lean from the sky above him, on her soft lips a smile of welcome, in her pure eyes the immortal light which through life has guided her followers, and the weary will sink in her arms, as the tired child on the breast of the mother, and will sleep in peace on her bosom, while she will place his memory as a star amid the constellations which circle her Throne; and he will shine for evermore in her heaven, to guide to her home those still climbing below.

"PLEASE, SIR," said a little girl who was sweeping a crossing for a living, "you have given me a bad penny." "Never mind, little girl; you may keep it for your honesty."

AN INDIAN MAN said to a Bible agent: "I'm a Christian, but I'll be blamed if I don't have to grit my teeth when the Ohio River is on a level with the top of my corn."

Communications.

A VERDICT.

DECATUR, Ill., April 17, 1876.

MY DEAR ABBOT:—

I have just been reading the last number of THE INDEX, and feel moved to make a suggestion or two.

1st. I like "R. C.," who has charge of the department of "Current Events," very much. He is one of the best hands you have ever had on the paper. My advice would be to keep him by all means, and give him all the room he wants.

2d. I like Mr. Elder's article on "Woman's Suffrage." So far as he has got, I agree with him entirely, and think your paragraph by way of reply very inadequate. "Justice without regard to consequences" is a very fallacious cry. You might as well talk of charity without regard to consequences. For in the great majority of cases—this one in particular—it is only by a consideration of consequences that we can determine what is justice or charity. Such questions cannot be settled by a priori appeals to our inner consciousness. Experience and a careful study of the probable effects are alone adequate to a proper solution. If I thought woman suffrage would increase the general welfare, I would favor it. As I believe it would not do so, I do not favor it. My own tendency is towards a restriction of the suffrage, not to its extension. But in any event let the appeal be made to experience, and not to some "inner light" which is probably only another name for personal feeling or private prejudice.

Yours,
ROBERT MOORE.
1221 St. Ange Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

THE POISON AT WORK.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—A journal which is really independent enough to utter any important truth that presses for utterance is, in all times and in all countries, if for nothing more than the mere maintenance of liberties already won by the human race, an invaluable possession. One cannot help regarding such a journal as especially valuable at this time and in this country, though it is true we are apt to exaggerate the relative importance of our own perils, and to underrate those of other countries and other times.

But the men who can believe that there is any abatement in the virulence, or any relaxation in the tenacity, with which the Orthodox pietists pursue their one object of conquering the human mind, must be possessed of a most unenviable credulity. Their efforts are by no means confined to persuasion. A year or two since an Orthodox writer, who chose to remain anonymous, but who, judging from certain unmistakable evidences, I concluded was a member of the faculty of the Orthodox Theological School at Meadville, in this State, undertook to defend the common school against the charge of fostering infidelity. The only point in this defence to which I wish to call attention was this: The writer declared without the least pretence at disguise that, if the common schools did not inculcate Orthodox Christianity, it was the fault of the Christians of the community, who, being everywhere in the majority, could in all cases secure the appointment of godly teachers, to the utter exclusion of every applicant tainted with a faulty theology. He added, by way of proving his assertion, that in Meadville, out of twenty-two teachers employed in the public schools, twenty were members of the various Orthodox churches. The remaining two were, I presume, regarded as in a hopeful state, a very fair inference, I think.

So far as I am informed, every normal school in the State has a chapel attached to it, in which there are regular chapel services conducted by some member of the faculty, and these services, as well as the Bible classes (at least in some cases), the students are, under certain penalties, compelled to attend.

As a specimen of pietistic trickery, I will just mention the fact that the Presbyterian faculty of Lincoln University, so called, lately made an effort to retain the State appropriation which they had enjoyed before the adoption of the new constitution, by assuming the title of "Normal School," though the most influential divine connected with the institution declared he would "rather die" than allow the department of Calvinistic theology to be suppressed. The Attorney-General of the Commonwealth decided against the Doctor of Divinity.

An attentive observer may everywhere see indisputable evidences (such as you recently advertised on, in the case of the New York Tribune,) of cringing on the part of the newspapers, as well as the great and small demagogues of the country to the priests and parsons. The Philadelphia Press, on the breaking out of the Moody-and-Sankey epidemic, explained the thing very sensibly, by comparing it to the vernal epidemic of hop-scotch among the boys, and has ended by giving quite sanctimonious accounts of the saving of souls through the labors of those famous persons. And the proprietor of that journal, Mr. or "Col." John W. Forney, has, in one of the numerous speeches which he has made since his return from his Centennial mission to Europe, especially singled out "the Roman Catholics" of that quarter of the world for eulogy, as having given him the most hearty aid in his disinterested and patriotic undertaking, adding, shrewdly, the clause, "like their fellows in this country." It is, perhaps, beside the subject to say that many of his readers would greatly have preferred that he should give to the public the explanation for which they have long been waiting, through which he promised to show reason why over-scrupulous people should no longer look upon him as unfitted for the position of national representative. I hope, by the way, you will give your readers Mr. William Howitt's exposure of the Pope's lying pretence of poverty, made in connection with his paltry contribution to the Centennial Exhibition.

The city newspapers frequently give to the public such items of information as that on some fête-day specified, "the services in St. ———'s Roman Catholic Church will be unusually impressive," or, that "the Credo, Kyrie, and Benedictus will be especially good," or some other equally important fact, a course which is plainly intended to ingratiate them with the Irish papists, whose vote is very large,—another proof of their subservience to the Romish Church, whether these notices are written by Protestants who are personally indifferent to the display of ecclesiastical millinery, the incense-burning, and the astonishing operatic bravuras, or by Irish Fenians, of whom Mr. Latham some years ago alleged there were one or two, at least, on the editorial staff of every considerable newspaper in the country. These emissaries of popery, with a sagacity and pertinacity worthy of the most attentive consideration, and which are undoubtedly inspired by master-minds that work unseen, are everywhere insidiously engaged in perverting the minds of the thoughtless and unsuspecting. The most surprising feature in the whole thing is that any one should doubt the criminal designs of the Catholic Church, when they have been so undisguisedly and repeatedly avowed by the foremost Romish priests in America; unless, indeed, it is the frankness of these avowals, seemingly so inconsistent with the otherwise insidious procedure of these ecclesiastics.

HOWARD WORCESTER GILBERT.
CHESTER COUNTY, Penn., March 18, 1876.

I FIND, on returning, a very profound excitement pervading scientific and religious circles concerning the action of Earl Russell with reference to the children of his son, the late Viscount Amberley. The late viscount and his lady were of well-known freethinking opinions, and the viscount, by his last will, confided the education of his two sons to Mr. Douglas Spalding. Earl Russell demanded that the provisions of the will should be set aside on the ground that Mr. Spalding, being a freethinker, was not prepared to bring up the children "in some recognized form of religion," and, very unexpectedly, the earl turns out to have at least a show of law on his side. If this be good law it is questionable whether a freethinker may not be deprived of the educational control of his children, even while he is living. One by one the old disabilities on freethinkers have been disappearing, and when recently Parliament enacted that atheists shall be admitted to plead and testify in all courts without regard to their opinions, it was thought that the heretics had lost their grievance. But this Russell case has inaugurated a new agitation, of which we shall hear enough. Curiously enough the removal of Earl Russell's grandchildren from the educational direction chosen by their father comes at the same time with another case of human sacrifice by the fanatical sect called the "Peculiar People." The child of Frederick Watts died, as medical witnesses proved, simply through lack of that medical care which the Peculiar People forbid, in accordance with certain Scriptural provisions. Frederick was acquitted because of the sincerity of his fanaticism, as large numbers of his co-religionists have been whose children have died through lack of the medical care freely placed by the government within reach of all. So it appears that a man may sacrifice the life of his child to a religious creed, but he cannot bring up his child, however carefully, without one. Such, at least, is said to be that antiquarian law of which the most antiquarian of earls has availed himself in this case. However, that this is the law appears to rest thus far only on the opinion of the counsel consulted by Mr. Spalding, who naturally objects to testing the case before the courts for the public good if there be doubt of success. The secularists are considering the question of contesting the matter; but I do not know if any determination has been reached. On the whole, it looks as if American citizenship may continue for a time to possess some advantages. I have just learned that Earl Russell, having got possession of his grandsons, made a vigorous attempt to control the offspring of Lord Amberley's intellect. He employed the law to suppress a work which his son had completed, and which had been placed in the hands of Messrs. Trübner & Co. for publication. However, the earl seems to have found the limits of English patriarchalism. The work will appear in a few weeks, and its popularity will, no doubt, be enhanced by the course which the earl has taken.—M. D. Conway, in the Cincinnati Commercial.

THE EMPEROR of Brazil is described as being one of the most unassuming monarchs living. He is tall, erect, and of rather large frame, with a handsome head well set on a pair of broad shoulders. His face is large, but not too full, and the lower part of it is covered by a thick gray beard. His eyes are intelligent and sympathetic, and there is in the general expression of his face a certain unassuming kindness which at once impresses itself upon one's memory and affections. In a few words, he may be said to look like what he is—a simple, pleasant gentleman of more than ordinary intelligence, and with a large fund of common sense. His wife is also said to be of a kindly nature, and her influence is always exerted for good.

A MILEMAN was awakened by a wag in the night with the announcement that his best cow was choking. He forthwith jumped up to save the life of his animal, when, lo! he found a turnip stuck in the mouth of the pump.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	" 8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	" 6 " "
" 52 " " "	" 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. E. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keenub Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 25 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.35
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	1.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUECKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-4. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	2.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARK (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. R. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Outings.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.50
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 1 vol.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Original History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Riddles of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.00
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Shallice.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Heart House.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Ed.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on the Principles. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESLING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	3.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1844.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.25
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—Both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bossuet, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kickos from Kentucky.....	1.25
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.00
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Ostholio Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.00
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Redged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 34 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Geography, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc. Expanded & Revised.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., festschrift cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 2 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.00
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.00
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 1 vol.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	6.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.00
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.00
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the master in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAKTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	3.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Scenes of Excursion in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.00
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARREN'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Banisterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life, and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II. PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III. LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV. THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homelike.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition, Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50

Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas of Christianity. By George Reber. 12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-paid.....2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles Sotherton. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE'S Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,
and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Redding a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

751 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,
139 Eighth St., New York.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1876. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States. All of these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them, and everything connected with them, will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in The Sun.The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by The Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of GRANT'S administration, and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this The Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon GRANT'S aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read The Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting, and instructive manner.It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence, and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.The Weekly Sun, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year, postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to Clubs, Agents, Postmasters, or anyone.The Daily Sun, a large, four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55c. a month, or $6.50 a year. Sunday edition extra, $1.20 per year. We have no travelling agents.

Address THE SUN, New York City.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized,

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $800 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC REEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1876.

WHOLE No. 333.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

WHEN we cast an eye on the great pile of still unanswered letters on our table, selected for reply from the daily mails on account of their special importance, all we can do is to plead the inexorable necessities of our work. If only there were thirty hours in a day—!

THE ST. LOUIS Republican will get into hot water with the Woman's Journal, if it continues to write in this reckless and reprehensible manner: "Herbert Spencer says that the gold ring now worn by married women is the sign of the iron ring that was worn about the neck or ankle in the olden times, and indicates the submission of the wearer. Herbert Spencer is an impracticable dreamer. The gold ring a woman wears now is simply indicative of the ring her husband must join in order to foot the bills."

REV. E. W. MUNDY, the eloquent liberal preacher of Syracuse, N. Y., has got ahead of THE INDEX, which is satisfied to advocate the Secularization of the State, while he has just printed a sermon on "The Secularization of God"! What he means is that secular government, education, and life are worthless, unless they are all controlled by the Divine principles of truthfulness, honesty, justice, purity, kindness. In this THE INDEX heartily agrees, whether men call such principles "Divine" or not.

THE PROPOSAL in the New York Legislature to provide pensions for teachers who shall have served a certain length of time in the public schools is an admirable one. The school service is as dignified, as honorable, as useful, as either the army or the navy. Let education be more and more recognized as the broad foundation of the Republic; and let the veterans who have worn themselves out in educating the future citizens of the nation not be turned out to pasture like broken-down horses. The increased outlay would be more than made good in the increased excellence of the school system and administration. We hasten to express our hearty approbation of this most just and judicious measure.

THOMAS CARLYLE is not in love with democracy. He is said to have uttered recently a characteristic growl as follows: "America is a great country, but no system can last which would give Jesus and Judas precisely the same vote on public affairs." But no system can last which undertakes to enfranchise all the Jesuses and to disfranchise all the Judases. The practical difficulty comes up in deciding "who is who"; and although the Church, if permitted, would eagerly undertake to separate sheep from goats at the ballot-box, the State has learned by bitter experience that it is safer to run the risks of letting the Jesuses and Judases both vote, than to let the Church govern the State by picking out the political Jesuses who are to do all the governing.

MRS. BESANT, writing in the National Reformer, (Charles Bradlaugh's very ably edited journal), quotes this delicious advertisement from the Christian: "The attention of Christian workers is called to an issue of illustrated texts on calico (fast colors) for quilts, screens, chair-dollies, etc. They are intended to bring the word of God in an attractive manner before the poor, the sick, the soldier, the sailor, and others. The large texts are in two varieties, the small in twelve, and in ten combinations of color.

They are sold in packets, containing a complete set of two large and twelve small. Price, post-paid, 3s. 6d. the set, sufficient for two counterpanes." Mrs. Besant comments on this advertisement in her own droll and sprightly manner: "Fancy a counterpane all over cheerful texts! 'It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.' 'Our God is a consuming fire.' 'They shall be tormented forever and ever in the presence of the Lamb,' and so on. If a pious Christian were visited by an atheist, what an opportunity for pious rebuke! But the idea might be utilized. On the towel might be printed, 'Wash you, make you clean'; on the cosmetic box, 'Ye shall be white as snow'; on the blanket, 'Be ye warmed.' Many a really graceful hint might thus be made to the careless visitor."

THE NEW YORK Evening Post (a paper usually not given to random or malicious assertions) says in its issue of April 20: "When asked—as they often very naturally are asked,—How do Messrs. Moody and Sankey manage to live? who pays their washing bills? and whence come their means of subsistence? the Executive Committee reply as follows: Mr. Moody is constantly receiving from friends in this country and from friends in Europe, from men and women living in almost every locality that he has ever visited, voluntary gifts of money—thank-offerings, so to speak—for the good which these persons believe that Mr. Moody has done them, expressions of their affection and gratitude. It is not known how much money Mr. Moody has obtained from this prolific source. It is not known even that Mr. Moody has kept an account of it himself. Sometimes he has been known to return to a donor the amount of the contribution, because the manner or the measure of the gift did not please him. But such known instances are few. Mr. Moody alone—if indeed he is able—can tell the financial gain that this revival and his other revivals have brought to him. The secret just now is his own. But the opinion is freely expressed—not by the Executive Committee, but by other gentlemen,—that during the last year Mr. Moody's income has not been less than the least of the incomes of our other metropolitan preachers."

THE DECISION of the English authorities with regard to Viscount Amberley's testamentary provision for the education of his children could not have been made, we believe, in this country, and shows that England needs a Liberal League even more than the United States. We quote from a London despatch to the Cincinnati Commercial: "The proceedings of Earl Russell with regard to the will of his son, the late Viscount Amberley, have produced a widespread excitement. Mr. David Spalding is a gentleman and a scholar who had for some time resided with the Amberleys, and was their most intimate friend. Viscount Amberley, in his will, named Mr. Spalding as the sole custodian of the education of his children. When the will came before the Master of the Rolls for the testamentary nominations to be confirmed, Earl Russell objected to the carrying out of this portion of the will, on the ground that Mr. Spalding was an atheist. Mr. Spalding is not technically an atheist, but admitted a sufficient amount of heresy to warrant Earl Russell's plea that he would not bring up the children in any recognized form of religion. Mr. Spalding consulted eminent counsel, who informed him that the case of the poet Shelley, who while alive was deprived of the custody of his own children on similar grounds, is still the law of England, and that if he (Spalding) fought the case, he would be simply saddled with the costs. The late Viscount left to Mr. Spalding the sum of £300 annually for the education of his children, and Earl Russell agreed that this money should be regularly paid. I am informed that Mr. Spalding signed a paper renouncing his right to act as educator of the children."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Cline, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. B. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREKESVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—F. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Conrad, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Yaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; E. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 OLIVERTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cockingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Spiritual Illumination.

BY DAVID H. CLARK.

It is common to believe in intellectual progress, to believe that the crude and irrational imaginations which once dominated the human mind, and bewildered it, especially in religion, have become well-nigh extinct. And yet every really thoughtful and observant person is continually reminded of the power which the old ideas and spirit still retain. Conceptions and practices which we had begun to consider almost, if not entirely, discarded as things of a by-gone age, from time to time reappear, and with signs of unsuspected vitality, even in the very centres of the foremost intelligence.

The perpetuation of revivalism, as illustrated in the career of Moody and Sankey, and those of their class, affords an example in point. It is not strange that the uneducated and uncritical masses of our great cities, and particularly those disheartened and discouraged by hard experience, should flock to these men, or that the clergy of the sensational and superficial sort should become their coworkers. But when we see those distinguished for learning and culture lending countenance and cooperation to the work of fanaticism, it becomes evident that long strides of progress are yet to be made before mankind shall have wholly passed beyond such vestiges of the ages of superstition.

I have fallen into this train of reflection by recalling a notice of a Sunday-school convention in Springfield, Mass., a few months since. According to the report, one of the speakers, a somewhat famous representative of the cause, who had come all the way from Chicago to address the meeting, contributed the following specimen for its edification: "He took the ground to start with, that conversion is the first essential in the superintendence of a Sunday-school; that nineteen-twentieths of the Bible was written for God's accepted children; that none but they can understand it; and that no scholarship, or any other qualification, can take the place of conversion. The necessity that superintendents should be witnesses for the gospel in every relation of life was dwelt upon, and the fact that it is not so much the work of believers to defend as to illustrate the gospel."

This conception of a special spiritual illumination, or supernatural endowment, as the result of Christian regeneration and faith, has always existed in the Church; nor is it yet cast aside, as the words just quoted clearly show. It is, nevertheless, simply and solely a relic of superstition, and its enunciation in a public assembly of average intelligence sounds strangely, when the tendency to rational and scientific modes of thought is as marked as at present, and demonstrates how much unreasonableness and absurdity Christianity includes even to-day.

It has always been a persuasion of the disciples of all religions that there were some special advantages, material or spiritual, or both, attendant upon their peculiar faith and devotion. The Brahmins, or priests of India, the sacred or highest caste, are supposed to be endowed with a knowledge or wisdom beyond that of ordinary mortals. Those who have read and committed by heart the Vedas, we are told, are called "twice born," in allusion to the new spiritual birth they are considered to have thus attained. Buddhism held out assurances of a similar illumination, but with this difference: that, instead of the realization of a single order of society, it was something within the reach of every soul who fulfilled the prescriptions of its religion. The priests of Chaldaea, Egypt, and Persia were regarded as possessed of this exceptional gift in an extraordinary degree. They were enabled to perform, by virtue of it, acts of magic and divine fate, according to the predetermining influences of the stars. Indeed, it has always been common for all people in the ruder and less enlightened stages of development to conceive of any remarkable skill or wisdom as the sign of supernatural power or inspiration. Such are those who are known as medicine men, sorcerers, wise men, among barbarous tribes; soothsayers, seers and saints, teachers and philosophers, in ancient and modern time.

Although this spiritual illumination, or gift of seeing into nature and destiny, was more or less ascribed to all extraordinary persons, and especially those associated with religion, officially or otherwise, it was to a large extent an occasional and capricious visitation. It was particularly conveyed through dreams and visions. The conception of this mode of communication was very general among the Jews. There are numerous illustrations of the kind scattered through the Old Testament and the New. It is related that "God spake to Israel in visions," and also said: "If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak to him in a dream." The announcement of the birth of Jesus, and the subsequent warning of danger, and advice to his parents to flee with him into Egypt, were also made in the same way. The vision to the Apostles upon the mountain, and to Zacharias in the temple; the vision of angels to those that visited the sepulchre, and of the great sheet let down from heaven, and of Paul and others, are familiar.

The trance was still another medium of such communications. Epilepsy, catalepsy, and kindred nervous diseases, were also regarded as manifestations of the working of the divine afflatus. The prophets, the Hebrew prophets in particular, were supposed to be the especial recipients of spiritual illumination. The literal meaning of the word prophet, or the word from which it is derived, according to Dean Stanley, is "to boil or bubble over," and is taken from the metaphor of a fountain bursting forth from the heart of man, into which God has poured divine waters. Its actual meaning is to pour forth excited utterances, as from its occasional use in the sense of raving. Even to this day, in the East, the ideas of a prophet and madman are closely connected. Indeed, it was affirmed by Plato that no one in possession of his senses ever obtained the gift of divination.

It is easy to imagine that, when the power of supernatural illumination was so generally believed in, and was held in so high esteem, there would naturally be a desire to induce those states of body and mind favorable to it. A very general conception in respect to the process through which this end might be attained was the practice of rigid austerities and asceticism. It was thought that the more completely the spiritual part was enabled to subdue the material, the more effectually it became liberated from its earthly relations through self-mortification and privation, the more it would put itself into union with the divine intelligence, and become the subject of spiritual perceptions exceptional to the common life of man. It was thus that the person who acquired the most contempt for the ordinary enjoyments and comforts of life, who subjected himself to the severest inflictions, and withdrew most completely from the world, was the special favorite and heir of heaven. They were divine men and saints. Such were the hermits and various ascetics of Pagan and Christian times. In addition to the means in use to which I have alluded, others were resorted to. It was common to employ for this purpose various narcotics or exhilarating drugs and beverages, and the inhalation of carbonic and sulphurous vapors. These were often administered, or partaken, in some wild and gloomy cavern, where the associations and influences of the place were calculated to work upon the imagination, and excite strange hallucinations and phantasies.—"The gaseous exhalations of these grim regions occasioning a delirium, or dreams and visions, which received such an interpretation as the dictates of imposture or credulity and superstition might suggest."

This conception of an extraordinary or supernatural spiritual illumination to which it is possible for the soul to attain has been the source of numerous special religious movements, or phases of philosophy. It gave rise to a class of religious philosophers who sprang up at Alexandria just before the advent of Christianity. They maintained that, as God is an infinite being, and as the human mind is finite, it is impossible for it to comprehend God except through an abnormal condition of spirit. This they termed "ecstasy." "In this ecstasy," said Plotinus, the leader of this school, "the soul becomes loosened from its material prison, separated from individual consciousness, and absorbed in the infinite intelligence from which it emanated. In this ecstasy it contemplates real existence; it identifies itself with that which it contemplates. This may be attained through the influence of rapturous and inspiring music, profound and intent thought, the spiritual elevation of pure love, and devotion, or prayer."

It is evident that similar conceptions to those that have been indicated were involved in Christianity when it arose. Jesus and the Apostles speak of "the gift of God" as though it were a supernatural dispensation. "The pure in heart," we are told, "see God"; meaning, I am disposed to think, in the minds of those addressed, "seeing" him in a more palpable and actual sense than we are accustomed to give to the words. So Paul affirms that the carnal or natural mind is at enmity with God, and that spiritual things are spiritually discerned; indicating unquestionably that man is by nature incapable of divine perceptions which ensued on becoming a disciple of the new religion. This idea of spiritual illumination upon which I have dwelt was much emphasized in the primitive Church. Whatever functions were performed were through special supernatural aid or communication. It was thus one received the word of wisdom; another the word of knowledge; another the working of miracles; another the gift of prophecy; another discerning of tongues; another divers kind of tongues, etc. The tradition of the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, which enabled those present "to speak with other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance," is testimony to the same effect.

It was maintained by some of the Christian fathers that the Scriptures contain two meanings, one which is obvious to the ordinary mind, and another interior or hidden; and that the latter, the essential one to salvation, can be discovered and understood only through a divine inspiration. It was this theory that justified the chaining of the Bible to the altars of the churches in the Middle Ages, it being assumed that it was hazardous for the common people to read it on account of the danger of falling into errors and misapprehensions in regard to its contents,—the priests alone possessing the illumination requisite for its true interpretation. This conception of divine illumination appears still later under another aspect as a conspicuous doctrine, in the theories and notions of a class of religionists known as the mystics in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It was a distinguishing one of George Fox, as it has been of the sect of which he was the founder. It was held by him that through rigid temperance, and a renunciation of the distracting cares and interests of life, it was possible for the soul to obtain visions of the actual presence of deity. The doctrine of a supernatural discernment imparted from on high, as a consequent of Christian regeneration, has been a very convenient one for the defence of those dogmas of the creeds which reason rejects. If they were pronounced irrational, the common reply has been that they are mysteries; that spiritual things are spiritually discerned.

But the theory of such an inspiration or illumination, which is still held to a large extent, fails before every test of verification. It is proved to be false, when applied to the Scriptures in support of the traditional view of their origin. It is proved so, when applied to the various religious conceptions which the Church has cherished and promulgated for the truth. If it were a fact that Christians are the recipients of such an endowment as is claimed, should we not have a right to look for a greater uniformity of opinion and intellectual agreement among them? Nor is the assumption better sustained when considered with reference to moral guidance, since not only do Christians differ in regard to their views of what is right and wrong, but in practical obedience of the law of duty,—are, not unfrequently, as delinquent as those who make no pretence to their professed illumination.

Turning aside, then, in conclusion, from all such erroneous views of spiritual illumination as we have indicated, there still remains a genuine attainment of its nature (possible to every living soul) of an even more exalted and ennobling character,—a condition of the spirit which is reached, not through any abnormal processes, not through a renunciation of any of the duties or comforts which belong to a human being, the emaciation of the body, nervous disorders, or exciting prescriptions. These, though they may give rise to unwonted experiences and strange illusions, impair the physical and spiritual welfare, and unfit them to fulfil the real ends of existence. There is a light which may enlighten every one who is born into the world, a light which flickers and fades, or glows into an effulgent and lambent flame, according as we obey or disobey the laws of our being,—the light which proceeds from sound physical health, a cultivated, and well regulated mind and heart; a light which outshines that which superstition imparts, "as daylight does a lamp."

It is an illumination that is quickened and rendered brighter and brighter by the practice of good deeds, the spirit of self-sacrifice, the pursuit of truth, an independent, manly, or womanly life. Such an one, in the words of a great sage of antiquity, "is like one who takes a lighted torch into a dark house; the darkness is dissipated. Persevere in the search after wisdom, and obtain knowledge and truth; error and delusion rooted out, what perfect illumination there will be!"

THE Pall Mall Gazette, in giving an account of a university boat-race, in which four crews of Cambridge were engaged, lately, makes the following remarks, which sound very oddly, not to say profanely—the boats being called after the colleges to which their crews belonged: "Jesus beat Trinity by a second in the first heat, and would have won by more but for wild steering. Caius were faster than Lady Margaret; but ran into the bank twice, and so lost. The final heat was easily won by Jesus. The pick of the new men who performed were Fairbairn, stroke of Jesus, and Dale, three in Lady Margaret. The first-named has a good deal of style, and works well. The second is a very powerful man, rows hard, in fair form, and ought to make a university oar. The other three men of Jesus—Hockin, Gurdon, and Branker—all are fair."—Independent.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE CONNECTICUT BLUE LAWS.

BY IRA E. FORBES.

Among the sins charged against the Connecticut colonies is that of having originated the so-called "Blue Law Code." For nearly a century this charge has been renewed from time to time, and as often disproved. Still a multitude of intelligent people talk of the "Blue Laws" as though they actually existed, and in consequence look upon the early settlers of Connecticut as having been the most bigoted and intolerant set of men that the world has ever been guilty of producing. But if the alleged code which has caused so much trouble has really had an existence, this conclusion would be just and proper. In fact, it would be difficult to conceive of any other under the circumstances in question.

The first mention of the Blue Laws is by Rev. Samuel Andrews Peters, an Episcopal clergyman of Hebron, who published a History of Connecticut in England in 1781. In the preface to his history, Mr. Peters asserts that the reason for the obscurity in which the Connecticutans had up to his time been involved was to be found among their own sinister views and purposes. Prudence dictated, he continues, that their deficiency in point of right to the soil they occupied, their wanton and barbarous persecutions, illegal practices, and daring usurpations had better be concealed than exposed to public view. Dr. Mather and David Neal, the historian of New England, he says, were popular writers, but suppressed what are called in New England unnecessary truths. Even Governor Hutchinson loved fame, and feared giving offence to the colonists. Consequently he published only a part of the truth.

But Mr. Peters claims for himself strict impartiality, having neither the fear nor favor of man before his eyes in writing his history. His only object in the work, he says, was to dissipate the cloud of obscurity which overhung the colonists, and bring to light the knavery which was practised among them, but which had been long concealed and denied. He protests that he followed the line of truth freely, unbiassed by partiality or prejudice. But before one pins his faith to these fair professions, he should know something about the author of them.

Mr. Peters, at the outbreak of the Revolution, was so bitter an opponent of the American party, and so pronounced in his hostility, that he found it safer to flee from the country than to remain in it. Had he lived in our day, he would doubtless have been a copperhead of the copperheads. His Toryism knew no bounds, and whatever savored of loyalty to America met with his violent execration. Nearly twenty years after the war for Independence he returned to New York, where he published The Life of Rev. Hugh Peters, his great-uncle. In 1817, he journeyed to the Falls of St. Anthony, where he claimed extensive land estates. Afterwards he made his way back to New York, where he died in poverty and obscurity. He is the original of Parson Peter in Trumbull's celebrated novel, M'Fingal. Mr. Peters had descended from good stock, but had, unfortunately, inherited the defects and grovelling instincts of his family. Hugh Peters, one of his great-uncles, was a cotemporary of Rev. Drs. Mather and Cotton, of Salem, Mass., and was unquestionably a man of low passions and purposes. In his biography of him, the Connecticut historian says that Mather and Cotton feared his ability as a rival, and successfully inaugurated a plot to get him back to England. But, be that as it may, he returned to his native land, where he took part in the Cromwellian War, and, at the restoration of Charles II., was gibbeted by the latter at Charing Cross, for his participation in the great Protector's revolt.

Another great-uncle of Mr. Peters was Rev. Thomas Peters, who settled at Saybrook, and there established a school which subsequently constituted the germ of Yale College. Mr. Peters, in his history, says nothing of note of the intermediate families, and it is probable that they lived and died in comparative obscurity.

Before speaking of the Blue Laws particularly, it will be interesting to give two or three examples of Rev. Mr. Peters' veracity. Writing of the Connecticut River, he says it is four miles wide at its mouth. At a point two hundred miles from the Sound, he continues, there is a narrow passage in the river only five yards in width, through which the entire stream is forced. On either side, as he expresses it, are shelving mountains of solid rock, whose tops intercept the clouds. Through this chasm are compelled to pass all the waters, which in times of floods bury the northern country to such a depth that ships-of-war could float about easily. People who can bear the sight—the groans, the trembling and surly motion of the water, the trees and the ice whirled through the awful passage,—view with astonishment one of the greatest phenomena in Nature. Here, water is consolidated without frost, by pressure, by swiftness, between the pinching, sturdy rocks, to such a degree, that an iron crow-bar can be forced into it. Here, iron, lead, and cork have one common weight. Here, steady as time, and harder than marble, the stream passes, irresistible, if not swift, as lightning. The passage is four hundred yards in length, and in low water timber and trees strike on one side of the rocks, and, though of the largest size, are rent in one moment into shivers, and splintered like a broom, to the amazement of the spectators. The only person, he adds, who ever made the passage was an Indian squaw in a birch canoe.

It should be remembered that this was written less than one hundred years ago, and by a man who pretended to write the history of Connecticut! Speaking of New Haven, Mr. Peters says it is composed of three hundred squares, with streets twenty yards in width. Forty of these squares were in his day closely built up and densely populated. Once more he says that a Deacon Potter, of New Haven, was executed, and buried with his beasts, because of a capital charge brought against him by his young wife, who desired to marry another man. The charge was that Deacon Potter did not render his wife due benevolence, and was an apostate! A man who could deliberately concoct such fabrications, and claim for them the dignity of historical facts, was certainly qualified for originating the alleged Blue Laws. He must have reached that stage where a vindictive imagination was of more consequence to him than truth. Such a man as this was Mr. Peters. He must have known the falsity of his statements, and they were made evidently for the purpose of avenging his supposed wrongs. As before the war there were men at the South who believed that Yankees had horres, so in England, a century ago, there were men who would believe anything mean and devilish of the American colonists. Mr. Peters knew where his scandalous wares would sell. But, happily, he is the only man who, claiming to be an historian, has ever alleged the existence in Connecticut of a genuine code known as the Blue Laws, as described by himself.

According to him, these laws provided that no man should be a freeman, or give a vote, except he had been converted and was a member in full communion of one of the churches of the "Dominion." No man should hold office who was not sound in the faith; and whoever should vote for such a person should be fined £1 for the first offence, and should be disfranchised for the second. Quakers and dissenters were not allowed to vote at all. It was even provided that neither food nor lodging should be granted to a Quaker, Adamite, or other heretic. No one was allowed to read the Book of Common Prayer, keep Christmas, or saints' days, make mince-pies, dance, play cards, or play on any instrument of music, except the drum, trumpet, and Jews-harp. Adultery was to be punished by death. All priests were banished, and were to be executed in case of their return. They could be seized by anyone without warrant, and brought to trial. No one was allowed to travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep house, cut, pare, or shave on the Sabbath. No woman was to kiss her child on the Sabbath or fasting-day. The Sabbath was to begin at sunset Saturday. No man was to court a maid in person, or by letter, without first obtaining the consent of her parents. For the first offence he was fined £5; for the second £10; and for the third should be imprisoned during the pleasure of the Court. Married persons were to live together, or be imprisoned.

Mr. Peters admits, however, that the women of Connecticut were strictly virtuous, but to be compared to prudes, he says, rather than to the European lady. They were not permitted to read plays, could not converse about whist, quadrille, or operas, but would freely talk upon subjects of history, geography, and the mathematics. They were great casuists and polemical divines, and also efficient students of Greek and Latin. Perhaps, in his opinion, they might have been sweet and lovable, had their male masters exerted a less barbarous tyranny over them.

Yet it must be confessed that the severity of character demanded in the Connecticut colonies laid the people open to the harshest criticism and ridicule. Surely it afforded Mr. Peters the best of opportunities to assault them, and heap upon them invective and misrepresentations of the vilest character. Their laws, as recorded by Samuel M. Smucker, who, by the way, is a correct authority in the matter, show them to have had but a modicum of the milk of human kindness in their make-up. Capital punishment was resorted to for offences, not of a trivial character, certainly, but yet of that degree of venality which should never have been punished by death. Prominent among these crimes were idolatry, witchcraft, blasphemy, bestiality, sodomy, adultery, rape, man-stealing, wilful insubordination to parental authority, and refusal to be chastened by parents. The justification of this code was found in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, the spirit and purpose of the Gospel being wholly ignored in the formation and adoption of the system. The barbarity of going back to the Jewish code for laws has never been satisfactorily explained, and never can be. Yet, in spite of these stringent restrictions, crime prevailed to an alarming extent in the colonies, and could not be rooted out. The people were not better or purer than the less rigid settlers of Maryland and Virginia. On the whole the latter, if anything, were the most exemplary. No reform can be built up successfully through a system of capital punishments. The Connecticut colonists made fools of themselves by attempting to rule men in the seventeenth century by laws which might have been well enough in the times of Moses and Aaron. Such want of common sense and common humanity cannot be overlooked or forgiven. It was not in any degree a Christian régime which the colonists originally established. Rather it was a Jewish hierarchy. One looks in vain for generosity or brotherly love in it.

Had Mr. Peters intended his Blue Law scheme as a satire it would have proved a chef d'œuvre. But it was not as a satirist that he wrote. His aim was to make the world believe the worst things possible of the Connecticut colonists, and it is clear that he met with considerable success. Among other laws which actually existed in the early history of Connecticut was one providing that no man should take tobacco publicly in the street, or barn-yards, or upon training-days, nor should he do so upon the highways, or in any open places, under a penalty of sixpence. Another law prohibited the sale of wine and strong drink by retail, except by dealers under authority of the court. This, by the way, was the first license-law established in the country.

The decisions of the courts, particularly of New Haven, were amusing in the extreme. Jacob M. Murline and Sarah Tuttle, a couple of unmarried young people, who cared more for love than for law, were fined for kissing each other, without having obtained permission for doing so from the girl's parents. The court which rendered the decision was held May 1, 1660. On February 5, 1639, Captain Isalah Turner was fined £5 for being drunk on the Lord's day. On January 1, 1643, Goodman Hunt's wife was banished from the town for allowing William Harding, a wild young fellow, to kiss her. December 3, 1651, this same William Harding was sentenced to be whipped, fined £10, and banished from the plantation, for misdemeanors with young women. "Sinful dalliance and folly," as the language of the times has it, was punishable with whipping.

The code which prevailed in the colonies was compiled by Roger Ludlow, and adopted at Hartford in 1639. Some changes were made in it subsequently, when it was permanently established and became known as the "Blue Laws," or Code of 1650. It remained in operation till 1836, when Governor Andros was appointed governor of New England by James II., and ruled the colonies by statute dictated by authority of the British monarch. Cruel, harsh, and unchristian as were many of the enactments of the first settlers of Connecticut, they were not guilty of conceiving a system so bitter and execrable as the Blue Laws of Rev. Mr. Peters' own construction. The latter never had an existence, except in the brain of Peters, who hated the Connecticut colonies with all his heart. His pen was envenomed, and he gave full license to his hatred. With all their faults, the people whom he attacked were better than the average of men. They feared wrong-doing, though often guilty of it. Sin was monstrous in their sight, and their aim was to set up a community where the fear of God should predominate, and where his commandments and laws, as originally revealed to the Jews, should be obeyed. Their principal fault was that they sought truth in the Hebrew Scriptures to the neglect of the Gospel. Justice tempered with mercy was a matter of which, either in civil or social life, they knew but little.

REV. MR. ELDER ON "WOMAN AND POLITICS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

You deserve the thanks of every woman who has ventured to demand for herself and her sex the rights of suffrage, for publishing in full Rev. E. S. Elder's carefully prepared paper against that movement. It is best for us to know what obstacles we have to overcome in what we have undertaken.

Although I think most of Mr. Elder's points have been met and answered over and over again by abler pens than mine, yet I cannot resist the temptation to answer some of them briefly from a woman's point of view. He seems to be under the enviable hallucination that "whatever is, is right," as far as woman is concerned; that everything has been done for her that she could reasonably ask for.

All, I think, that women wish to claim in politics is "equality before the law." I wonder if Mr. Elder would designate as "just" a law which would give to a man, on the death of his wife, only a life-interest in one-third part of their mutual property.

It is true that women are no more generous in the matter of wages than men, though the majority of them are far more limited in their ability to evince such generosity than are men. It is true, also, that men, with a wider acquaintance with the laws of demand and supply, would more speedily recognize a need to raise wages; but that is because women have not hitherto been brought face to face with these questions; and since the ballot must necessarily bring these labor questions before women for their consideration, the sooner it is granted them, it seems to me, the better will it be for the interests of the community.

"There are nearly 34,000 women," says Mr. Elder, "whose property is taxed in Massachusetts. It is doubtful if 2,000 of these feel themselves aggrieved by the operation of the law." Assuming this statement to be true, is that any argument for "taxation without representation"? Are we never to have any reform until every person to whom injustice is done protests in words against that injustice? Is a wrong to be forever tolerated so long as any portion of the wronged do not understand the wrong done them, or do not dare to utter a protest against it? We sometimes, in the history of the world, have need to be awakened to the injustices we tolerate because we have become used to them, if not for our own present good, yet because of the fetters we are forging for those who have never consented to wear them,—the generations yet unborn. Indeed, there are authenticated stories of those who have sacrificed a lifetime of assured ease and happiness because of the generous pity they have held for unborn men and women to whose good they have sacrificed their own, and who of course have "never felt themselves aggrieved."

I do not reply to Mr. Elder's arguments against the idea of woman's power to purify the ballot. I do not ask for it on any such ground as that; I ask for it only as a bar to be removed from the way of woman's equality with man. I do not think woman is, morally, one atom better than man, nor do I even say she is his intellectual peer; I confess, why, that she is by no means that yet, and that is why I demand that one important step be taken to bring her up to his intellectual level by removing all degrading restrictions to her pursuit of knowledge, such as the denial of the franchise undoubtedly is.

"The actual question," says Mr. Elder, "is this: Is there any reason for believing that the 370,000 women who would become voters in Massachusetts, would in any respect excel the 351,000 men voters?" Now the actual question is nothing of the sort. The actual question is this: by what law of equity do the 351,000 male voters of Massachusetts possess the power positively to forbid the 370,000 women of Massachusetts to vote, if they, one or all, so desire? I am afraid that it is not from any supreme unselfish desire "to do the State some service" that women ask the ballot, any more than it is from any supreme unselfish motive that the foreigner who comes to participate in the benefits of a new and free country hastens, as soon as possible, to become a voter and a participant in making its laws.

Mr. Elder "assumes" a great deal too much, it seems to me, when he assumes that "the interests of women are identical with those of men, and consequently that the interests and rights of all individuals would be as truly represented by all men as by all men and all women together." He might as well assume, on the broad ground of a common humanity, that the interests of one man are identical with the interests of all other men, so that in reality there should be for convenience and expedition in public business the "one man power."

"The persuasive eloquence, the ability and self-sacrificing persistency of the advocates of suffrage, have not yet succeeded in making the women of America, of New England, of Massachusetts even, conscious of their suffering, or confident that by a vote they can improve their condition." I wonder what the Rev. Mr. Elder expects women to do to show that they are "conscious of their suffering." Does he in these days of "moral suasion" expect to see women rise up en masse, and, taking arms, demand their rights at the point of the bayonet from their fathers, husbands, sons, and brothers? Does he not understand the full meaning of the yearly procession of petitions—petitions heavily freighted with the signatures of Massachusetts women,—which finds its way into the Massachusetts Legislature, and reaches the ears and eyes, if not the heart and brain, of our male lawmakers? What does he think is the meaning of this mighty agitation of the question,—an agitation so real and so tempestuous that it has waked him up to defend his sex from the accusation of injustice? Why, does he think, do "women in America, and New England, and Massachusetts even," carry on journals devoted to presenting this question in every available form before the public, often at great pecuniary loss to themselves? Why do quiet, home-loving women, like the Smith sisters of Connecticut, feel called upon to brave public opinion, and sacrifice all that they hold dear in the way of home associations, in order to protest against the injustice they feel so keenly? Why do cultured and refined women, like Mrs. Howe and Mrs. Stanton, with many others as well-known, leave the home life that is so dear to all women to impress upon the public mind the injustice which is so patent to them? And in the face of all this, and much more, Mr. Elder would have us believe that "the women of New England have scarcely dreamed that their interests were not protected, their rights were not secured." Whence then arises this commotion? Was it ever before known in the history of reform that any effort was made at all commensurate with the woman's suffrage movement, before ever the aggrieved party was aware of any grievance to be complained of? As a woman, let me say to Mr. Elder, that in this reform, as in all others of like nature, the burden of injustice was borne uncomplainingly until the pain it gave forced from the sufferer a cry of revolt and protest.

We confess that men, thinking, philanthropic men, since they first recognized the purport of that cry of protest, have been our best helpers in this cause, and that the unthinking women who have found for themselves gentle and generous masters, have proved the heaviest stumbling-blocks in the way of that vast number of women for whom enfranchisement is most needed; against whose brutal masters the law gives no controlling or retaliatory power.

Mr. Elder boasts of the privileges which the law already gives, which man, unhelped by feminine interference, has graciously granted to woman for her protection. How have those privileges been won? By the agitation of just this question; by man's awaking to a sense of his own injustice, and conceding as his munificent gifts what ought never to have been withheld.

He thinks to throw a sop to the educated women who see the vital necessity of equality before the law for women, by urging that their vote will be neutralized by a low grade of womanhood with equal political privileges. I think woman suffragists understand this fully, and will vote (when they are allowed to) unanimously for a higher standard of intelligence in the legal voters of both sexes.

Mr. Elder sweeps away all question as to the propriety of woman's voting with one tremendous fiat: "There is no need of it," he says. And so the question is settled,—in his mind. Women may protest until the end of time against the injustice of being held to be the creatures of man, may beg forever in anguished tones for the power to express their will as men do, through the ballot,—Mr. Elder and his companions in logic cry, "There is no need of you; we are sufficient unto ourselves!"

All that he advances against woman's voting is equally pertinent against male suffrage, it appears to me. Is he ready to limit and restrict that for the same reasons that he wishes to forbid women voting?

"A jury of men will render a verdict more favorable to a woman than would be rendered by a jury of women," he affirms, intimating that we are to depend on generosity instead of justice. To the independent mind, a crust earned by hard labor is sweeter than the choicest viands bestowed by charity.

He appeals to the motherhood of women, as if a mother's duties would be neglected by a just appreciation of the public needs, or a half hour's absence at the polls once or twice a year. Women who have learned to have sympathies wide enough to take in all the human race, and to desire to work with them for a common good, are not going to make any less loving wives or mothers. The home circle that has a discriminating intelligence at the helm is going to be a better school for men as well as women than it now is, and men will not so soon learn to patronize all their intellectual inferiors their mothers and sisters.

After all the objections Mr. Elder has marshalled together, we are a little surprised to be told at the last that his "most fundamental objection to the woman's suffrage movement, is that it is a phase of that unquestioning faith in and superstitious worship of the ballot that may properly be named secular revivalism." Let us assure Mr. Elder that we have not that faith in the ballot that he ascribes to us, for we are not blind to what it has been in the hands of his sex; but we do claim it as belonging as much to us, be it for good or evil, as to our brother who arrogates to himself its sole possession.

One cannot repress a little smile at the enthusiasm manifested by Mr. Elder in pressing upon our attention, as a sort of balm for our mortified vanity in being denied entrance into the noble arena of political life, the glorious field of disinterested and unrewarded work to be done for humanity. He fondly fancies, as did Dr. Bushnell, that this unrewarded, unnoticed, yet needed work is the proper sphere of the highest womanhood. Self-abnegation is a good thing no doubt; but then it is one of those virtues which we women do not wish wholly to monopolize to the exclusion of our male friends. "Intelligence, moral insight, moral feeling, and loyalty to high ideals"—can't survive on a milk-and-water diet of vague praise for unrecognized and unremunerated labor. They need more substantial recognition on which to thrive. We women are all Eves in our longing for the forbidden fruit of politics, which looks so tempting in our brothers' hands, and which they seem to relish so much. Mr. Elder and his kind stand under that forbidden tree, plucking all its richest, ripest specimens for their own delectation, but crying out gravely and warningly to us not to attempt to partake with them: "For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The first Eve did not die on the day she ate the fruit, nor shall we.

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.

SECULARIZATION OF THE GOVERNMENT; THE ARGUMENT DRAWN FROM THE CONSTITUTION.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have read with deep interest in THE INDEX of the 20th instant the resolutions of the Boston Liberal League, adopted at their late meeting, and the speeches of Mr. Savage, yourself, and Mr. Seaver, upon the secular character of the government. But I am surprised beyond measure that neither in the resolutions nor speeches was there the remotest allusion to what the Religious Amendment party consider the strongest argument against their cause,—the complete secular character of the Constitution as shown by the ratification of the Treaty with Tripoli, which occurred during the administration of Washington. Will you allow me to say a word or two on that point?

In his last annual Message to Congress, President Grant proposes that all church property should be taxed. The grand principle in the light of which we must discuss such a proposition is found in Article VI., Section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, where it is declared that—"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the Supreme Law of the land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitutions or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Now, if we wish to know what relation the Constitution and government of the United States sustain to the Church, or to any kind of religion, we have only to look at the Treaty ratified with Tripoli, one of the Barbary powers, which in religion was Mohammedan. The President of the United States at that time was George Washington, who had previously acted as presiding officer of the Convention which formed the Constitution under which the national government had begun its career in 1789. The Treaty with Tripoli, after being fully examined and approved by the Cabinet, was sent to the Senate; and, having been discussed by that body in all its parts, was then ratified, and became a part of the Supreme Law of the land. As the government of Tripoli was Mohammedan, it was naturally jealous and watchful in its treaty stipulations with a power that was not Mohammedan, lest in their commercial intercourse difficulty would grow out of the subject of religion. To remove all apprehensions of this kind, the declaration is solemnly made in the XI. Article of the Treaty by the United States as one of the high contracting powers, that "the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion." Could language be more plain and explicit?

Now, I take the ground, which every constitutional lawyer will admit to be tenable, that this provision of the Treaty with Tripoli is a part of the Constitution, and the Supreme Law of the land; and that all these State and municipal prohibitions and requirements which look as if this were a religious government, if a case involving the question could be carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States, would be adjudged unconstitutional and void.

The antagonism between the State constitutions and laws on the one side, and the doctrine of the National Constitution on the other, in regard to this subject of religion, is explained in this wise. The general government was formed in 1787 out of the thirteen States; but these States were settled and organized long prior to that date by emigrants who came chiefly from the British Isles, where the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Solemn League and Covenant had exercised iron sway, and shaped the opinions of the people. As Mr. Savage in his speech hinted, the people of Europe could not then, nor cannot now, conceive of a government existing at all unless closely associated with the Church. They cannot rid themselves of the delusion that, if the State does not do something to support the Church, either by giving funds, or enforcing by law upon all the people some of the dogmas and rules she deems it all-important should be believed and observed, everything like religion would go to the dogs, and society would go back again into barbarism; forgetting that the highest-toned morality and the most worthy conceptions of God have existed, and do now exist, in times and lands, when and where the Bible was unknown. When, therefore, Scotch, English, and Irish emigrants sought a home in this country, then a wilderness, they naturally brought these European ideas with them, and impressed them on the State constitutions and laws where they settled. The present Sabbath laws of Pennsylvania date back to the days of Penn; and those of Massachusetts to the days of the Pilgrims.

But when the government of the United States was organized out of the materials composing the old thirteen colonies, it was a new creation altogether. The National Constitution, overriding the constitutions and laws of the States, made the national government a purely secular corporation, ignoring the very existence of a God, abolishing all judicial oaths, ignoring a future state of existence, or religion of any kind; not because the framers were atheists, but because they all believed that a civil government had nothing in the world to do with religion of any kind, except to protect every man in his religious belief, whatever it might be. This peculiarity of our Constitution did not express the mere opinion of the framers of it, for an opinion can be formed and entertained on ex parte testimony; but it was a conviction, which is a state of mind following an examination of both sides of a question. They saw how this doctrine of a union between Church and State in Europe had, to use a Scriptural phrase, led the Church a-whoring after false gods, and how the State (Spain for instance) had become diseased and enfeebled by its fornications with her; and they resolved to proclaim an eternal separation between them in this country for the honor and welfare of both. And this American doctrine, although some bat-eyed people do not see it, is the very palladium of true religion, because it recognizes the fact that religion is a matter which concerns the individual, and not the civil government; and makes every church a free and independent institution, instead of being forced, as the Church in Europe is, into an unnatural relation, where she is sure to commit spiritual adultery.

The Continental Congress, in breaking away from their allegiance to the British Crown, and founding a new government in this Western World, declared, in the immortal Act they committed on the 4th of July, 1776, that they took this step to secure the rights of human nature in general, and not their own in particular. As the human family is divided into many antagonistic faiths, how could they do anything else than what they afterwards did, in making the government a mere secular institution, thus giving liberty and respect to the religious opinions of all who might dwell upon the soil? In the Treaty with Tripoli they redeemed the pledge given in the Declaration, by proclaiming it and making it the Supreme Law of the land, that in no sense is the government of the United States founded on the Christian religion. And yet those Bourbons, the Religious Amendment men, are so insane that they would mar the Constitution by Europeanizing it with those hateful features which the people of Europe themselves are sick of, and would gladly reform away, if the task were not so herculean. And that large class of persons whose enlightened judgments will not allow them to keep close company with the Bourbons to the bitter end, still, like Peter, "follow afar off," by pleading for the continuation of Sabbath laws, the Bible in the schools, and the exemption of church property from taxation. What is worse still, the Judaizing Sabbatarians of Philadelphia, with an effrontery worthy of the old Spanish Inquisitors, demand that their will, which they say is the will of God, shall settle the question whether or not the gates of the International Exhibition shall be shut against the world on the first day of the week, which, in defiance of the teaching of the New Testament, they claim is the Sabbath.

I see by THE INDEX that you propose to hold a Congress of Liberals in Philadelphia next July. Do not consider it presuming, if one so humble as I should propose that steps be there taken to have a case brought before the Supreme Court of the United States involving the question whether the doctrine in the Treaty with Tripoli, that "in no sense is the government of the United States founded upon the Christian religion," is not, according to Article VI., Section 2 of the Constitution, the Supreme Law of the land; and that, therefore, the Bible in the schools, exemption of church property from taxation, Sabbath laws, judicial oaths, and all the other remains of the old European system now in vogue in some States, are null and void, and were so from the moment the National Constitution was adopted by the States respectively in 1790. This would wind up the whole discussion which is now agitating the country by singing the doxology in short metre,—Gloria to God in the Highest, and in the United States peace and good will to men!

A. B. BRADFORD.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., April 25, 1876.

NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, April 25, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

At Tiffany & Co.'s magnificent store, which, in the variety and extent of its exquisite wares, is said far to exceed anything of the kind in Europe, is to be seen a drawing of the "Bryant Testimonial Vase," which is now in process of execution at this establishment. The idea of a testimonial of some kind, for the eightieth birthday of Mr. Bryant, was first suggested, I am told, by Dr. Osgood. The proposal was readily responded to by many of the poet's admiring countrymen, and funds were raised for carrying it out. Competitive models were asked for, and the preference among those presented was awarded to the one by Mr. Whitehouse, the artistic designer at Tiffany's, and he has already been engaged on the work for many months.

The vase is of silver, and about thirty-nine inches in height. It is of a simple, classic form, whose outline is unbroken by the ornamentation drawn from nature with which it is covered, and which is intended to symbolize Mr. Bryant's life and character. On the base which supports it is the lyre for verse, crossed pens for prose, and broken shackles to indicate services in the cause of emancipation. The ornament around the lower part of the vase is of Indian corn with a band of cotton leaves, and at the foot is the water-lily. The apple branch forms a part of the fretwork. The handles are ornamented with the stalk, leaf, and grain of Indian corn, and the bud, flower, and boll of cotton. The primrose for youth, and the ivy for age, form a border above the handles. Around the neck of the vase is the line of the poet, "Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again," with the fringed gentian between the beginning and the end. A series of bas-reliefs illustrate eras in the poet's life. In one, as a child, he is looking up to a bust of Homer to which his father points. In another, he is reclining under the trees of a wood. Between these two is his portrait, crowned with laurel. Above this is the lyre for verse, and, beneath, a printing-press. In a medallion, lower down, is the water-fowl. Suggestive of the humorous poem of "Robert of Lincoln," is the American Bob-o'-link. Poetry is symbolized by the eglantine, and immortality by the amaranth.

The cost of the vase, it is estimated, will not be far from $5,000. It is to be finished for the Centennial Exhibition, and ultimately is to be placed in the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

In this Museum is now a colossal bust of Mr. Bryant, in bronze, by Launt Thompson. It was presented to the city for Central Park by Charles H. Ludington. But, as the Commissioners of the Park have decided to place no bust or statue of a person there during his lifetime, this bust is for the present lent to the Museum.

An organization of regular Comtists, I understand, still exists in this city; but they do not, as formerly, hold weekly meetings. The members are very much scattered, and they have no prominent speakers, so that they come together only occasionally, at a private house.

The elements for the organization of a society partly on the basis of Positivism, have, I am told, been in existence in this city for some time; and quite recently they have become united under the name of "The First Congregational Society of Humanity." According to their circular, "The design of this society is to promote human happiness, by increasing love, maintaining order, and securing progress. The instrument to be used is Untrammelled Human Reason; the foundation—ascertained, positive knowledge. It recognizes the existence of the Supreme Being, humanity, as the source, end, and aim of all human activities. It is from this great Being that we derive our existence, and for it all must work, and, if need be, die. All who are now outside of, and debarred from fellowship in, the old Church, by reason of having outgrown its superstitions and unscientific methods, will find a home in this Church, provided they have, or desire to possess, clean hands, pure hearts, and devotion to humanity." The prominent persons in this movement are Mr. G. L. Henderson and Mr. H. B. Brown. This society differs from regular Positivism, in setting aside the hierarchical idea, and adopting Congregationalism, as more consonant to the genius of our republican institutions. The communistic element enters somewhat into their organization, but in social matters they are strictly monogamous, and give great importance to the production and rearing of offspring under conditions best fitted to the elevation of the human race. The society holds regular meetings every Sunday in "Science Hall," 141 Eighth Street. This hall has been lately dedicated under the auspices of the "Religio-Scientific Society." The dedicatory address was by Charles Sothorn, his subject being "The Struggle between Theology and Science; or, Torquemada and Galileo"; in which, according to the reporter, "the speaker reviewed the religious ideas of the later times, and defended philosophy and freethought as having risen above the superstitions which hampered theology." This hall is designed especially for lectures on science, literature, politics, art, and reform. The building contains a large number of office and club-rooms, and is intended to be a centre for liberal literature and progressive thought.

A. H.

LETTER FROM GLASGOW.

GLASGOW, April 15, 1876.

DEAR INDEX:—

One of our local newspapers has lately set itself the task of ascertaining the actual church attendance in Glasgow on an ordinary Sunday. The bold conception has been, to all appearance, ably executed, with entire impartiality, and to the general satisfaction of all but a few whose churches did not show well in the list. As the city is large, it was divided into four districts, to be visited on four consecutive Sundays; but no intimation was given beforehand which district would be chosen on any particular day. Of course the last district visited had an advantage over the others in this respect, but that had no apparent effect on the result, as the first district which was selected, before any one was aware of the intention of the paper, showed up as well as any of those subsequently visited.

The mode pursued was to select that service, morning, afternoon, or evening, which, in the case of each church, was usually best attended, and the results before us are rather startling. It seems that we have altogether in Glasgow 255 Protestant churches—it was only the Protestant churches which were included in the census,—62 of which belong to the Established Church, 134 to dissenting Presbyterian bodies, and 59 to other denominations. The attendance at the Established churches numbered 28,458, at the other Presbyterian churches 59,911, and at those of other denominations 15,138, making in all 103,505; on which the editor in a leading article remarks as follows:—

"The number of persons counted in attendance at Protestant places of worship amounts to 103,505. Now, in proceeding to estimate the total numbers of those who can be reckoned church-goers in the city, and suburbs, allowance must be made in the first place for those who are detained at home by sickness and domestic duties. These will be amply covered by the 46,495, which raises the numbers to 150,000. Add to this other 50,000 for those who were present at a different service from that when the census was taken. To the 200,000 thus reached, we shall add 50,000 more for individuals who might be found attending public worship on other Sundays during the year. Young children (our enumeration included all children who were present in church), and persons engaged in working and being worked upon in halls and school-rooms at evening services, require still to be allowed for. Fortunately, or unfortunately rather, we can afford to be liberal. At the risk, therefore, of being thought to overrate the probable numbers, we shall, to include these classes, and to cover any omissions which may have been made under other heads, throw in another 50,000,—making in all 300,000. To this must be added 100,000 for the estimated number of Roman Catholics, with whose actual attendance at the services of their church we have nothing to do at present. Some 400,000 of the population is thus accounted for. Now our census extended over a much wider area than either that of "Parliamentary" or "Municipal" Glasgow. It covered almost exactly the ground taken in by the city chamberlain in his reports as 'the city, and connected and closely contiguous suburbs.' The population of this area in 1874 was estimated by him at 638,515. At the average yearly rate of increase for the last decennial period this must have risen in 1875 (for which his report is not yet published) to rather more than 650,000, and though the figures might be put higher for the present year, yet these are high enough for the present purpose. Deducting the number previously given, the estimate is thus reached, that the number of Protestants in Glasgow and its suburbs who cannot be reckoned as attendants on public worship is, in all probability at least, TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND."

And yet, spite of this, so strong a hold has Sabbatarianism on the community that not only have we no museums, libraries, picture-galleries, or other place of public resort open on a Sunday, but not a solitary trainway-car is to be found upon the streets. In view of the fact that there are a quarter of a million who don't seem to care for the churches, I thought it a good opportunity to suggest that they were numerous enough to demand some concession in the way of having our picture-galleries opened, or a course of science lectures instituted, so that they might be enabled to spend the day with more profit and pleasure than they can now, when they are cooped up within their own walls, if they desire to remain respectable. Accordingly I wrote to one of our papers, but the letter was not suffered to appear. Not daunted by this, I availed myself of a discussion that is now being carried on in Glasgow as to whether the inhabitants should tax themselves for the establishment of free public libraries and museums, to write to the editor of another liberal paper, remarking that one important question seemed to be totally overlooked by all parties to the discussion; namely, would the libraries be open on Sundays? But again, simple and harmless as the letter cannot but appear, it was suppressed. So long, then, as it is impossible to get the subject even broached in the most liberal local prints, there seems small chance of our relieving ourselves of this oppressive Sabbatarian nightmare.

I am, etc.,

JAMES BOYD.

IN ADVOCATING an inspection of conventual establishments in England, Sir T. Chambers said recently in Parliament: "The first case he would cite was at the Good Shepherd Convent, at Hammersmith. Certain persons whose houses overlooked the convent inclosure, saw a nun endeavoring to escape over a wall. They saw her seized by a man in the garb of a monk, who, with two women, dragged her back to the convent." This was March 18, 1875.

Efforts were made to obtain information, but they were of no avail. Why the nun strove to escape, or by what authority she was detained, has not been discovered. In another instance, Sir T. Chambers said two laborers, in January, 1875, saw a woman, very early in the morning, almost without clothing, escape from the Newhall Convent, in Essex. She ran nearly a mile up the railway line, and claimed their protection. She was pursued, taken out of the care of the men, and forced back to the convent. The statement made was that she was an Irish lady who was insane, and was sent back to her friends. But by what authority are insane persons to be dragged back into convents? What government can permit such mysterious occurrences to pass unquestioned? It seems that the subject of a general law for the inspection of convents is attracting a strong interest in England. In Italy, Sweden, Belgium, France, Spain, Austria, such a law already exists. It is only in England and the United States that cases like those cited by Sir T. Chambers could occur without legal inquiry.—Harper's Weekly, May 6, 1876.

Poetry.

WANTED—A MAN.

God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands.
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking;
For, while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions, and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps.

—Dr. Holland, in the Springfield Republican, 1856.

ORIENTAL STUDIES.

BY JAMES REDPATH.

I.

JAIMINI.

Eternal as the Soul is Sound,
Nor Time nor Space its life can bound;
Once spoken, Words can never die—
They echo through Eternity.

II.

FROM THE UPANISHADS.

1.

No human soul expires.
As from the blazing fires
A thousand sparks are thrown,
In nature like their own,
So, thrown from the Eternal Spirit
Our souls its endless life inherit;
For aye the quenchless flame shall burn.
We do not die; we but return.

2.

As rivers lose their form and name,
Yet drop for drop are still the same—
Not lost, but lapped in sea,—
So shall the wise soul be
Not lost, but merged in the Divine,
Who knows the spirit is its shrine.

III.

BUDDHA'S COMPASSION.

1.

The famished tigress howled in vain;
No prey to stay the hunger-pain
Was seen on all the burning plain.

2.

The savage mother, worn and faint,
Heard, wild with woe, her cub's weak plaint,
Then leaped for joy. She saw a saint.

3.

For Buddha, pitying her despair,
Is hastening to the tiger's lair,
In answer to her awful prayer!

4.

"Take me and feed your young," he said,
Great Buddha's blood was fiercely shed,
Great Buddha's heart the tigress fed.

—Independent.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 6.

Orray A. Taft, $4.40; S. F. Schild, $3.20; R. Fisher, $7.40; J. C. Lukes, $8.50; J. Bass, 50 cents; P. B. Sibbey, $1.25; Cary Brothers, $13.20; F. A. Angell, 50 cents; Jos. Knight, $3.20; Chas. Hazeltine, $2.95; Hugh McHugh, $1.60; J. Richmond, $1.10; W. J. D. Way, $3.50; E. R. Potter, $3.20; Frank Coffin, $2.85; S. J. Mathews, $3; —, 45 cents; F. E. Abbot, $100; Harry Hoover, $3.20; Mrs. W. A. Perkins, $3.20; J. E. Follatt, $3.20; Henry Pratt, $3.20; M. H. Riddell, $3.20; Wm. Sterns, $3.20; F. Hyde, $1; C. S. Palmer, $3.20; Adam Wolfe, $3.20; C. A. Hardy, $3; R. E. Grimshaw, $16.50; J. Danthy, $1; F. H. Guilwitz, 20 cents; L. H. Smith, 25 cents; J. A. J. Perkins, 50 cents; T. Clapp, $9; W. O. Mack, $3.25; Spencer Strang, $2.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 11, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VORSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnsdall, "	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaaki, N. Y.	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.	10.00
" 25.	" S. E. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.	5.00
" 25.	" John Hlat, Winchester, Ind.	5.00
" 25.	" A Friend	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.	2.00
" 3.	" A Friend in New York City	50.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.	5.00
" 8.	" J. D. Lange, New York City	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, "	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipper, St. Louis	2.00
" 8.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston	5.00
" 13.	" S. B. Honey, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.	5.00
" 13.	" C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.	10.00
" 13.	" G. F. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.")	5.00
" 17.	" J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sullot, Salem, Ohio	5.75
" 17.	" J. S. Bonsall, "	.90
" 17.	" M. Schlesinger, Albany	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York	25.00
" 25.	" Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.	90.00
" 25.	" Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.	5.00
" 25.	" W. H. Crowell, "	5.00
" 25.	" J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.	1.00
" 25.	" Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.	2.00
" 25.	" C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee	2.00
" 25.	" J. A. Heintzelman, Phila.	5.00
" 25.	" D. G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.	1.00
May 1.	" S. R. Koehler, Boston	3.00
" 1.	" Geo. McMahon, New York city	1.50
" 1.	" H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	5.00
" 1.	" C. A. Simpson, Saxonville, "	5.00
" 1.	" J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon	5.00

$475.45

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.00
A. Schelling, Philadelphia	1.00
Richard Hackett, Philadelphia	1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y.	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold, "	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Blason, Port Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	2.00
S. B. Honey, "	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. S. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio	.90
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia	5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia	1.00
George Langford, "	1.00
Thos. Phillips, "	1.00
Carl Doerflinger, Milwaukee	1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass.	1.00
A Friend, New Bedford, Mass.	10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y.	10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y.	20.00
S. R. Koehler, Boston	2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa	1.00
H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	1.00
H. C. Gray, Painesville, O., (collection)	5.50
J. Sedgbeer, "	.50
Through Banner of Light	15.50
" Boston Investigator	16.75
" New Age	5.50
M. Altman, New York city	20.00
F. A. Green, Boston	5.00
Friends in Boston	2.00

May 1.....$250.88

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

THIS WEEK'S report from Mr. Kilgore had not arrived on going to press.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15.	A Friend in Boston (paid)	$100.00
April 28.	Miss Marian Hovey, Boston (paid)	100.00
May 8.	Nath. O. Nash, Boston (paid)	100.00
		$300.00

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

NOTICE.

The Fifth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 3, 1876, at 2 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The ninth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, June 1st, 7½ o'clock, annual business meeting in Horticultural Hall, for the election of officers, reading of reports, and addresses on the practical aims and work of the Association.

Friday, June 2d, at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "Free Religion and the State." Afternoon subject: "Free Religion and the Church."

A social festival will be held in Horticultural Hall on Friday evening.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

WANTED—A NEW SUMMER.

By the terms of the bill which has just passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 139 to 94 for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, and which goes into effect on July 1, it is provided that "all religious sects are to have equal rights in the Indian Reservations." This is the language of the Nation, which we presume to have copied it from the bill itself, at least substantially. Moreover, "officers will be detailed from the army to take charge of Indian affairs, and the commanding officers of departments will be ex officio at the head of Indian administration within their departments." Consequently, on the very day appointed for the assembling of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, it will become a regular duty of the War Department, acting through the various department commanders and with the army at its back, to see to it that "all religious sects have equal rights in the Indian Reservations."

This sounds very well on first hearing. The protection of "equal rights" is conceded so generally to be a duty of the government, and the proposition to protect the "equal rights of all religious sects" is apparently so much a matter of course, that probably few people will notice the very significant substitution of "all religious sects" for all individual citizens. Yet the difference is immense. It means that "religious sects," as such, are to be legally recognized as parties entitled to the fullest protection from the government of the United States. It means that the army is to stand ready to see that the Baptists, as a sect, enjoy the same religious rights as the Methodists, as a sect; that the Presbyterians, as a sect, enjoy the same religious rights as the Episcopalians, as a sect; and so on. But it does not mean that the individual liberals of all sorts,—the rationalists, sceptics, heretics, spiritualists, materialists, theists, pantheists, atheists, and so forth,—shall all enjoy the same religious rights as the Baptists or the Methodists, the Presbyterians or the Episcopalians, the Catholics, the Swedenborgians, or the Quakers. It has never yet dawned upon the Congressional mind that an atheist has precisely the same religious rights as the most pious Protestant or Catholic in the land, and that the only way by which the government can possibly respect the religious rights of all individual citizens is to ignore utterly the very existence of "all religious sects" as such; to banish the Church from politics altogether; and to take cognizance only of individuals as possessed of religious rights to be protected. There are no "sect rights," equal or unequal, which the government should recognize in the least. The moment that the government of the United States undertakes to protect anywhere the "equal rights of all religious sects," it will be straightway entangled in a new, embarrassing, and most perilous manner with the Church.

If a correct description, therefore, of this new law is given by the Nation, it will create patriotic concern in all who perceive the necessary outcome of the policy thus begun. This is a very bad provision, which may not be productive of any immediate mischief, but yet constitutes one of these unheeded, insidious measures by which constitutional liberties are gradually lost. It is not a step forward, but a very long step backward. When President Grant turned over the care of our Indian tribes to the religious sects as such, for the avowed purpose (as expressed in the circular of Secretary Delano) of "Christianizing" them, he did a very bad thing with undoubtedly very good intentions, established a precedent sure to be a potent weapon for evil in the coming struggle over the politico-religious question, and cemented a very un-American alliance between the Church and the State which is now casting its black shadow even over Congressional legislation. Such work as this has all got to be undone, now that it is too late to prevent it; and it will be undone without fail, unless America is faced towards the past. Nothing could be more destructive of religious liberty than to accustom the people to this substitution of the "equal rights of all religious sects" for the equal rights of all individual citizens; for such a substitution is the decay of the American idea—the abandonment of that which constitutes the peculiar genius of American institutions.

The interests of religious liberty for the whole people—not merely for Protestants as against Catholics, or Christians as against Jews, Buddhists, freethinkers—require the presence in Congress of a statesman as learned, as eloquent, and above all as incorruptible and as heroically devoted to equal rights in religion, as Charles Sumner was to the cause of equal rights in citizenship. To-day, and probably for many a long to-morrow, it will be impossible anywhere to elect such a man to Congress on such an issue; yet he will be needed there more and more every day, to prevent, or at least to expose in season, such fatal betrayals of the American idea in legislation. We hope to see him there yet before we die.

CENTRIFUGAL AND CENTRIPETAL.

Freedom in thinking on religious subjects has reached a point that, even half a century ago, could not have been anticipated. In speculative matters freedom is, we may say, complete. A respectful hearing is granted to any and all opinions that are presented in a respectful way. Opinions that are presented in a disrespectful way, in the manner and with the tone of defiance, are listened to thoughtfully and gently, in consideration of the past injustice that has provoked the intemperance of dissent. The age of persecution for mere opinion's sake is over. The "infidel" has the comfort of his infidelity. The "atheist" may entertain his atheism in peace, and promulgate it with impunity. The excitement of the struggle for liberty, except in very remote places, has subsided. Parker died sixteen years ago, and now is called conservative by conservatives, who at the time of his death thought he had reached and passed the limit of allowable freedom. The Free Religious Association was organized nine years ago. It was then apprehended by some of the most ardent champions of spiritual liberty that the movement was premature, and would compromise liberty. They feared the formation of another sect which would embarrass progress, and solemnly admonished the advocates of association against the danger they incurred. The experience of nine years has falsified their prediction. The spirit of liberty had already gone so far that centralization has not been at any time imminent. The Free Religious Association has been perfectly true to its pledge, and without effort. It has not become a sect, nor is there the least reason to fear that it will be a sect. On the contrary, it has steadily applied its principle, as occasion demanded, without dispute, misgiving, or even question; and it has the satisfaction of seeing its principle adopted by people who were at first hostile to it, and of hearing it called commonplace, and a truism too well accepted to need associated advocacy.

Things being so, is it rash to conclude that the radicals may now safely combine and concentrate for certain special ends that cannot be attained otherwise? Can they not, even yet, trust themselves, or each other? Is their principle still so indefinite and precarious, that they cannot venture to approach each other within arm's length for fear of losing their individuality? How much longer, then, must we wait? What further attenuation must the centrifugal force be drawn out to?

If it were a question of concentrating for the purpose of forming a party—concentrating on beliefs or opinions,—that were quite another matter. That would be a disloyalty so active and palpable as to be self-convicted. No friend of liberty would think of that, or countenance it, even in appearance. Such a thing was never dreamed of. Precisely the contrary. The absolute accomplishment of liberty, making the formation of a new party impossible, is the ground of belief that the time has come when a practical direction can be given to the principle which is now running to leaf, and waving rather uselessly in the wind. The centripetal force is required now to balance the other. If radicals do not yet feel able to combine for anything, their radicalism cannot be of good quality. May it not be that by long pursuance of the diffusive tendency they have become thin-blooded, weak, and visionary?

They are practical things that call for combination; things that many may unite in without in the least compromising their special shades of opinion, or arresting their speculative speed. One thing is the support of a thoroughly able, broad journal, that may adequately represent the liberal tendency in the country. Another is the establishment and support of a central office for publications, so that their best literature can be placed before the public in dignified and attractive shape. Another is the active encouragement of measures looking towards the abolition of ecclesiastical usages and laws in secular affairs,—in other words, to the entire separation of Church and State institutions; an end toward which the radical idea points with unmovable finger. We are not of those who charge radicals with indifference. Rather they seem absorbed by the fascinations of principles the practical issues whereof they have not fairly contemplated. Their radicalism is a luxury which has not lost its edge, and which they are never sated with. They repel the thought of turning from their banquet, and travelling many days "on the strength of their meat." But the use of food is to make blood; and the power of the blood is shown in the vigor of life. Radicals will be judged to be but half believers, if they do not before long justify their faith by works of more pliancy and moment than vindicating the liberty of their opinions. Even now, radicalism is falling into discredit through its practical inefficiency. It will be its own fault if it falls into discredit utterly and irredeemably.

O. B. F.

SCHOOLS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

While I have been in Columbia I have made it a point to study somewhat the educational problem in this State. Here, as everywhere in the South, the crying need is more schools, more instruction. A better start, perhaps, has been given to the cause of public education in South Carolina since the war, through philanthropic help from the North, than in most other Southern States. Here have been found some of the finest teachers that the North sent into the field; and some of the best organized schools, that have set good models for after-workers, have been the natural consequence. But in spite of Freedmen's Commissions, and all other charitable aid from the North, and notwithstanding the home efforts that are now being made in the same direction, it is evident that what South Carolina wants most of all is the school-teacher and the spelling-book. She wants free schools for the whites and blacks alike.

The State has already organized a public school system; and most of the schools that were started by Northern philanthropy have now been adopted by the people, and are supported by public taxation. The seventh Annual Report of the State Superintendent of Education for the year 1875 now lies before me. It is a bulky pamphlet of 170 pages, and indicates that the machinery is set for a good educational work. But it is evident, on inspection, that through poverty, parental and public indifference, and the as yet somewhat disorganized state of society, the machinery is not doing half the work that it might do, and that needs to be done. The Report shows, for instance, that while there are in the State 239,264 children of the proper school age, there are in school only 110,416,—a good deal less than one-half. Of the white children a little more than one-half are shown to attend school; of the colored much less than half. There appears, however, to have been a considerable increase in the school attendance and in the number of schools over the preceding year. Again, the Report shows that the average time throughout the State during which the schools have been open, for the year 1875, is but four and one half months, when it should have been twice that. The time, however, is not averaged by the number of scholars in the schools; and it should be said that the large schools in the cities keep open longer than the schools in the sparsely-settled country districts. The State has a Normal School, well-organized, and under efficient teachers, but it only has as yet about forty pupils.

Considering how poor the people are, and how they have been swindled by rascally office-holders, what they have done and are attempting to do for public education is highly commendable. But it reveals the immense deal of work that still needs to be done. And in this work the encouragement and aid of the North are still needed. Philanthropy can make no better investment of its funds than in Southern schools,—especially in such schools as the Normal and Industrial Institute at Hampton, Va., of which General Armstrong is the head. The North can now help the South in no better way than by helping to train teachers of character and ability for the public schools. The public school is to be peculiarly the safeguard of Southern society, politically and socially. One cannot go, as I have done, from the Legislature here to the penitentiary, and from the penitentiary to the public school, without feeling what a vast responsibility rests upon the latter for the future security of the State. Whatever Bishop McQuaid and others may say of the injury to morals from the public schools in the North, here, it is plain, the public school presents the only moral and civilizing influence that is now able to reach a large number of children. In the Howard School, of Columbia, the other day—a school of 700 colored pupils, most efficiently disciplined and taught under the principalship of a colored woman of fine intelligence and character, who has the aid of several good assistants, white and colored,—I rejoiced not only in the mental training these hundreds of children were getting, but quite as much in the fact that many of them, for several hours of the day, are rescued from the evil influences of homes that are the abodes of barbarous ignorance and degradation, and for these hours are brought under the moral power of persons of culture and virtue.

But it is not book-education alone that is needed in the South. Industrial education is quite as much demanded. Said a wise old negro to a friend of mine, "I want my children to learn in the books, but I want 'em, too, to learn how to work, and not feel above it." And that was true philosophy—the philosophy of a public school system, needed in the North as well as in the South,—the training of the faculties to honorable and self-supporting labor as well as to book accomplishments.

W. J. F.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The impeachment of Belknap proceeds slowly, and, as we write, the question of the jurisdiction of the Senate is under debate. With regard to the guilt of Belknap, there is, of course, but one opinion, and most persons, we suppose, would be glad to have him debarred from ever again holding office; but we very much doubt, nevertheless, the right of the Senate to try him under present circumstances. The fact that he is not now a civil officer of the United States cannot be disputed, nor can we be satisfied with the assertion that the arguments against the jurisdiction of the Senate are purely technical, as many maintain. The Nation, we observe, holds that "the notion that the Senate has no jurisdiction over persons who are out of office through resignation, is open to the serious objection that it renders the whole process (of impeachment) nugatory, inasmuch as any officer can thus escape it and immediately be reappointed to office." Our reply to this would be that it presupposes a collusion in rascality, on the part of leading officers of government, in the highest degree improbable. If Belknap can be tried by the Senate, why cannot Jefferson Davis be tried; and why may not notoriety-loving politicians initiate impeachment proceedings against any one of a long list of civil officers who went out of office fifteen years ago? General Grant's blunder in hastily accepting Belknap's resignation is not likely to be repeated, but will serve as a sufficient warning to future Presidents. On the whole, therefore, we are inclined to believe that if Belknap be handed over to the Criminal Court which has indicted him, it would be safer for the country to risk the possibility of having him again appointed to office rather than to establish a precedent which may become the parent of a great deal of mischief.

During the week, Mr. Blaine has gained the two delegations from Oregon and Maryland, and some of the delegates from Georgia and from Massachusetts. Newspaper calculations give Mr. Blaine a plurality of the delegates already chosen to the Cincinnati Convention, Mr. Morton coming next, then Mr. Conkling, and Mr. Bristow fourth. As every day makes plainer the fact that the Republicans can hope to win the next election only by retaining the votes of all who have ever been identified with the party—including most of the Independents,—the appeals of the party papers for harmony of action are becoming amusingly urgent, and they exhibit a remarkable facility for extolling Mr. Blaine in one column and Mr. Bristow in the next, maintaining the equal excellence of both men, and feeling assured that those who favor the nomination of Bristow should be willing to accept of Blaine in case the latter should receive the nomination, even as they (the party papers) would be willing to accept of Bristow under like circumstances.

No one doubts that Mr. Blaine (provided he remain uninjured by the Little Rock and Fort Smith investigation), if nominated and elected, would make a respectable President,—that is, he would be personally popular, and he would avoid the worst blunders of Grant. The principal objections to Mr. Blaine are (1) that he is not and (2) cannot be a reformer. He has been identified with the present methods of administration for very many years, and has never shown the slightest disposition to reform them in any way. Even if he were now disposed to favor a reform of the civil service, his obligations to leading politicians would make any practical efforts impossible. Moreover, Mr. Blaine (3) is emphatically a politician, as distinguished from a statesman, and is now manipulating every party wire of which he can get a hold in order to secure his own nomination. In many minds, also, it is no slight objection against him that (4) he is, as Mr. David A. Wells would say, "a pig-iron protectionist."

Now, the time has come, in the opinion of very many of the best people of our country, for a thorough and persistent reform in our civil service, a reform which cannot be led by any such man as Blaine. The people who desire this reform would vote for Mr. Blaine only in case he should become the lesser of two evils between which they should feel themselves obliged to choose,—for instance, in case the Democrats should nominate a soft-money man. But if the Democrats should nominate a man like Tilden, and there should be a reasonable prospect that the party would be led by such men as Tilden, Hewett, Gordon, Wells, and Gaston, no one can doubt that a large, independent vote would be cast for the Democratic nominee. The Republican leaders should understand, therefore, that the success of the party in the next election depends, in all probability, upon the character of the man who is nominated at Cincinnati. The nomination of Morton or Conkling would certainly be followed by defeat. The nomination of Blaine would be attended by great danger, and would probably be followed by defeat, unless the Democrats should be guilty of gross stupidity. The nomination of Bristow, or of some man who represents the same principles with which the name of Mr. Bristow has become identified, can alone be made with perfect safety.

The English government has not yet decided to return Winslow, the Boston forger, nor has he yet been released, although it is probable that he would have been set free before now had not our government urgently remonstrated, although English law now forbids the surrender of a criminal unless the country sending for him shall agree not to try him for any other cause than that for which he is surrendered. Yet it should be remembered that this law was not passed until sometime after our present treaty with England had gone into effect, and treaty provisions cannot be modified by one country without the consent of the other. It is of great importance that a rascal like Winslow should not escape legal punishment, and we think, therefore, that the English government has made a mistake in bringing up this matter at the present time. We trust that further negotiations may bring about an amicable settlement of the difficulty, a difficulty, let us admit, for which we are somewhat to blame in that we tried a criminal recently for smuggling, after having failed to convict him of another crime—forgery, we believe,—for which he had been surrendered.

General Grant sent a very peculiar message to the House last Thursday. The House had passed a resolution—for what purpose, we do not know,—asking the President if he had performed any official acts away from Washington, and if so, requesting him to mention the acts and the place or places in which they had been performed. General Grant, very properly, in our opinion, declined to give the desired information, on the ground that the House has no right to require him to give an account of the discharge of his executive duties; and, further, that the information desired could be of no assistance in legislation. Appended to the message was a memorandum giving a statement of the absences from the seat of government of the various Presidents, and mentioning some of the acts performed by them while absent. From this memorandum it appears that Washington, besides other acts, issued the proclamation respecting the famous whiskey insurrection in Pennsylvania from Mt. Vernon, and that he was absent from the Capital at least 181 days. John Adams was absent 835 days in four years, and performed many official acts at Quincy, forwarding from that place, for instance, a commission for a Justice of the Supreme Court. Jefferson was absent 796 days in eight years. Jackson was absent 502 days, and signed the order for the removal of deposits from State banks at Boston. Later Presidents do not seem to have been absent so frequently, Taylor being away from Washington only 31 days; Fillmore, 60; Pierce, 57 days; and Buchanan, 57 days. No mention is made of the absences of Lincoln and Johnson.

The week, at Washington, has been a dull one. The Senate, besides attending to the trial of Belknap, managed to pass a single bill appropriating $50,000 for supplies for the Apache Indians, and for the removal of certain other Indians from one agency to another. The Japanese Indemnity Fund Bill was debated at considerable length, but no definite action was taken, it being, apparently, very hard work for the Senate to decide that the United States should be honest enough to send back money unjustly received. The House rescinded a resolution of censure upon

John Young Brown, passed by the last House; and appropriated $4,800 for the improvement of the ventilation of the Hall of Representatives. Both Houses accepted an invitation to be present at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, and decided to adjourn from the 9th to the 12th. Mr. Kerr's health has again failed, and Mr. Cox has been appointed Speaker pro tem.

In addition to the above proceedings of Congress, we are assured that the House did "a hard day's work" last Friday, passing on that day no less than sixty-seven private bills. Press-reports give us no information concerning these private bills, and it is safe to affirm, therefore, that they are of importance only to those whose names are mentioned in them, and to the particular members of Congress who "put them through." Of one thing, however, we may be certain; namely, that out of these sixty-seven private bills, not more than six or seven would under any circumstances have been presented by any member of Congress who has any regard for his national reputation. We wish it were possible to publish some account of the nature of every private bill, as well as the names of the Congressmen who dare to introduce them. Once in a great while, the introduction of a private bill may be justifiable; but if half-a-dozen private bills should be presented during a single session of Congress, five out of the six, at least, should be rejected.

One of the dangers of modern civilization was illustrated last week in the explosion of a railroad magazine on the Palisades of the Hudson River, above Jersey City. Not a vestige of the building or of its contents could be discovered after the explosion, and the solid rock upon which the building stood was excavated to a considerable depth. On the other side of the Hudson, the immense buildings in the lower part of New York City were shaken perceptibly, and people rushed to the windows of their houses, or into the streets, to ascertain the cause of the strange occurrence. No one in the city, of course, knew of the explosion at the Palisades, and it was generally believed that an earthquake had taken place. For the benefit of ministerial readers, we suggest that this incident might be used with telling effect in a sermon. The explosive materials of modern society are infinitely more dangerous than any known in former times, and need, consequently, far more careful handling. An application of the sermon might be made to free-lovers, socialists, and soft-money men, with a passing reference to prohibitionists, and to reformers in general.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, April 15, 1876.

I think that, a few weeks ago, I spoke of a dispute going on in Bolton, Lancashire, about a tombstone erected in the nonconformist part of Bolton cemetery to the memory of John Hilton, a secularist. On this tombstone were engraved two lines, found among the papers of the dead man:—

"Let gods attend on things that gods must know;
Man's only care relates to things below."

And to this were added the words: "Nescio Deos." A Roman Catholic and an Anglican priest, passing by, saw the inscription, and objected to it, and succeeded in bringing the matter before the Burial Board. A by-law that had never been enforced—to the effect that all inscriptions must be submitted for the approval of the Board before being engraved on the tombstones—was revived against the sons of the dead man, and they were ordered to erase the couplet. This they refused to do, and asked for assistance from the National Secular Society. The Executive of this society resolved to fight the case, if possible, and, to this end, procured an adjournment of the decision of the Burial Board, so as to give time to get council's opinion as to the possibility of carrying the matter into a court of law. A case was drawn up by the President and submitted to council, and the Burial Board adjourned their meeting until April 6. Council's opinion has gone against us, there being no case on which to fight, no legal "leg" to stand upon, in fact. The Burial Board on April 6 duly met and passed a resolution to erase the inscription, and this resolution came before the Town Council on April 12 for confirmation. An interesting debate took place upon it, the Mayor rising to intimate that he had received the following communication:—

"Copy of a resolution passed at a public meeting: 'That this meeting expresses its disapproval of the resolution of the Burial Board Committee of the Bolton Corporation passed on the 6th inst., concerning the erasure of the inscription over the grave of the late John Hilton, as an interference with the liberty of the subject and the right of free speech.'"

Mr. Bromley, in opposing the resolution that the action of the Burial Board should be confirmed, said, very justly:—

"To him, on reading the inscription, it was no offence whatever; it did not hurt, or offend his feelings. Indeed, he simply looked upon it as an expression of opinion which he strongly differed from himself, interpreted in the sense which many persons put upon it; yet at the same time as long as he asked for liberty for himself, he should endeavor as much as possible to grant the same liberty to every other burgess, and he trusted that council would endeavor to respect the rights of every burgess equally, especially in a public cemetery. They were all aware that the Cemetery had been made to supply the wants of the whole borough, irrespective of party, and it had been made with the public funds. Every burgess who was living at the time of its formation had to pay some portion towards its formation, and until such time that it was a paying concern they had to support its being kept in order. The council recognized the various opinions which then existed, which existed now, and which it appeared would exist forever. They divided the Cemetery into three great portions. The Church of England had one portion, the Roman Catholics had another, and another portion was allotted to all those who did not conform with either of the others. In the consecrated ground they had certain rites of their own, which he had never heard of the Dissenters challenging, and the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England were understood to be proscribed. The dissenting ground, which was intended for all those who did not conform, was called unconsecrated, and was not confined to any particular sect or party of religionists; therefore he thought it belonged to the people entirely, and if they allowed one expression of opinion on a tombstone, he did not see how they could draw the line and refuse another. All that they had got to look at was that duty and order were observed, and obscenity was excluded from the graveyards."

Mr. Bromley was honest enough to see that, as he claimed liberty for himself, he must grant it to others, and there was no plea, except that of might, which could support the freedom of one that did not equally support the liberty of all. The very fact that a portion of the Cemetery is set apart for those who do not conform is a confession that their disagreement is recognized, and their right to that disagreement acknowledged. How inconsistent then is it to say, "You may disagree with us," and then to object to the Dissenter expressing his dissent! Mr. Bromley also very candidly said that he had known the late Mr. Hilton for many years; that he was a "good, honest, and upright man," and that it would be disgraceful to the council if they desecrated his grave. Mr. Brinslow also spoke against the erasure of the inscription, although he much objected to it personally, for he thought "it would be something fearful if the Churchmen were to quarrel with the Dissenters, the Catholics with the Protestants, and the Protestant Dissenters with what they termed the Atheists, as to the inscriptions on the tombstones." "If the Burial Board removed that inscription, they would have to investigate the whole of the other inscriptions in the cemetery, and that would be no light task, because there were scores of objectionable inscriptions, to his mind, in the cemetery, which would have to be studied and considered; if they voted against that particular inscription. Which is morally worse, atheism or idolatry? If they are 'much of a muchness,' then surely any inscription on a Roman Catholic tombstone appealing to Mary, mother of God, ought to be erased by a sternly Protestant Board, on the ground that prayers to a woman long since dead are manifestly idolatrous. The style of inscriptions would become an interesting record of the religious opinions of the majority of the Burial Board, varying according to the faith phases of the temporary majority."

Of course the majority of the town council were bigoted and intolerant; cetera va sans dire in a Christian land, and the resolution to erase the inscription was carried by a majority of twenty-seven against nine. The old protestations of reverence for liberty were duly repeated by the tyrannizers, "liberty" being, according to their ideas, the right of doing what they like best, and the right of forcing other people into accord with them. Liberty which is not in accord with their own ideas is "license," and must be sternly repressed; but it is a gross infringement of liberty if any one else interferes with their own free action.

Mr. Hilton steadily refuses to erase the inscription, and will leave the Board to carry out their own order; and he suggests that, if they begin upon the inscription on his father's tombstone, they must, in justice, erase others equally "objectionable." For instance, close by this grave is another, on the stone of which is engraved: "All his hopes and fears lie with him in the grave"; is not this quite as "un-Christian" as that on the late Mr. Hilton's tombstone? I suppose the Board will now send a mason to erase the inscription, and it is a curious question whether, in so doing, they will not render themselves liable to an action for trespass. At any rate, anything that can be done, will be done, to vindicate the right of those who support a cemetery to have a reasonable use of their own property. Hard as it may seem to the Christian, we sceptics must be buried somewhere. We must not bury ourselves in our back gardens—and we have not all got even back gardens,—and as we must dispose of ourselves somehow, and the cemetery is the only legal place, what can we do? If we were Christians, we might try to follow the example of Jesus and ascend into heaven with our "flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature"; but, being only materialists, we cannot accomplish this feat, and, finding ourselves on the earth, there we must stay. We sympathize with the Christians in their veneration, but scarcely see how to prevent it. Perhaps they might arrange with God that we should not die, and then we should not want any tombstones.

American friends of Mr. George Jacob Holyoake will be interested in learning that he is going to bring out a new weekly journal, entitled the Secular Review. Some money was lately subscribed by some friends of Mr. Holyoake to bring out a weekly paper, which was to have its own distinct place in secular journalism, working side by side with, not in opposition to, papers already established. Unfortunately, Mr. Holyoake admitted as co-editor a young man of considerable ability, but of a bitter and jealous nature, and, owing to Mr. Holyoake's temporary lack of eyesight, articles of an offensive character were inserted in the journal,—articles which Mr. Holyoake was the first to regret and to resent. He offered his coadjutor to carry on the paper alone, but the younger man elected to take it on his own shoulders. When subscriptions were first solicited, it was promised that, if either editor ceased to conduct the journal, the subscribers should be invited to elect another in his place. Some subscriptions have been paid in; one editor has passed away, but no election of a successor has been proposed. The broken agreement has naturally caused some bitter feeling. An appeal for further funds from the lone editor has fallen flat, and Mr. Holyoake is rightly and justly endeavoring to keep faith with those who promised funds on the strength of his honored name, by bringing out this new journal, to which his friends in Europe and in America will assuredly wish all success. Mr. Holyoake possesses a pen of delicate and artistic power, is a master of pure and graceful English, and has a brain of peculiar subtlety and precision. A place is marked out for him which no one else can fill so well, but the filling of which will do good service to the cause of civil and religious liberty with which his name is identified.

[We cannot resist the impulse to add a hearty amen to this graceful tribute to Mr. Holyoake—a man whose moral dignity is equal to his native literary genius, and who has by long years of faithful service earned the grateful regard of all true friends of mankind.—Ed.]

Communications.

A VOICE FROM SWITZERLAND.

SIR:—

How true it is that when we have been thinking very seriously on some subject, and wish we had sufficient ability to write out our thoughts, lo! in a short time we meet with a book, or pamphlet, or newspaper article which expresses all we wished to say much better and more forcibly than we could have done. I write this apropos of my change of religious views and my reading of THE INDEX. I have scarcely any fault to find with the paper; it has become a weekly necessity to me now, and I always find something in it sound, clever, able, and nutritive. Especially do I like your work, and the contributions of my friend, Mr. Potter, and of Mr. O. B. Frothingham. In THE INDEX of March 26, there is a communication from a Mr. Appleton, of Providence, on the "Knowable and Unknowable." I have no fault to find with the article as a whole; it is good and well written. But how long it takes really thoughtful and intelligent people to understand and truly sympathize with our great Emerson. Transcendentalist, dreamer about the unknowable, indeed! He is really the most practical man we have; he is a true philosopher, the man of thought of the age. If Mr. Appleton will read attentively the Conduct of Life, and the lecture on the "Progress of Culture" delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society at Cambridge in 1867, published in Letters and Social Aims, I am sure he will hardly speak again of Emerson "fumbling over his manuscripts for shapeless aphorisms," and not knowing what he means, or whether he means anything.

How truthfully and eloquently Mr. Emerson describes the character of THE INDEX in his "Progress of Culture"!

"We have been taught to tread familiarly on giddy heights of thought, and to wont ourselves to daring conjectures. The narrow sectarian cannot read astronomy with impunity. The creeds of his Church shrivel like dried leaves at the door of the observatory, and a new and healthful air regenerates the human mind, and imparts a sympathetic enlargement to its inventions and method. The cosmical west wind which, meteorologists tell us, constitutes, by the revolution of the globe, the upper current, is alone broad enough to carry to every city and suburb—to the farmer's house, the miner's shanty, and the fisher's boat—the inspirations of this new hope of mankind!"

I am writing these lines from the little town of Baden, about half an hour by rail from Zürich. The ruins of the old feudal castle of the Austrian family who had sway in Switzerland during the Middle Ages, overhang the modern town; and the principal street runs under a fine old tower with four turrets, bearing date of the close of the great fifteenth century, the period of the Renaissance. The picturesque ruins of the old stronghold look down upon the capacious modern school-house, and the rock upon which the castle is built is pierced by the tunnel of the railway which leads to Zürich. The close of the fifteenth century gave birth to many distinguished men, and a noble work they did in their confined sphere. But contrast the fifteenth with the nineteenth century! The feudal tower looks down on the flourishing school-house; the railway and telegraph pierce the living rock which the old robbers and tyrants selected for their safe retreats; the cheap post and electric wire carry the good news much faster and farther than the old lumbering diligence and lazy canal-boat.

When I was at Cambridge, I remember reading with great pleasure Stanley's Life of Dr. Arnold. From his life I went to his sermons, especially those delivered to the boys at Rugby school,—no doubt you remember them very well. One upon the "good householder who brings from his treasure things new and old" I have never forgotten,—I mean the lesson it taught. Let me beg of you, as an humble reader of THE INDEX, not to forget the vast debt we owe the past,—even the myths and mythology of the Bible.

In the last INDEX I received, there were two excellent letters on the subject of the recent overthrow of the devil by the civil courts in England. The decision was very just; but the devil of a sinful conscience is not dead by any means. Who ever emancipated himself more from the tyranny of the old creeds than poor Blanco White? And yet I remember his saying so forcibly: If men would only see the rewards and punishments of this life, the instant and delightful satisfaction following upon a good and virtuous action, and the distress, remorse, and often despair, following upon a wrong, sinful act; the heaven and hell are here, if anywhere. As Mr. Emerson says, "We see God face to face every hour." "Every day is Doomsday." "Absolve yourself to yourself." We need no priest; the old dogmas have their lesson for us, even the devil and his angels. Do not discard the old while teaching the new, for, after all, there is not much new under the sun. 'Tis the old story with a new formula, a new dress.

You may throw this into the waste-paper basket, but I have long wished to write you something, and tell you how sincerely your noble work is appreciated by one who is unknown to you.

I am very truly yours,

ATHERTON BLIGHT.

BADEN, Switzerland, April 12, 1876.

JAMES H. COTIER.

CHARLESTOWN, May 7, 1876.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Friend,—As you have kindly offered your columns for an appeal to the generosity of people in the case of James H. Cotier, I will briefly state the facts in the case, hoping that all who remember the young man, and desire to aid him in his efforts toward a true manhood, will, at this critical moment of his life, help him as their means will permit.

The members of the Second Radical Club will remember this young man, who two years ago was before them on several occasions to tell the story of his wrongs. They may remember, also, that he met Warden Chamberlain, of the Massachusetts State Prison, at a special meeting of the Club. For nearly two years he has been steadily at work, learning the printer's trade in New York City. He has conducted himself in a manner which has won the respect and affection of his companions, and the fullest confidence of his employer.

But for nearly five weeks he has been an inmate of the Manhattan Eye and Ear Infirmary, having suffered a severe injury to one of his eyes. At first the physician thought he must lose the sight of the eye, and even the eye itself; but now hopes are entertained of saving the eye, though with greatly impaired sight. He is unable and unwilling to remain at the hospital, but the physician says a change would be dangerous. He has no means, and has thus far met his expenses through the kindness of friends. May I not hope that all who remember his frank, open countenance, his earnest spirit, his evident purpose to make himself a useful and honored citizen, will aid him at this time, that he may not only be enabled to receive all the medical treatment he needs, but be gladdened and encouraged to continue his life of honorable struggle until he can by his own individual efforts stand alone, and return the favors extended to him by aiding others who are unable to help themselves?

M. S. WETMORE.

[We second this appeal very earnestly. Mr. Cotier is personally known to us, and has commanded our great respect by his manly endurance of misfortunes enough to crush all hope out of most men, young or old. He is no mendicant, and has given every proof of his resolve to win his own way in the world; but disasters have rained upon him thick and fast, and now he sorely needs a succoring hand. It would not be wise to tell his story in detail to the general public; he shrinks from this with a pride that all must respect; and it is only because fate threatens to make him permanently helpless through blindness that he has reluctantly consented to this appeal. Whoever remits money for him to "Mrs. M. S. Wetmore, 31 Cross Street, Charlestown, Mass.," may be assured it will do good, and good alone.—ED.]

THE SECTARIAN CONSCIENCE AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The question lately discussed in THE INDEX, as to whether our common schools should be secular or sectarian, seems to me to turn upon this point only: Is our government, as established by its founders, a purely secular government, or is it sectarian and secular mixed?

If it be a purely secular government, and, as such, good enough for legitimate Americans; and if under its protection perfect liberty of conscience is guaranteed to each and every individual in the nation,—then are not all religious sects which are attempting to inculcate their creeds into the Constitution of the nation, and of the separate States as well, open to an indictment for a traitorous attempt to construct "a Commonwealth within a Commonwealth"? If so, can these sectarians who are so invidiously and industriously "sapping and mining" the foundations of the government established by our fathers reasonably complain that, when caught in the act and compelled to desist, their equality of rights is infringed upon? Is it not a piece of high comedy, when they turn upon us with the whine: "Your boasted liberty is a myth!"—or, "Where now is your vaunted liberty of conscience?" "You forbid us doing what our conscience dictates; and our conscience, we know, is right, for do we not get it directly from the Pope, or the General Assembly, or from Brigham Young? Who shall gainsay it? To them do we owe allegiance, and not to your beggarly secular government! Therefore, if you hinder us in our holy work of constructing a Commonwealth within your Commonwealth, and of subverting your government to the end that we may establish the Christ's vicar in the papal chair in Washington, or the Head of the General Assembly, or Brigham Young, and so substitute our Syllabus for your Constitution, you are violating our several consciences, and your boast of liberty of conscience is as the idle wind."

Now, Mr. Editor, it seems to me (one of "the unlettered sceptics of the West") that the above is a fair illustration of the logic used by these religious zealots and bigots—all of them—in their attempts to graft themselves into the State, and into the common schools, into our social life, nay, into our very homes! If it be so, then out upon them all! They are as those who, receiving protection and hospitality at one's hands, insidiously attempt to fire his domicile and to destroy its inmates, and should be treated accordingly. Even their "sincerity" should not shield them.

But "what is a party which is so contemptibly small as not to be able, when left to itself, to make a respectable ripple on the surface politic, going to do about it?" This question, I opine, can only be answered by "Boss Tweed," and he, just now, is "non-comatus in swampibus up a stumpibus."

Yours, for well-defined lines of separation between State and Church, T. W. ROBBINS.
{ MILLBROOK P. O., Mecosta Co., Mich.,
April 18, 1876.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR ORGANIZATIONS.

LANSING, Mich., April 10, 1876.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Almost every citizen who takes any interest in the public welfare desires the organization of societies in every locality for the advancement of what he considers true reforms. All the friends of "free religion," for instance, desire to see that list of "Liberal Leagues" in THE INDEX greatly enlarged. But I have thought for some time that organization might to a great extent be superseded. Organizations are difficult to start, more difficult to maintain, and are always attended with trouble, jealousies, bickerings, etc. I propose the following method as more practicable and convenient:—

Let every newspaper, especially every organ of a reform, call for a list of three correspondents (influential persons) pro, and three contra, on the various reforms of the day, in every town, village, and neighborhood, the names to be published in certain designated papers, or on sheets by a bureau, and a marked copy of the paper or sheet be sent to each person named in the list, for correction if needed.

With these persons correspondence may be had, and through them the masses may be reached by party leaders, lecturers, publishers, bureaus, and reform societies of all kinds. Any one, or several, without waiting for any body else, may immediately forward such a list, as I do below, for example:—

LANSING, MICH.

Prohibition of liquor traffic: For—James J. Mead, A. E. Young, John A. Elder; against—W. S. George, Dr. H. B. Shank, Dr. I. H. Bartholomew.

Hygienic medication: For—E. Summers, Mrs. W. L. Larned, Mrs. E. R. Merrifield; against—Dr. Geo. E. Ranney, Dr. J. B. Hull, Dr. I. Dever.

Marriage: For radical change — — — — —; against—J. B. Porter, Rev. Coles R. Wilkins, L. B. Potter.

Woman suffrage: For—Mrs. S. E. Emery, Dr. H. B. Baker, Mrs. S. F. Summers; against—Mrs. J. B. Porter, T. R. Cushing, N. B. Jones.

"Liberalism," or unbelief in supernaturalism: For—Geo. B. Richmond, Dr. H. B. Baker, E. Summers; against—the pastors of the various evangelical churches.

Complete secularization of the State: For—W. S. George, E. Summers, Rev. D. Crosby; against—Rev. T. C. Abbot, Rev. Charles Simpson, Prof. E. V. W. Brokaw.

More science in the common schools: For—E. Summers, W. S. George, J. W. Kling; against—Prof. E. V. W. Brokaw, Rev. J. E. Weed, O. B. Stebbins.

E. SUMMERS.

"WASH AND BE CLEAN."

By a majority of 109, the members of the Young Men's Gymnasium of Cincinnati have recently resolved not to wash on Sunday. They seem to have forgotten that cleanliness is next to godliness. They are much like the little girl whose mother was vainly urging her to get up and bathe. Said she, "Mother, you like to be clean and cold, but I like to be warm and dirty." And so the rooms of the Gymnasium are to be closed on Sunday, and the members can go elsewhere, or go unwashed. The majority who have so decided hardly desire a reputation for uncleanness; but there is great danger that they have hopelessly fastened upon themselves the title of "dirty Christians." T. P. W.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 12, 1876.

"How is it," asked Bishop Willberforce of one of his Roman Catholic servant-girls, "that you can feel so kindly towards me when you believe that I shall certainly be lost?" "Oh, no!" said she. "But how can I be saved," persisted the bishop, "when your Church teaches that there is no salvation for those out of its pale?" "You will be saved through invincible ignorance," was the reply.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

HIDING.—I never saw a sinner in my life that was not trying to hide away from God.—D. L. Moody, at New York, Feb. 20.

HEADS OF NO USE IN RELIGION.—As Spurgeon remarks, the Bible does not say you must have new heads, or that you must seek Him with your head; but it says you must have new hearts, and must seek Him with your heart. If it meant head, it would have said so.—D. L. Moody at the N. Y. Hippodrome, Feb. 23, 1876.

THE MIRACLES OF PRAYER.—I know not how sufficiently to represent to the reader the prevailing efficacy of genuine prayer. We know that it has stayed the pestilence, that it has caused the sun to stand still in the heavens, that it has parted the sea, opened the prison doors, healed the sick, and raised the dead to life again.—"The Christian," Nov., 1875.

THE MINISTERS TO BLAME.—If, then, the "law is our school-master to bring us to Christ," and "we love him because (we see) he first loved us," let us preach and believe more in "the damnation of hell." Let the love we have for Christ and our fellow-men induce us to persuade them by all possible means to be reconciled to God. Are not the ministers of the Gospel to blame for not giving this doctrine more prominence in their discourses? If they really believe in the teachings of the Bible in regard to this matter, could you keep them from preaching it? And would there not be many more awakened and converted if they should? And will not the blood of souls be on their garments unless they change, and preach, as did John the Baptist, about the unquenchable fire?—Zion's Herald (Methodist), Boston, April 11, 1872.

FOREVER.—This then embodies the Scriptural doctrine of future punishment. It is not, as sometimes misrepresented, that men will be punished eternally for single faults committed in this life. Still less is it that though sincerely repentant and desirous of reform, eternal suffering will be inflicted on them. It is this: that as the tree falls so it shall lie; that as we choose so we shall live. He that has chosen the life of righteousness (in external conduct) and holiness (in heart) will be placed under circumstances which will insure him from ever falling under the dominion of sin. He that has chosen to be unjust (in external conduct) and filthy (in heart life) will be shut out from all the redemptive influences of this life, left to himself, shut up to his own choice, and so will abide in sin and consequent suffering forever.—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York, March 23, 1872.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.—The Lord's Prayer has been made the subject of an elaborate and costly stone-engraving (size 22x26). It consists of the Lord's Prayer embellished with over one hundred symbols and emblems of the most fitting and appropriate character. These symbols and emblems are decorated with the finest and most exquisite work that it is possible for an artist to do. The artist, Hermann Claussen, whose name is known throughout the world, has faithfully and with seemingly supernatural imagination and skill, engraved the imaginary scenes of heaven in its resplendent beauty and glory. The angels, cherubs, and the throne of God itself, have been cut in figures of matchless grandeur and beauty. Each line of words across the engraving is varied in size and style, so that all the choicest and most fascinating styles of type are represented. Nothing like it has ever been produced, and probably never will. It has cost years of toil and a large sum of money to complete this work of art. We have spared neither money, labor, nor time in the completion of what we regard as the grandest piece of workmanship ever produced in this country. We have made extensive preparations by which we are prepared to furnish both Protestant and Catholic copies, in any quantity, to agents and dealers in any part of the world. This explanation will give you but a faint idea of the transcendent beauty and perfection of the design and execution of this engraving. It must be seen to enable you to realize what it is in its perfection.

A Word to Agents.—As there never has been anything of the kind sold in this country, the selling of it affords you a golden harvest indeed. It is the only new thing of any importance out for agents at the present time. A large number of agents are at work selling it now, and are reporting extraordinary large sales from every quarter. You cannot fail to succeed in selling it, as the moral sentiment of this engraving insures its success. This feature cannot be overestimated, as it alone destined the sale of it throughout all Christendom. Every Christian man or woman will have one, if they have the money to buy it with. One word with regard to the price. In consideration of the excessive hard times, we have put the retail price at 50 cents each, which is remarkably low, and brings it within the reach of almost every person. Although it was intended at first to charge $2 per copy, this would only be a corresponding price with the average $2 stone engraving. Agents do not fail to send for a sample copy of the engraving to canvass with. You can easily sell one thousand copies in six weeks in any county in the United States, on which you can make $250 clear money. Prices to agents: sample by mail, 50 cents; one dozen by mail, $3.50; 50 by express, $13; 100 by express, $25. Address all orders to J. Bride & Co., 767 and 769 Broadway, New York. Be sure and mention the Independent when you write.—Advertisement in N. Y. Independent, April 6, 1876.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents; singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Midwinter.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World's Progress.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 11 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CELVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Historical and Social Subjects.....	2.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Obedience.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrowsky, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variations of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.00
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wife and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Madbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	1.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nonsense.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hour.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.00
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Food. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Cosmogony. By S. J. Stewart, with an Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Bagehot Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	2.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.50
My Shady Windows.....	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays. Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
1.50
MYART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROP. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MURIEL (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	3.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swinging' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	3.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union. Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hogged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	2.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., &c.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	.50
The Newcomes.....	.50
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	.50
The Virginians.....	.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.25
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols. II. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Book-Log Studies.....	1.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.00
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Character of Character.....	1.00
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.00
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.00
Real Folks.....	1.00
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.00
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " " "
 " 52 " " " " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSOC., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.
 Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Beaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thompson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesiah Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL.

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Maidenhead.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science; A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	3.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Prayer.....	2.25
The World's First.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Foot-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHURCH (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Descriptions in Words, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE B.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Obedience.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	5.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede..... Romola..... The Mill on the Floss..... Felix Holt..... Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life..... The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols..... Middlemarch. 2 vols..... Wife and Wisdom..... The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malboms. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Home.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Feeds. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Cosmos. A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fossilized Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	2.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Steady Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Lyell's Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3 vols.....	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MOBLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
On the Science of Religion. Vol. I. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. II. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	3.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kekoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul's Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.90
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PEEL'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.00
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S..... 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50 .50 .50 .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	6.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair..... The Newcomes..... Adventures of Philip Pendennis..... The Virginians..... Diamond, and Level the Widower..... Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	.50 .50 .50 .50 .50 .50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A Volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.50
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homelade.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$2.50

Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

DR. EDWARD E. DENNIS-

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

—AT—

ERINSTEIN, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

NUMBER LIMITED TO THIRTY.

T H E

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

FREY BYRNIE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotherton. Post-paid.....1.35

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

T H E I N D E X

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by

James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.;

one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W.

Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 60

cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13

and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one

hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred,

$3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by F. H. Channing.

25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS for 1873, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts.

each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of the two,

$50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25

Bromfield St., Boston.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Morse's Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale

at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont

Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-

selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000

to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox

man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER,"

care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton

Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense

kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Bedding a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year,

a Monthly Record and Review of the latest

and best works in Radical, Freethought, and

Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled

severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"

"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Her-etics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized,

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876.

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance, having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,
Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC RHEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS.

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1876.

WHOLE No. 334.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION was successfully opened on May 10 at Philadelphia. It was a great occasion and will be fruitful of great good.

IF SECRETARY BRISTOW is not "sufficiently known" to be nominated at Cincinnati, could a better nomination be made than that of George William Curtis? Surely his character and career have been long enough before the world.

"FATHER PHELAN, editor of the St. Louis Western Watchman," says the New York Telegram of April 15, "has adopted the following motto: 'We will not allow our public schools made Catholic, but we will have our Catholic schools made public.'"

IN HIS PRAYER at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition of 1876, Bishop Simpson thanked God "for a Church unfettered by the trammels of State." At the Bicentennial Exhibition of 1876, let the people rejoice in a State unfettered by the trammels of Church.

MR. KILGORE writes from Philadelphia: "The decision to close the Exhibition on Sundays creates a powerful opposition here. Our Liberal League took action first, and raised $84 to create a public sentiment in favor of its being opened. Several public meetings have been held, and I have no doubt the doors will be opened in spite of religious bigotry."

MR. CONWAY, comparing the setting aside of Lord Amberley's will, because he entrusted the education of his children to a freethinker, with the acquittal of one of the "Peculiar People" who let his child die through superstitious disregard of medical care, says pithily: "So it appears that a man may sacrifice the life of his child to a religious creed, but he cannot bring up his child, however carefully, without one."

A RELIGIOUS or "holy war" threatens to break out in Turkey. The Christians of Salonica endeavored forcibly to prevent the reception in the mosque of a young Christian girl who had been converted to Mahometanism; the Turks were incensed, took up arms, and assassinated the French and German consuls. The situation is very critical for the peace of Europe. Christians seek to convert Mahometans; why should they object, if Mahometans succeed in converting Christians? The idea of equal rights in religion seems to be totally foreign to Christianity.

THIS IS A pleasant and noble act to record: "On opening his letters one morning recently, Professor Huxley found in one of them a check for £1,000, sent by Mr. Thomasson, of Manchester, in the name of his lately deceased father, who was a great admirer of Professor Huxley, and highly appreciated his great achievements in furtherance of our knowledge of the science of life. Considering the little encouragement afforded to the study of pure science, this very practical and munificent method for the endowment of research is worthy of note, and we hope that the example may prove contagious."

THE REFUSAL of the Centennial Commission to open the Exhibition on Sundays is exciting a deep and strong indignation, and the victory of justice, common sense, and popular rights is probably near at hand. A large and enthusiastic meeting, at which Rev. Dr. Furness presided, was held at Philadelphia on the evening of Saturday, May 13, to protest against the continuance of this oppressive Sabbatarianism. For once Orthodox bigotry has presumed too far on the submissiveness of American citizens to its usurpations. It will be defeated, and its defeat will be a most salutary and conspicuous one. To be compelled to give way now will be far more disastrous to its cause than to have yielded gracefully at the outset.

"SINCE Good Friday was made a legal holiday," said the New York Tribune of April 22, "this custom has extended rapidly outside of the Catholic and Episcopal churches, especially in the cities; even secular newspapers feel bound to urge upon their readers consideration of the birth, death, and resurrection of Christ—subjects which a few years ago were left wholly to the pulpit or religious journals." Yes, and it was to get the illicit and subtle influence of a "legal" holiday on the side of Orthodoxy that the change was made. The Orthodox are shrewd enough to know the value of having the prestige of law on their side; but the liberals in general have not yet discovered the necessity of having the laws always on the side of liberty and equal rights. They overlook trifles only to find them giants.

THE REMARKABLE appeal for Mr. Morse's "Paine Bust" which we copy elsewhere from the St. Louis Republican (written by our esteemed occasional contributor, Mr. Albert W. Kelsey) is signed by some of the most eminent citizens of St. Louis. Mr. Yeatman, President of the Western Sanitary Commission during the rebellion, is a Presbyterian, and all the more entitled to respect for the courage and love of justice evinced by his signature. Mr. Allen is the great Western bridge-builder. Judge Holmes was formerly a Professor in the Harvard Law School. Mr. Sonnenschein is one of the ablest Jewish Rabbis of the West. Mr. Learned and Mr. Snyder are Unitarian ministers of high reputation. Dr. Bernays is as well-known in Germany as in St. Louis. In short, "the list represents four clergymen, four eminent jurists, bank presidents and business men, and four journalists." We hope to see subscriptions pour in rapidly to carry out this tardy act of justice to a much maligned friend of human liberty.

IN HIS interesting "Open Letter to the Massachusetts Medical Society on the True Nature of Disease" (A. Williams & Co., Boston), Dr. Edward E. Dennison, of Northampton, says: "The life which comes into contact with the world and the things of the world, through its eyes, ears, and sensibilities, having the power of locomotion and apprehension, referring its impressions to the central organ of the brain for inspection and action, may be called the voluntary life. Of this life we have cognizance and control. It is the dial upon which is marked the working of the deeper-seated and more important organism, which is involuntary and automatic. This automatic life is the same as, and part of, the great creative life of the world, and, like it, is in a state of constant, active conatus for the well-being of its subject." It is precisely this conatus in the automatic life of the individual which, when intelligently repeated in his conscious life, makes him regard himself as a constituent cell of a still larger organism, the human race, and dedicate his whole being to the highest advancement of mankind; it becomes "the effort of Man to perfect himself," and brings him into complete harmony with "the great creative life of the world"; in short, this conatus, this "effort," is the essence of religion, which is only a reproduction in the human soul of the eternal striving of Nature herself to realize, by a process of evolution, her own ideal. All historical religions are feeble attempts to accomplish the same end; but how much more magnificent is the universal religion which seizes the grand conception of Nature, and applies it intelligently to the problem of human destiny!

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAT CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBRIAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dowe, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

The Philosophy of the Heart.

A SIXTH LETTER FROM HENRY JAMES.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have been so uncommonly busy since THE INDEX of April 13 appeared, that I have actually not had time before this morning to do more than cast a hurried glance over your reply to my fifth letter.

I have read it this morning, however, with great interest. I sympathize cordially with the trouble I have occasioned you, and will instantly do what I can to relieve it. I had certainly no thought of engaging your attention to the extent I have done, when I began the present correspondence. I had, as it seemed to me, a very plain criticism to make upon your definition of the aim of religion, and one which required no subtlety of understanding in our readers to estimate it. But clearly in thus thinking I "reckoned without my host," since unfortunately you regarded the appeal I made to you as primarily an appeal to your head rather than your heart. That is to say, I think your first thought on reading my lucubration was not whether the matter alleged was true or not, but rather what havoc it would make, if it were true, with the interests of all accepted philosophy. For all your subsequent replies to me proceeded on this apparent basis: "Here is a man who has the temerity to proffer an original deliverance in philosophy, one moreover which is fatal to all its received canons; let us, therefore, at once try him by those very canons, and see whether they may not put him to silence." It was simply inevitable in this state of things that each successive paper you sent to my address should strike me as a telum imbellis, sine ictu.

Accordingly, let me now essay to speak even more ad rem, if so I may provoke the answer I crave from your own acute and honest heart, and no longer from Professor Ferrier's very chronic and shifty head, or the head of any of his ineffectual brethren.

When you defined religion as "the effort of a man to perfect himself," the definition struck me as so very inadequate to convey an idea of most men's religious experience, that I felt moved to protest against it. But if I could have foreseen the sort of controversy the step was going to generate, I should have taken care in my first letter to do better justice to my own position, in so stating it as properly to bar you out of the refuge you seek from my criticism, in trying to make it conflict with the data of consciousness. I had said, for example, that this selfhood which, according to your definition, it is our religious duty "to perfect," is a sheer illusion, without any reality in the nature of things; and that we had accordingly much better disown than cherish it. We thereupon discussed this thesis for a few weeks without coming to anything like agreement,—when suddenly (appropos to a remark of mine that "I had no quarrel with the fact of our conscious life") you change your tactics, and put me upon my defence as an assailant of consciousness. I confess this charge threw me off my scent for a moment, and led me in my fifth letter to a wholly unnecessary vindication of my relation to consciousness; for our controversy has really no manner of relevancy to any fact of life or consciousness. This private subjectivity or "selfhood," whose reality you affirm and I deny, is not the least identical with you or me regarded as subjects of life or consciousness; but only as subjects of a certain vicious ontology, or conventional science of being, among men, by which we are supposed to possess life or being in ourselves directly or primarily, and in our race or nature quite derivatively or secondarily. As subjects of life or consciousness, you and I are indissolubly involved in a life-giving object, and can no more be divorced from it, therefore, either actually or logically, than the term of any minor relation, say husband or earth, can be divorced from its mate, say wife or sky. "Object" and "subject," remember, are not actual data of life or consciousness itself. They are only and at most two convenient terms devised by our logic, or reflective thought, to promote our science of life or consciousness, if haply such science be practicable. In short, they are purely logical data, given in thought or reflection, not the least real data, given in life or experience; and they end, like all our scientific culture, not in clearing up, but only in obscuring, and indeed supplanting, the great spiritual reality they would fain illustrate. We first interpret life or consciousness into terms or symbols of our own thought, and then we dupe ourselves into taking our own thought as the true measure of the dazzling reality. Life or consciousness is in itself an ineffable union of what is inward with what is outward in men's universal experience; an infinite Divine marriage between the heavens of men's minds and the earth of their bodies, realized or ratified only in the sphere of sense. It is so ecstatic a union, so ineffable a marriage, that absolutely nothing whatever can be known of it from without, but only from within; that is, passively, not actively; or from an actual experience and enjoyment of it, not the least from any amount of reflective observation or scientific study brought to bear upon it. So that our pretended science of life or consciousness is in the nature of things absolutely void of objective truth; and whatsoever we affect to know by such science, either as to its living subject or its life-giving object, is simply a learned ignorance. A demonstrator in anatomy has a good deal of scientific knowledge to impart, no doubt, in regard to the human body; but his science, in so far as he confines himself to it, absolutely disqualifies to know anything of the life or spirit which alone animates that body, and redeems it from carion.

It is obvious, indeed, to the least reflection, that the only possible subject of life or consciousness must be a unitary subject, not the least a divided or plural one; must be, in other words, a generic or race-subject, not the least a specific one. For if life or consciousness ultimately itself, that is, becomes realized or ratified—only in sense, then it follows that both the "subject" and the "object" into which we logically distribute or analyze it must be coextensive with the sphere of sense, and ignore any narrower limits; that is, they must involve in themselves all time and all space. Now the only proper "subject" of life or consciousness which we can conceive of, as involving in itself "all time," is the unitary mind of man, and this we do not hesitate to pronounce accordingly its only true subject. And the only proper "object" which we can cogitate, as involving in itself "all space," is the universe of existing things; and we do not hesitate accordingly to pronounce this universe the only true object of life or consciousness. So that the ideal of life or consciousness can only be the harmony of internal and external, or Nature and Man.

Now it is undeniable that you and I—each of us in his finite sphere—are a valid form, image, species, apparition, of this great unitary or race-mind, considered as involving in itself all time, and, therefore, as constituting the true logical subject of life or consciousness. But what is equally undeniable is that we neither of us either are or can be anything more than such representative form, image, species, or appearance. Life or consciousness is in itself rigidly unitary and universal; while you and I at best are strictly particular, or disunited, forms, or images, or shadows, of this unitary life or consciousness; with absolutely no more just claim to life or consciousness in ourselves, than the image or shadow we project in a looking-glass has to be our proper persons. You and I, consequently, can never constitute either our own true subjectivity or our own true objectivity; since in the former event we should oust the unitary mind of man, and in the latter displace the universe of existence.

Now what exactly does it mean, to be only what I thus allege that you and I are? In other words, what does it mean to be a shadowy, unreal, imaginary, or phenomenal existence? It means, neither more nor less, to possess selfhood, but especially to cherish and cultivate selfhood as the ground of one's life or consciousness, and cleave to it consequently as our poor, fond old grandsire cleave to Eve, under the conviction of her being vital bone of his bone, and vital flesh of his flesh. In short, to be an illusory existence, such as I conceive you and me both of us to be, is to esteem our selves so highly as to feel that we should have no life nor consciousness without them.

We cannot inquire into the genesis of an illusion, of course, because illusions disclaim a natural genesis, and demand only to be finitely conditioned. It is only things, or objective existences like your body and mine, that claim a natural reality or sacredness; persons, or subjective existences, like your private selfhood and mine, are destitute of all natural reality or sacredness, and confess themselves mere rational illusions. They are just as much rational illusions—that is, images or shadows of our unitary or race manhood projected upon the field of our finite or particular intelligence,—as your image and mine in a looking-glass are optical illusions; that is to say, shadows or reflections of your and my personality, projected upon the field of our finite or particular vision.

What, then, are the rational conditions requisite to account for this grandest of all illusions—this mother-source, in fact, of all the illusions to which human life is a prey,—namely: selfhood, which you and I nevertheless are so infatuated with until we are better instructed, as cheerfully to renounce Paradise for it, and eat with relish the accursed fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, although we be condemned thereby ever after to earn our bread by the sweat of our brow?

This illusion of a private or particular self in mankind is rationally conditioned upon the necessarily limited intelligence we have as creatures, an intelligence limited by sense. Sense is a heavenly hand-maid, but a diabolic mistress. And yet our infantile affection and thought are so dependent upon the nourishment she gives us, that she can hardly help proving in time an absolute mistress, and would infallibly and by doing so, if it were not that she fortunately begets such a boundless cupidity in us as practically antagonizes each man with all, or brings about such a chaos of conflicting private interests among men as necessarily calls for a communistic or conservative reaction, combining all men against each. Hence certain rules or observances become imperative upon each member of the community, as conditioning the favor to be shown him by all the rest, or constituting his only valid title to their respect. And this potential respectability of the communistic subject, or his susceptibility to the praise and blame of all the rest, is the special cradle of the illusion we call "selfhood." For each particular man becomes publicly invested in this state of things with a private consequence extremely gratifying to the flesh; and if temperament back inclination, it will not be long before he attains to public repute as a righteous person. Fortunately, however, temperament does not always back inclination, but disposes the subject to follow his own caprice rather than the will of the community; so that, ere long, an inevitable division of the community into two classes grows up, a good and an evil—or a governing and governed class; by which simple mechanism, or free play of antagonist forces, men's endless progress is secured.

Here, then, is a new or adventitious life in the creature for the creative providence to adjust itself to: SELFHOOD. Man has now become in his own foolish imagination like God, knowing good and evil, or claiming to himself the responsibility of his own actions; and he expects of course to be treated as an independent person, and dealt with only on legal or moral principles. However, the creative providence is not the least aghast at this childish conceit on the part of its creature, but, on the contrary, frankly avails itself of it as the basis of a certain religious discipline, which will be sure one day to induct among men an otherwise unattainable secular or universal good. That is to say: religion authenticates the pretension to selfhood in man, not as a finality or for its own sake, but with a view to making it the means of a natural or race-development of man, which will bring him into permanent spiritual or interior accord with God. To this end it subjects him to the operation of a double law: one positive, conferring a quasi or representative life upon the votary; the other negative, as imposing a real death; one law carnal, ceremonial, outward, as relating the subject to the sphere of conventional manners or usage, which will one day harmonize all men in unity; the other spiritual, ascetic, inward, as relating him to the sphere of morals which isolates every man to himself, or disunites him in sympathy and interest with all other men.

Now it is unhappily too true that religion, which sets out as a purely purgative discipline in humanity, with no purpose whatever but to humble the pride of selfhood in man with a view to his final social edification, ends by becoming perverted into its subtlest and most uncompromising confederate. The bells of religion are the most awful and immedicable known to the human bosom; and there is notoriously no heart of man so implacable to Divine influence, as one which is stayed and nurtured upon a faith or persuasion of its own acceptance with God. The power of religion to vitalize selfhood is so excessive, in fact, as to impress those even who systematically abjure it and condemn its dogmas. Thus the later scientific mind of the day, which calls itself positivist, all in forswearing the faith and practice of dogmatic religion, nevertheless studiously apologizes to itself for doing so, by clinging more stoutly than ever to the Church's fundamental falsity—which is the maxim of a possible moral or personal worth in man—as a truth of Divine obligation. And religion, I take it, will never feel very much disconcerted by the rivalry of a pretentious science, which knows no better than ostentatiously to echo her own fundamental falsity. One might almost say that our self-conscious modern science is really posing as a substitute for religion; another, poorer, and more popinjay form of the same endless superstition, which has for ever led men to reconstruct their fallen fortunes, or build anew their futile hope towards God, upon a basis of self—rather than of social—righteousness. Science seems, in truth, the most meagre or least effectual of all superstitions, if we regard it as providing a fresh basis of conjunction between man and God; simply because science of its own nature deals only with the most superficial or sensuous aspects of human life. All our traditional religions profess to conjoin the two upon a basis of interior living knowledge, or spiritual emotion and intelligence, which at all events divorces the mind from sense, and so ally it in some sort with infinitude. But science puts their conjunction upon a basis of absolutely dead or reflected knowledge; that is, a basis of mere learning: which is sure—the more expert or accomplished anyone becomes in its discipline—the more hopelessly to enslave his intellect to the finite.

Thus the only selfhood you and I know, or feel any temptation to boast of, is originally the fruit of a strictly communistic instinct and regimen in humanity by which the whole seeks to subordinate the part, or quantity aims to regulate quality. Religion and science both alike refer their sole and total raison d'être to this fallacious base; being both alike a mere providential discipline instituted—the former, to soften the silly pride of men's hearts, by convincing them of sin; the latter, to humble their intellectual arrogance, by convincing them of imbecility,—and so at last prepare what our "sacred" or symbolic Scriptures call "a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelling righteousness"; meaning thereby, a new heart and a new mind in humanity strictly consonant with the principles of universal justice.

I have now said all that I absolutely need to say in rectification of the complete intellectual chaos and confusion you import into our controversy, when you represent our private "selfhood" as properly inherent in our real life or consciousness. I don't know, of course, whether or not you will judge my exposition of the true difference between us as satisfactory; but I am sure that I may count in any case upon your rendering a dispassionate judgment. It is not a case in which authority counts, but one which you and I are to determine by our own spiritual intelligence alone. It is the mark of an intelligent man to know truth when he sees it, and not to look about to ascertain first what certain distinguished names have said about it. The truth I propose to your acceptance has never been dreamed of by any technical philosopher, though myriads upon myriads of our modest fellow-beings have lived and died in the implicit faith of it. And I, for my own part, would much more highly prize the judgment of the foreman of your printing-office in regard to it, than I should that of Aristotle or Kant.

As I have already said, there is no absolute need—so far as my special thesis is concerned—to go further. But I can hardly help saying a word upon another misconception of yours, kindred to the fundamental one which is in controversy between us—rectilinearly descended from it indeed—which, as it seems to me, has had no small influence in corrupting men's intellectual integrity. You habitually speak of logical universals as generated by their respective particulars, or make the parts of a thing to constitute its whole. No doubt, to our limited intelligence, the whole becomes apprehended only by means of the parts; and consequently one may freely say that logically, or in the order of thought, the parts of anything constitute its whole. But actually, or in the order of life, the process is inverted; that is, more than reversed. For, in truth, not only do the parts not constitute the whole, but the whole creates the parts. Your, or my body, for example, is a living whole; but although we are at liberty to say that it is made up or constituted to our limited science of parts, it would yet be a manifest license both of thought and speech to say, that its parts created it, or gave it being. And yet we ought to be able to say so with truth, if your tacit hypothesis were valid, that the visible existence of our bodies, or their material constitution, give them their philosophic as well as their logical or scientific value. But it is no license either of thought or speech to say that the whole creates the parts. For each special part taken by itself, and all the parts taken together, exist by and for the whole, and by and for it alone. And that thing by which and for which alone other things exist, may be said so far forth to create those things, or give them being.

Another form of this same error appears in all your papers, where you make society a flowering of the principle of selfhood in man; whereas in truth it proceeds upon the absolute exhaustion of selfhood. You might as well say that wine is a flowering of grapes, when in truth its production involves the absolute destruction of the grapes themselves, or their forcible conversion into a new material of whose inward or spiritual decomposition wine is the strictly regenerate issue. We may say, of course, that wine is negatively conditioned upon the existence of the grape. But we must not fail to observe that it is positively conditioned at the same time upon the decomposition of the grape into a mere worthless pulp, which no longer knows the grape, and then upon such a marvellous process of living corruption or fermentation within the bosom of that pulp, as precipitates all its earthiness, and sublimates pure spirit. Just so we ourselves, no doubt, furnish a negative base to society; but society demands as its positive base just such an experience and demonstration of the corruption inherent in ourselves, or attaching to the principle of personality, as all our past history has exemplified. Society is not a material or empirical product of men's historic progress. It is the identical spirit or life which underlies and organizes all their historic progress. It is an actual spiritual life of God in our nature, evolving itself by the absolute exhaustion of the principle of selfhood in us, or its conversion into a totally corrupt substance, and the consequent rebirth of mankind in new or spiritual form. Society is not the least a scientific truth, laboriously deduced from an observation of the facts of human nature, as we say; for human nature has precisely no facts to go upon, lies above the region of fact altogether, constitutes, indeed, the sole realm of truth known to the human mind, and involves in itself, consequently, all fact of whatever sort; so that it is capable of no outward, logical, or scientific, but only of the most reverent inward, spiritual, or living, verification.

Human nature, in short, is God's veritable life in man, and hence society, as the form of that nature, is incapable of being outwardly or scientifically demonstrated, being a truth of life exclusively, a truth of men's highest or inmost experience, forced indeed upon their stubborn recognition as the only possible issue of an otherwise interminable conflict between the spirit of neighborly love or charity latent in their common nature, and the spirit of infernal self-seeking everywhere patent in their private persons.

Remember, then, that the truth of human society is a living or spiritual truth exclusively, wrought out of our quivering flesh and blood primarily, or discerned first by the universal heart of man, and transmitted thence to his docile intellect. No science or learning will ever qualify one to discern or accept this truth, but only a mind attuned to universal justice; that is, a heart of love to one's neighbor primarily, and to one's self secondarily. Mr. Darwin's, Mr. Huxley's, or Mr. Spencer's opinion about it is doubtless just as good a priori as yours or mine, but not one jot better. Any old woman, indeed, plying her spinning-wheel in the heart of the Green Mountains, and watching the evening sun go down over their wooded tops, knows quite as much about it as any truculent pope of them all, religious or scientific; and is likely, for that matter, to be a far more disinterested witness. In fine, society is literally God's formative or redemptive work in humanity; a work, moreover, which in a philosophic point of view is rigidly incidental to his creative work. It is our Divine nature coming to consciousness in us at last, in order effectually to shame us out of the tyranny, and cruelty, and vanity inherent in our private or personal consciousness.

The secret vice of all the fallacies we have been discussing lies in our inveterately confounding men's constitutional or sensible existence with their spiritual life or being. We make the identity of things, or what gives them finite body, convertible with their proper individuality,—that is, what gives them spiritual function, or living soul. In other words, our error consists in confounding the two radically diverse ideas of unity and universality, or in blindly overlooking the fact that everything is in itself a living or spiritual unity which alone vivifies all its subject parts, or binds them together in life; so that when we put a thing upon the dissecting table of our science or reflective thought, the unitary spirit or life of the thing must have fled, and its "parts" confess themselves no longer parts of any living substance, but only so much sheer and worthless carion instead.

To sum up: questions of phenomenal or constitutional existence belong to the sphere of logic or reflective science, and I should be only too happy to defer to the opinion of skilled minds in all that range of questions. But questions of actual life or consciousness belong to the sphere of men's inward experience, or invoke primarily the judgment of the heart, and quite subordinately thereto that of the head. Newton and Cuvier, consequently, for all their science, are not a whit more competent, in my estimation, to any question of life or consciousness—that is, to any question of properly living, spiritual, or universal interest, in opposition to a mere learned or particular interest,—than any unlettered mind of average inward honesty and reverence.

I am, as ever, yours truly,

HENRY JAMES.

CAMBRIDGE, April 26.

LOTOS, OR FIRE-WATER:

CAMBRIDGE, April 30, 1876.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

By my letter to Mr. Frothingham, I had not the slightest intention to rouse the editorial thunders of THE INDEX, although I have long known them to be ready at any moment to roll and crash on good provocation. But sometime since I had given you clean over to that Spartan behavior which loves and welcomes a Thermopylae in which to die; and had made up my mind to admire you at a distance, and love you privately, recognizing the fact that our views and methods of reform are so sincerely different that, at present at least, we scarcely could hope to act very much in concert as radicals. Certainly no thought have I now that, by anything I can possibly say, I can win you to my opinions, or allay in the least the flaming zeal with which you advance upon the work that seems to you so commanding and necessary. I ventured to address Mr. Frothingham, because I had supposed him uncommitted to any line of action which tended to the forming of parties and the creation of a party spirit among radicals; and because, moreover, I was moved by surprise at his recent utterance of sentiments having that bearing, as well as by a desire to lay at his door my early protest against the assumptions and imputations which his article, entitled "Concentrate," seemed to me to contain, and which I somehow thought to be foreign to his temper and philosophy as hitherto known to me. Not the least expectation or desire had I to open a controversy with him, or with anybody. That is all distasteful to me. And yet I am human; and as you—speaking prior to him,—have "come down" upon me with so much might and fervor, the temptation is very strong to lift up a shield before my stricken face, and "have at you" with a few "feeble remarks." You see what mischief the battle spirit may work upon even so lotos-steeped and "bloodless" a wretch as I am! Who knows but, if your fine-pointed Ithuriel spear could once fairly pierce my pachyderm, I too might go off and destroy somebody or something?

Your three-columned columbiad in THE INDEX fairly makes the welkin ring, and I well know how irrissonant will appear the pop-gun retort which I feel disposed to make thereto. The class of fellows is not inconsiderable who stand about in society always waiting for a scrimmage among dogs or men, and who intensely love any one that invites them to a "shindy." The man who preaches only peace and good-will, who approves only mild manners and methods,—such a one earns their hearty contempt. In their eyes he is a tame and irresolute fellow, one who would just as lief wear a "yoke," or lie down and be trampled upon, as not. I have never been fortunate enough to win the cheers of such persons, and am even now content to let my courage and vigor go unvindicated in their eyes.

To you, however, I feel disposed to remark in the first place, that I am not opposed to organization per se. I am myself an organism, and have no quarrel with that fact. I can conceive that sometimes there may be things to be done, as well as said; and then I believe in doing them, with just as little noise, and little demonstration of any kind, as possible. Nature organizes. She gives a pod to the pea, an oak to the acorn,—a body to every soul. But her spirit hurries on, driving all forms before it, scattering all as fast as made, and keeping itself always unfettered. Man alone is a slave to the forms he creates; he alone is caught in his own web; he alone is imprisoned in his own inventions. And this because he loves the form more than the spirit; because he is so much better pleased with the thing he creates than with the idea which sought partial and transient expression in that thing. I see that man is an image-maker by habit and by custom; and that, the moment he gets the image made, he bows down and worships it, and forgets the great Spirit that rested upon it a moment and then swept on. In behalf of the spirit, therefore, I am jealous of the image that presumes to represent it; in behalf of the truth, I am jealous of any party or sect that wilfully undertakes to protect and patronize it; in behalf of freedom, I am jealous of any law that seeks to enact it. Not against organization itself, then, do I protest, but against the dangerous love of it; against that deceiving zeal which leads men to mistake means for ends, methods for principles, and which blinds them to the value of other men's convictions and the rights of other men's consciences, while they are clear-eyed to the value and rights of their own. I observe that party provokes party, and sect provokes sect; and that a contest which began for principle soon degenerates into mere partisan and sectarian warfare. I observe that a party no sooner gets organized, than it straightway acquires a demoralizing self-consciousness, and becomes more anxious for its own perpetuation than for the promotion of any truth, or principle, or idea. I observe, too, that men become partisans, dogmatists, bigots, despots, by degrees imperceptible to themselves; so that at last they insensibly approach the point of thinking that they are serving the truth, when really they are giving loose rein to ambition or to some peculiarity of temperament.

Can I say, now, without subjecting myself to the imputation of being hopelessly "purbblind," that I cannot see that you are successful in making out the desperate case which you think and say afflicts at the present moment the cause of religious liberty in America, and which you declare to need such "heroic" treatment? Indeed, I must confess that your stirring attempts to make up such a case sometimes seem to me absolutely funny! When you come to us, week after week, with such deadly pallor of apprehension on your editorial face, and tell us with so great reserve of "burning passion for independence" that this republic hangs on the brink of religious slavery; nay, that it is bound hand and foot in the shackles of that slavery, and that every mother's son of us is in imminent peril of having our most sacred rights of conscience trampled upon, if we do not "leap to our feet and strike like men,"—why, I rub my "purbblind" eyes, and belabor my "dreamy" brain, and wonder if I am such a thorough numskull that I cannot tell a mouse from a dragon! But when I look about a little, and consider such facts as lie within the range of my information; when I consider what enormous ameliorations have been wrought in the Orthodox religion of this country within the last century; how the Church has suffered defection after defection of its ablest thinkers and writers; how whole masses of its believers have broken off from it, one upon the other, and its iron creed softened and relaxed point by point; when I see that our literature, which is most popular and most read, is suffused through and through with liberal and even radical sentiments; that nearly all our great poets, who sing the dominant thought and feeling into the minds and hearts of the people, professedly or really belong to the new school of religious faith; how science is steadily advancing its domain, and laying its irresistible hand upon respected authorities of "revelation" and priesthood, and causing them more and more to defer to its own august and demonstrable teachings; how even the "hoary infallibility" of Catholicism suffers by transplantation to American soil, and every immigrant devotee, the longer he experiences the refining and emancipating influences of republican institutions, becomes not only less Irish but less Catholic;—when I consider all these plain verities of our national religious situation, it dawns upon me that your diagnosis of that situation is immensely anachronistic and grotesque. And when I see how terribly you have to strain your vision to discover your data, and wait for them to come slowly and stragglingly in, I marvel in my turn that so clear-headed, logical, and scientific a man as you are well known to be can excite himself into such a feverish condition of apprehension, and intonate so loudly with so small a charge and priming!

I beg you to exonerate me from intentional disrespect for your elaborate "sketching," when I say that I consider your attempted historical parallel between 1776 and 1876 an utter failure. You are, and you must be, completely unsuccessful in showing that any religious peril threatens us to-day at all in proportion to the political peril that our revolutionary fathers had to consider. And please observe that just here is the point where the astonishing lameness of your logic appears. It is the religious, not the political or social, situation of the nation, that you devote all your fine powers to expounding. Your Liberal League does not propose to touch, with so much as a feather's emphasis, the question of the emancipation of woman, or the emancipation of labor, or the emancipation of politics from corruption. It only invites us to consider the galling "yoke" of religious bondage under which the nation suffers. And I declare to you my belief that that "yoke" exists chiefly in your distracted imagination. When you say that "the sceptre of the Church [my italics] is stronger to-day than George the Third's was a century ago," you do provoke a smile on my usually solemn countenance! Where do you get your data for any such startling announcement? I have been reading recently Mr. Emerson's Phi Beta Kappa oration at Cambridge, in 1837. In that he says:—

"We meet to-day under happy omens to our ancient society, to the commonwealth of letters, to the country, and to mankind. . . . We may be well contented with our fair inheritance. Was ever such coincidence of advantages in time and place as in America to-day? . . . The spirit is new. . . . The cockcomb goes to the wall. To his astonishment he has found that this country and this age belong to the most liberal persuasion. . . . Take as a type the boundless freedom here in Massachusetts. People have in all countries been burned and stoned for saying things which are commonplaces at all our breakfast-tables."

Now I ask if anything has occurred, within the last nine years, in the religious situation of the country (and mark, I do not speak now of our political or industrial situation), which could abate by one jot or tittle the emphasis of those congratulatory words spoken by the scholar and the man of good sense in 1837? Has anything occurred to make the Liberal League more necessary now than then? Not a thing! On the contrary, the religious omens of the republic are even more auspicious and shining. Not only in Massachusetts, but throughout the nation, Orthodoxy is weaker to-day than it was ten years ago, and liberal ideas more wide-spread and dominant. Such, at least, is my deliberate and profound conviction. If it were the political or the social status of our country to which you summoned our attention so passionately, I for one should give you earnest audience; but of these you have comparatively little to say. If you were to tell us that the sceptre of the monopolist, or the sceptre of the demagogue, were stronger to-day than George the Third's was a century ago, I should think you nearer the truth, and that you put less ridicule upon the cause for which our fathers fought. I do indeed have some grave apprehension of peril to come to us from these selfish and heartless enemies of our social welfare. In 1872 I did what I could to defeat the party which you then supported, and whose political corruptions do now put to shame every true American. Then also, and now, the wrongs and oppressions of the laboring classes enlisted and still enlist my heartiest sympathies and coöperation. If your Liberal League proposed to touch either one of these matters, it would command my most respectful attention. But when it invites me only to a national crusade against Christianity, to a religious warfare by political engineering, I both reply that I see no adequate "cause," and that I disapprove of the methods. So far as the nation is concerned, the "battle" for religious "independence" has already been fought and won. The Federal Constitution has neither Christianity nor Orthodoxy in it, and needs none of your "religious amendment" schemes for its betterment. An atheist could be President of these United States to-day, for aught that the Constitution interposes to prevent; and if he could not be Governor in any State of the Union, because of some religious disabling act, his surest way to reach that elevation is to wait, not until some statute law shall pave his way to it, but until the noiseless power of an enlightened intelligence and conscience shall have so "diffused" itself through public opinion that, all heedless of mere legal technicalities, pro or con, the people will call upon their best man to serve them, without stopping to inquire if he be Christian or Pagan,—as already they do in many of the States.

And this leads me now to say that, in your attempted historical parallel, you not only fail to make out that the conflict is similar now to that of 1776, but you also as signally fail to show that there is any similarity in the methods required to decide that conflict.

Your own method of reform is decidedly aggressive and warlike. This is indicated not only by the nature of the illustration which you chose wherewith to set off in ridiculous contrast my own "bloodless" and "unheroic" propensities, and which made your three columns bristle from top to bottom with martial terms and symbols, but also by the prevailing tone of your INDEX editorials. The period of your nativity must have been, I think, when Mars was regnant, for you are by constitution and temperament a true child of that propulsive god. Something like Job's war-horse you are; you scent the battle afar off, and say with evident relish "a-ha!" It is the "doing," "daring," "conquering" spirit that you seek to infuse into the radical host, and you can have no patience with those who do not respond to your ringing appeals. Not lotos but fire-water you would serve out all round to every combatant! You would have the camp-fires lighted on every plain, the "banners hung out on the outer walls," and each valiant warrior to exclaim to his foeman:—

"Lay on, lay on, Macduff," etc.

Well, I have no objection to all this for every man who likes it, and believes in it. Let each to his own, say I. Among all the times I suppose there is a time, at least there have been times, for "fighting."

But if civilization means anything, it means a steady moving away from all belligerent and forceful methods towards "persuasive" and peaceful ones. That very "method of achieving independence" of any kind, of which you speak so scornfully,—namely, "moral suasion,"—is the very one that the true spirit of civilization most loves and inculcates; and nothing which you have said, or can say, in derision of it makes me in the least ashamed of it or indisposed to it. Our fathers knew no better way, at any rate they chose no better way (and perhaps in their time there was none better), of achieving their independence than by fighting for it. It is always absurd to quarrel with history. But to-day we have no such cause as theirs, and no method which approaches theirs is now in order. Yet, though the Liberal League proposes not to fight with carnal weapons, it nevertheless proposes to "fight." The old word, if not the old weapon, is still retained, and the same spirit is encouraged and manifested.

And it is this spirit of haste, of circumvention, of wilful advance, of desire to engage the enemy and precipitate the issue,—it is against this that I reluct and protest. I believe it to be puerile, and unwise, and damaging to the high interests of truth. In my opinion, the cause we have to serve requires nothing of the kind, but is much better to be promoted by quiet, gradual, and persuasive methods. The best way to overcome Orthodoxy, and to eliminate it from the School and the State, is not to threaten and provoke it; to challenge it to a Lexington or Bunker-Hill duel; to plant against its party-foot our party-foot, and measure its party-ward with our party-ward,—for by such antagonism we do rouse and stimulate all its slumbering and dying consciousness. But, in my opinion, the best way is that which we have so far pursued,—which the Free Religious Association from the beginning has pursued; namely, that of uttering by voice and pen, and disseminating as widely as possible, the noblest ideas and grandest sentiments of which our minds and hearts can conceive. In short, the best way to overcome Orthodoxy is to overcome it by the statement and promulgation, continuously and constantly, of a larger, deeper, broader truth. The religious situation of the country, in my belief, requires no more aggressive method than this.

I can but smile when I hear the impatient cry for "organization" and "concentration" which is now going up from a few strong-throated radicals here and there; for it reminds me so vividly of the same cry that arose among the Unitarians a few years ago, and which resulted in the famous Syracuse Convention, and in an immediate "split" of the Unitarian denomination. Pardon me when I say that you now remind me of good old Dr. R. P. Stebbins, in the stentorian vigor wherewith you "demand" the rallying of forces, and an instantaneous advance upon the enemy. The Doctor thought that the time for action had come. Too long had Unitarians been "dreaming," and ambulating their delicate paces to the "lascivious pleasing" of cultured conceit. So, as Secretary of the American Unitarian Association, he raised a hundred thousand dollars, armed and equipped the Unitarian host, and set it marching, horse, foot, and dragoons; and it marched—to a most brief life of "efficiency."

Similar will be the fate of your attempt to organize and concentrate radicals. Straightway there will be a "split" in the ranks. Already you welcome with evident relish the distinction of "Orthodoxy" and "Heterodoxy." You vigorously exclaim: "Yes—the Orthodoxy of radicalism is courage, earnestness, resolution, heroism, self-sacrifice, action; the heterodoxy of radicalism is timidity, apathy, purblindness, do-nothingism, love of ease, inaction." That is,— "Orthodoxy" is Liberal Leagueism; "heterodoxy" is each radical acting in his own way as he, not somebody else, thinks best! I thought it would come to this sooner or later. I did not think it would come so soon. Mr. Frothingham wants an "organ" which shall be "inclusive at once and exclusive." Verily, he has it! The "organ" includes the Liberal League, and excludes,—well, "some other things." The promising young man from "C—," of whom O. B. F. "hopes" so much,—let me see, what is it he wants? Ah, he wants an "organization of radicals" which shall include such radicals as he has in his eye, and exclude such as he has not! Surely, it will not be many months before we shall see our Radical "Syracuse Convention" assemble; and then,—yes, then,—we shall know "who is who."

Very well, my dear friends, please count me out to begin with; I will not give you the trouble of expelling me. I think I don't like Radical narrowness any better than I do Conservative narrowness. I think I should find just as much difficulty in subscribing to a Radical creed as to a Conservative one, in submitting to the leadership and discipline of a Radical party as to that of a Conservative party. I will believe a little longer in "moral suasion" for our present needs, in the power of truth to accomplish somewhat even when not saddled, ridden, and spurred by a party. I respectfully decline the draught of fire-water which is pressed with so much fervor of hospitality to my lips, and, if you please, will take instead any sedative which you may have at hand, whose "holy balm" shall be sufficient to enable me to "hearken what the inner spirit sings."

And now is it really true that, because I decline this call to organization and to adopt the method of the Liberal League, I therefore can have no "courage of opinions," no "earnestness," no "heroism," no spirit of "self-sacrifice"? Does it necessarily follow that, because I decline to accept your mode of doing, your mode of action, I am a "do-nothing," a bloodless, cowardly, selfish, servile apathist? You will please bear in mind that you have dealt very freely with the catalogue of descriptive adjectives, and my anxiety is quite natural to know just how and where they logically apply.

Suppose a man applies himself to the study of the truth, and does what he can to make it known to his fellow-men so far as he knows it himself, and to live faithful to its high behests from hour to hour,—is that to "do nothing"? Is that to be steeped in apathy? There is Ralph Waldo Emerson. He has never been a reformer in any professional sense; he certainly never has been an organizer; never a frequent-er of convention-platforms and caucuses. He has only been a lover of the truth, only a "talker" and "writer" in her service. According to your expounding, therefore, he is a mere "do-nothing," so far as concerns the work of emancipating the nation's mind from superstitious and false authorities, and bringing the people's religion and politics into right relations. It is my belief, however, that one such man in a nation performs more vital service to its true peace and welfare than an army of party-workers, or a brigade of ordinary reformers. To suggest that a man who only serves his day and generation in a private way,—as a thinker, writer, lecturer, scholar, and in general a promoter of humane living,—withholding himself habitually from public and party action,—to suggest, I say, that such a man is guilty of "insensibility to duties imposed by the situation" is to betray an extravagance of zeal that borders either on fanaticism or dogmatism, or both.

No; the poet was not false who sang that "they serve who only stand and wait." We have all too little of private living and private acting in the spirit of those great ideas and principles which ennoble and exalt a nation. We have all too much of public fuss, and noise, and demonstration in their behalf. It is coming to be next to impossible in this country for a man to live a private life, to obey the sweet, pure, calm promptings of the "inner spirit." Some politician, sectarian, or "reformer" lurks round every corner ready to pounce upon us and drag us away to service of his darling scheme; and if we resist, pleading a diviner call, we are pelted with a storm of scornful and derogatory titles. Surely, sanity flies from the crowd, and dwells most content with peaceful men!

"And surely He who metes, as we should mete
Could we His insight use, shall most approve,
Not that which fills most space in earthly eyes,
But what—tho' Time scarce note it as he flies—
Fills, like this little daisy at my feet,
Its function best of diligence in love."

In closing, I will simply remark that I have now said my say, and cannot think of continuing the discussion. I am all content to leave the whole matter to be decided by individual radicals for themselves, each going the way he thinks best. I well know there is truth on both sides of every question, and I cannot flatter myself that I have voiced it all in this. And, again, let us banish from our minds and hearts all apprehension that friends may not be able to disagree without peril to friendship.

Yours affectionately, A. W. STEVENS.

STEVENS vs. FROTHINGHAM.

DEAR INDEX:—

Though one of that body that "lies a woful wreck on the shore of the river of progress," I yet feel interest enough in the general progress of humanity to make a suggestion or two to your readers concerning the matter of organization.

Bagehot, in Science and Politics, very forcibly illustrates the conditions of all progress. He develops the fact that those early tribes that first reached efficient organization were the first winners in the struggle for life. The Macedonian phalanx, in later times, marched through the Persian hordes at will. "Everything-in-general-and-nothing-in-particular" has never yet accomplished much in the work of human progress. Of course all organization tends to become tyranny. The ideal, then, is flexible organization. Let a tree, or a child, illustrate it. Both are organized; but both grow and change. Without organization there is no individual existence; without flexibility there is no progress.

The disciples of diffusion sometimes speak of sunshine as a type of themselves and their work. But the sun is organized, and so becomes a centre of power. And his rays are of worth only as they become organized in the life of the earth.

It is not the organization of the past that has wrought so much mischief, but rather the false principle of organization. The Unitarians have not been too much organized. This is not the rock on which they split. They made the mistake of trying to organize on the false and mischievous principle of an intellectual creed, in imitation of the churches of the past. Of course this is giving bonds to ignorance that you will carefully avoid learning anything new. Is the only choice, then, between tyrannical and Orthodox sectarianism and anarchy? For the sake of progress and man, I hope not.

The true principle of organization seems to have entered the mind of very few. What is it? Why, this, it seems to me: organize as strongly as you will or can on the basis of some great common purpose,—I do not believe it right or wise to organize on any other basis. Had Unitarianism been content with this, it would have escaped the charge of being a "woful wreck." It might now have been a compacted army with many a noble and brave man for leader who is now a foe. There could have been no tyranny; for a grand and avowed purpose is only an inspiration, and can never become a bond. But seeing no other way to organize, except on the basis of some intellectual creed, and fearing to do this in any efficient way, it diffused itself until it is as hard to gather into force as an aurora borealis. They did right to fight the creed, only they ought to have fought it a little more. But they missed it wofully in not becoming organized.

I have so much sympathy with the work of the Liberal Leagues--so far as it touches education and the State,--that I would like to whisper in the ear of every reader of THE INDEX that, if he ever expects to do anything, it would be well to remember that armies usually whip guerillas.

Yours,

M. J. SAVAGE.

BOSTON.

[For THE INDEX.]

SAMUEL LONGFELLOW'S

BOOK OF HYMNS AND TUNES FOR THE CONGREGATION AND THE HOME. Cambridge: Press of John Wilson & Son. 1876.

Even if the new religious thought and feeling be old religious thought and feeling, as it largely is, new books are wanted to phrase it in the meeting-houses; new Sunday-school manuals to hint it to the children; new and richer Bibles to read it in the church-service, and new hymn-books to sing it. No one in this country, so far as I know, has yet tried to write the manuals,--in England the Manchester Sunday School Society is trying quite successfully to furnish them. Moncure Conway's Sacred Anthology in some degree fills the second want; but the noble passages from Ethnic Scriptures are so dulled and stiffened by the Latin style in which Victorian translators do their work that it makes dreary Bible-reading by the side of the crisp, clear-cut Saxon chapters for which we thank King James' men; and the minister will do better, if he tests the matter by the pleasure in his people's listening faces, to bring some poet with him from the book-shelf, and let his poem follow and echo the familiar Bible-verses. For the singing, Mr. Wendte's Sunny Side has lately come out to fill the music-niche in Sunday-schools, and the Hymns of the Spirit, selected by Samuel Longfellow and Samuel Johnson offered Radical congregations a dozen years ago what they need.

But that book holds seven hundred hymns, and few societies or ministers care for half that number, and we have long waited for a smaller book for the little groups of Radical or "Free Religious" folk that here and there are springing up over the land. Now Mr. Longfellow, again, has made it for us. A Book of Hymns and Tunes for the Congregation and the Home, he calls it. About one hundred tunes, and most of these old tunes which many know; two hundred and seventy-five hymns,--and so many of these new that even churches having a book already and loth to part with it, but wishing some fresh songs, can hardly do better than send for this and use it as a supplement. So it meets a twofold want.

Those who in their worship desire large reference to Christ will naturally feel a lack,--the book is hardly for such, for it is "theistic" throughout. And those to whom the name of Christ would spoil a collection, will also turn away, for the book is broad in sympathies. It is a book of the soul seeking God in inward and in outward life,--and not only seeking but finding him; and, therefore, all the old longings, and leanings, and shames, and trusts, and hopes, and joys are here, only voiced in the way in which those who have to think in to-day's thought, rather than in the forms made sacred by the centuries, would voice them.

The book can be obtained at present from Samuel Longfellow himself (Brattle Street, Cambridge, Mass.), and the price is fifty cents, in quantities, in boards. Little liberal congregations beginning to meet in their hall, or in some parlor, and wondering what to do about their music, and older societies wanting some new hymns without the expense of changing to another "full-sized" new hymn-book, will do well to send for this and look it through.

W. C. G.

1776. TO THE PUBLIC. 1876.

We, the undersigned, believing the present year a fitting opportunity to render tardy justice to the memory of Thomas Paine, patriot and philanthropist, the esteemed friend and honored guest of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson; introduced to the Colonies of North America by Benjamin Franklin, and welcomed to this country by Dr. Rush; whose pamphlet entitled Common Sense decided the Continental Congress to insist upon an absolute Declaration of Independence, in place of a mere declaration of rights as colonial dependencies of Great Britain; editor of The Crisis; first subscriber to the fund for the payment of the Federal army, for which purpose he donated the full amount of his year's salary as a clerk of the Assembly of Pennsylvania; envoy to France with Col. Laurens, where they secured 18,000,000 livres as a loan to the American revolutionists, which enabled Gen. Washington to make the movement southward that terminated our struggle for independence by forcing the surrender of Cornwallis; who refused all offers of compensation after the recognition of American independence in those noble words: "I could never reconcile it to my principles to make money by my politics or my religion;" to whom the Federal Congress voted a free gift of $3,000; Pennsylvania 500 pounds sterling; New York presented a farm of 500 acres at New Rochelle; New Jersey a homestead at Bordentown; who left America to erect an iron bridge of his own invention in Sunderland, England, over the river Wear, which the famous Stephenson declared would "probably remain unrivalled"; to whom the Marquis de Lafayette entrusted the key of the Bastille, now at Mount Vernon, "in trust for Washington"; the friend of Condorcet, St. Yvès, Brissot, Danton, Barère, Petion, Gantonne, Vergnaud, of whom but one beside Paine survived the Reign of Terror; received in France with every demonstration of extravagant joy; declared worthy of the honors of citizenship at Paris; elected to the National Assembly to represent the department of Calais,--three other departments disparting with Calais for the honor of electing him; journeying to Paris amid salvos of cannon; crowned with a civic wreath; wearing the national cockade; receiving the fraternal kiss of the different municipalities through which he passed; the chosen intimate of Lafayette, who requested the use of his pungent pen in all popular emergencies; acting with the Girondins against the Jacobins; voting against the execution of Louis XVI. at the imminent risk of his life, and daring to request, amidst roars of rage, that his plea for the king's banishment should be read from the Tribune; and while the insensate Marat shrieked, "I denounce the translator," using his privilege to declare, "If I could speak your language like a Frenchman I would descend a suppliant to your bar, and in the name of all my brothers in America present to you a petition and a prayer to suspend the execution of Louis," thrown into the Luxembourg prison by order of Robespierre in the terrible December of '93, where he remained a prisoner until November of the following year; escaping from the guillotine only because his door was chalked for the morrow's tumbrel while it was open flat against the wall, bringing the fatal cross upon the inside when it was closed,--Robespierre's intention that Paine was to have been executed having been expressed in writing, which remains extant; addressing to the "Society of Theophilanthropists," shortly after Robespierre's death and his own release from prison, perhaps the most convincing argument in favor of the existence of a sentient Deity that is known; making the acquaintance and recognizing the genius and ability of Napoleon Bonaparte during the latter's consulate; the favored guest of Minister James Monroe for eighteen months,--is it not time that justice should be done the man who wrote on the very first page of that Age of Reason for which he has been so denounced, "I believe in one God, and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life," and when calmly awaiting death in all the serenity of conscious rectitude could declare, as he does in his last will and testament, "I have lived an honest and useful life to mankind; my time has been spent in doing good, and I die in perfect composure and resignation to the will of my creator, God?"

We therefore invite the coöperation of all lovers of liberty throughout the American Union, during this Centennial anniversary of our national independence, and more especially the members of and attendants at our churches, to assist in redeeming the reputation of this republic, which Thomas Paine so loved and labored to found upon an enduring basis, by affording to his memory that tribute of respect proposed by his friends in Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, and elsewhere,--the erection of a marble bust in Independence Hall, at Philadelphia, after the admirable design of Sidney H. Morse, a copy of which is now on exhibition at the Art Gallery of Messrs. Pettes & Leathe, Washington Avenue, St. Louis; sincerely believing that the American people can no longer afford to remain quiescent under the stigma of being accomplices in the denial of the most rudimentary justice to the illustrious Paine.

De mortuis nihil nist verum.

[Signed]

S. H. SONNENSCHNEIN,
ALBERT TODD,
WILLIAM HYDE,
GEORGE B. ALLEN,
JOHN SNYDER,
C. L. S. BERNAYS,

J. C. LEARNED,
NATHANIEL HOLMES,
THOMAS DIMMOCK,
ALBERT W. KELSEY,
JAS. E. YEATMAN,
C. D. N. CAMPBELL.

Subscriptions may be addressed either to A. W. Kelsey, Benton Place, St. Louis, or to Mrs. C. B. Kilgore, 605 Walnut Street, Philadelphia. Printed acknowledgments of all receipts will be found in THE INDEX, published at Boston.--St. Louis Republican, May 4, 1876.

MARSHAL SOULT, once showing the pictures he stole in Spain, stopped before one and remarked: "I value that picture very much; it saved the lives of two estimable persons." An aide-de-camp whispered in the listener's ear: "He threatened to have them both shot immediately unless they gave it up."

AS TWO GENTLEMEN were discussing the merits of a popular preacher, one of them remarked, "He always prays for the widows and orphans, but never says anything about widowers." The other, an inveterate old bachelor, replied, "Perhaps it would be more appropriate to return thanks for them."

AN ENGLISHMAN was boasting to a Yankee that they had a book in the British Museum which was once owned by Cicero. "Oh! that ain't nothin'," retorted the Yankee; "In the Museum at Bosting they've got the lead-pencil that Noah used to check off the animals that went into the Ark!"

AMONG the women in the street, you shall see one whose bonnet and dress is one thing, and the lady herself quite another, wearing withal an expression of meek submission to her bonnet and dress; and another whose dress obeys and heightens the expression of her form.--Emerson.

AS A SCHOOL-MASTER was employed the other day, in Scotland, in his delightful task of teaching a sharp urchin to cipher on the slate, the precocious pupil put the following question to his instructor: "Whaur dlez a' the figures gang till when they're rubbit out?"

A MELANCHOLY friend in Des Moines despondently writes: "Weather is very wet in Iowa. Weeds are ahead of the corn, grasshoppers ahead of the weeds, grangers ahead of the grasshoppers, and the dreadful 'middlemen' ahead of them all--as usual."

CHATEAUBRIAND said: "Madame Chateaubriand would not dine later than five. I was never hungry till seven. But we compromised and dined at six, so that we could neither of us enjoy it, and that is what people call the happiness of mutual concessions."

IN THE æsthetic order, poetry is the first of all powers given to man. It is to the eternal beauty what virtue is to the eternal good; what wisdom is to eternal truth. In short, it is a ray of light escaped from on high; it approaches us to God.--Labitte.

THE VERDICT of the coroner's jury in the case of a Detroit dry-goods clerk who died suddenly the other day was: "After a careful examination, we find that death ensued from his having neglected to ask 'Anything else to day?' of a lady leaving the store."

"MOTHER," said a little girl on returning from Sunday-school, where she had been taught about the Infant Jesus, "if the Virgin Mary was Jesus' mother, wasn't she God's wife?"

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 13.

Benj. Gerrish, Jr., $5; S. Warbasse, 50 cents; W. Tufts, 10 cents; M. P. Hanchett, $1.80; W. Lombard, 10 cents; Cash, $2.50; C. Timmons, 10 cents; J. Russ, $3.20; C. E. Watson, $3.30; L. W. Blakesley, $2.50; L. Liebmann, $3.20; D. R. Samson, $1; Pierce & Bushnell, $3.20; J. H. Swift, Jr., $3.20; Joseph March, $1.10; J. N. Clark, $3.20; E. H. Hopkins, $3.20; G. N. Newhall, $3.20; Peter H. Clark, $3.20; C. Griswold, $5; E. G. Burnett, 70 cents; A. Vacher, $2.18; Martha White, $1.10; J. A. Heintzelman, $3.20; H. B. Williams, $1.60; Edw. Berrean, $3.20; Mrs. M. A. Tripler, $1.50; R. M. Lucas, $3.20; Max Brickner, $3.20; J. H. Hurlburt, $3.20; Wm. Rotch, $3.20; C. A. Hardy, $1; D. Sandman, 20 cents; T. W. Vogel, 10 cents; F. K. Gillette, 20 cents; E. Whicher, $3.20; J. Hunt, $3.25; J. F. Barrett, $3.20; Frank B. Sibley, $2.20; J. Gardner, $3.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.--Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.--Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.--Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.--When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.00
A. Scheffing, Philadelphia	1.00
Richard Hackett, Philadelphia	1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y.	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Bleson, Port Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and Slater, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	2.00
S. R. Honey	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Riak, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. S. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio	.30
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia	5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia	1.00
George Langford	1.00
Thos. Phillips	1.00
Carl Doerflinger, Milwaukee	1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass.	1.00
A. Friend, New Bedford, Mass.	10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y.	10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y.	20.00
S. R. Koehler, Boston	2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa	1.00
H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	1.00
H. C. Gray, Painesville, O., (collection)	5.50
J. Sedgbeer	.50
Through Banner of Light	15.50
" Boston Investigator	16.75
" New Age	5.50
M. Altman, New York City	20.00
F. A. Green, Boston	5.00
Friends in Boston	2.00
J. V. Blake, Boston	5.00
A. Friend in "	5.00
Geo. W. Park, "	3.00
Chas. W. Wendte, Cincinnati	5.00
Robert Moore, St. Louis	10.00
James Eddy, Providence	5.00
W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.	.50
W. L. Foster, East Soughton, Mass.	2.00
Mary G. Thompson, Worcester, Mass.	3.00
John Wise, Philadelphia	1.00
A. Friend in New Jersey	10.00
John Gillies, St. Louis	1.00
Robert Collier, Chicago	50.00
"An English Brother" (25)	27.85
J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa	1.00
Louis Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.	2.00
B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. Wm. Heine, Pleasant Hill, Mo.	1.00
Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.	2.00
Thos. H. Matthews, New Bedford	5.00
S. F. Spangler, Winthrop, Iowa	5.00
D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.	1.00

May 15.....$397.43

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 18, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLAZA, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnsdall, ".....	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whicher, Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.....	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.....	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston.....	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston.....	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaaki, N. Y.....	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.....	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" John Hlat, Winchester, Ind.....	5.00
" 25.	" A Friend.....	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horach, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston.....	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.....	2.00
" 3.	" A Friend in New York City.....	50.00
" 3.	" Bank City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.....	5.00
" 8.	" J. D. Lange, New York City.....	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston.....	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.....	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, ".....	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.....	4.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipher, St. Louis.....	2.00
" 8.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.....	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.....	5.00
" 13.	" O. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.....	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa.....	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.....	10.00
" 13.	" G. P. Reynolds (for "liberals of Shelley, O.").....	8.00
" 17.	" J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia.....	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sulist, Salem, Ohio.....	5.75
" 17.	" J. S. Bonnell, ".....	.90
" 17.	" M. Schlesinger, Albany.....	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York.....	25.00
" 25.	" Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.....	90.00
" 25.	" Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.....	5.00
" 25.	" W. H. Crowell, ".....	5.00
" 25.	" J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.....	1.00
" 25.	" Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.....	2.00
" 25.	" C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee.....	2.00
" 25.	" J. A. Heintzelman, Phila.....	5.00
May 1.	" D. G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.....	1.00
" 1.	" S. R. Koehler, Boston.....	3.00
" 1.	" Geo. M. Murray, Jersey City.....	1.80
" 1.	" H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.....	5.00
" 1.	" C. A. Simpson, Saxonville, ".....	5.00
" 1.	" J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon.....	5.00
" 15.	" B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.....	5.00
" 15.	" "An English Brother" (£5).....	27.25
" 15.	" John Gillies, St. Louis.....	1.00
" 15.	" J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa.....	4.00
" 15.	" L. Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.....	5.00
" 15.	" Dr. Max. Landberg, N. Y.....	5.00
" 15.	" A. Walther, Brooklyn.....	2.00
" 15.	" E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.....	2.00
" 15.	" M. Altman, New York City.....	20.00
" 15.	" E. E. Grimshaw, Minneapolis, Minn.....	5.00
" 15.	" Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.....	3.00
" 15.	" F. P. Hicks, ".....	1.00
" 15.	" Benj. Gerrish, Jr., Bordeaux, France.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. L. Foster, East Stoughton, Mass.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.....	.50
" 15.	" C. E. Phillips, Boston.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. F. Phillips, ".....	1.00
" 15.	" H. S. Williams, ".....	5.00
" 15.	" Mrs. Owen Gillett, Parma, Mich.....	5.00
" 15.	" D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.....	2.00

$582.20

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

THE HIGHLY GRATIFYING growth of the subscription lists necessitates the transfer of the "Paine Bust Subscriptions" to the preceding page, where all contributions to that fund will be hereafter acknowledged as usual.

It is pleasant to see a journal published in far-off Australia devoting editorially a column and a half to the consideration of an article published in THE INDEX. This was done by the Maryborough and Dunolly Advertiser of March 17, which approvingly cites several passages from Mr. James' first letter to THE INDEX on "Deliverance, not Perfection, the Aim of Religion." Another interesting letter from the same finished writer will be found in our present issue.

MR. STEVENS' article on another page will be read with interest by all, and with agreement by such as see no occasion for organized cooperation among liberals. He is heartily welcome to THE INDEX once more, and none the less heartily that he comes to oppose measures which we believe absolutely necessary to the perpetuation of religious liberty in the United States. If his view of the situation is correct, it ought to prevail; if not, it neither can nor will. But all views should be candidly considered, and we are glad to know that readers of THE INDEX are accustomed to consider them with entire independence.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15.	A Friend in Boston (paid).....	$100.00
April 28.	Miss Marian Hovey, Boston (paid).....	100.00
April 17.	Wm. H. Sayward, Dorchester (paid) $25 }.....	100.00
May 3.	Free Lecture Ass'n, New Haven, " } $75 }.....	100.00
May 8.	Nath. C. Nash, Boston (paid).....	100.00
May 13.	Samuel L. Hill, Florence, Mass. (paid).....	100.00
		$500.00

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

NOTICE.

The Fifth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 3, 1876, at 2 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The ninth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, June 1st, 7½ o'clock, annual business meeting in Horticultural Hall, for the election of officers, reading of reports, and addresses on the practical aims and work of the Association.

Friday, June 2d, at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "Free Religion and the State." Afternoon subject: "Free Religion and the Church."

A social festival will be held in Horticultural Hall on Friday evening.

W. J. POTTER,
Secretary.

FRIENDS INDEED.

The contribution of $75.00 to the fund for the Centennial Congress of Liberals by the Free Lecture Association of New Haven, Connecticut, is worthy of special commendation. A private letter says: "The last time I wrote to you I mentioned that I hoped to do something for the Centennial Congress. Well, I laid the matter before the Executive Committee of our Free Lecture Association, every member of which entered heartily into the project, the result being an entertainment to raise a sum to help defray the expenses of the Congress. The net proceeds were $63.00, this sum being raised by private subscription to $75.00. Not the least encouraging circumstance in this connection was the fact that the press of the city advertised the affair without charge in consideration of the object—a thing they have never before done for us. The editor of the Register, a Democratic journal and not very radical either, said to the person who asked him to insert the notice, 'Who are these Liberals?' The answer was that Francis E. Abbot, editor of the Boston INDEX, was chairman of the committee of arrangements. 'All right,' said the editor, 'we will give you the notice.'... I would say, however, that I would not have you mention my name in connection with the matter, at least not so that I could take credit from the notice, for the simple reason that I do not deserve it. There are too many unselfish workers in our Association to allow my name to be mentioned prominently. The proprietor of the Hall (an Orthodox man, too) gave us the rent for a nominal sum, and the music was also contributed. Perhaps we deserve more credit that we raised the money when our 'struggle for existence' was most severe; that is, while we are getting renewals of subscriptions and providing for another year—which is a serious work, you know."

The spirit manifested by the Free Lecture Association in this affair is one of the most encouraging things which has come to our knowledge for a long time. It shows what generosity and self-sacrifice are all ready to start into activity among liberals, the moment that something practically is proposed to be done. We believe they will not be wasted. The plans of the Congress of Liberals are rapidly becoming matured, and our hopes of great results are high. Instead of taking time to answer the endless cavils and objections that are raised on all hands against the Liberal League, we mean simply to "go ahead," and let our summer's work be its own abundant justification. To these men and women of noble faith and generous heart in New Haven, whom we had the pleasure of addressing a few months ago in advocacy of our cause, and to all who have come forward to hold up our hands, we can only say with deep gratitude: "We thank you, friends indeed! Your confidence is new strength, and shall not be given in vain. If the liberals of America are only alive, a splendid answer to it will come back from Philadelphia in this Centennial Year."

TWO KINDS OF BREADTH.

Mr. Karl Heinzen, the brave and uncompromising veteran who for more than twenty-two years has edited in this city Der Pioneer, an organ of German radicalism of the most extreme type, published an article, in his issue of May 8, which is entitled to special attention at this time. A very intelligent young Russian of this city has kindly favored us with the following translation of this article:—

THE ALLIANCE BETWEEN THE GERMAN AND AMERICAN RADICALS.

The alliance of Radicals by the proposed Convention in Philadelphia [i. e., the convention of German Liberal Societies during the last week of June] is an affair which deserves a timely and thorough consideration. We should think it a great mistake to suppose that the short space of a few days on which they will meet together will accomplish it. The main questions, particularly those which may present some difficulties, ought to be settled now, so that it may not be necessary to waste the then precious time by investigating what has to be done, and what not. Of course, this does not exclude the possibility that, even at Philadelphia during the convention, erring views may be corrected, as well as new ones brought to light. But there are questions which, though very important, have been discussed very little, or not at all. Again, there are other questions about which opinions differ in such a degree, that an agreement is to be hoped only by an all-sided examination. And these are just the ones that cannot be investigated too early.

Among these, the alliance between the German and American Radicals is one of the most difficult. The most important representatives of American radicalism are the so-called "Liberal Leagues," whose convention at Philadelphia will follow that of the Germans.

The Liberal Leagues pursue at present no other aim than religious enlightenment and emancipation of the political sphere from religious influences. Can the agitation of the German Radicals be limited to that alone? Impossible! Had they advocated that only, their convention were entirely superfluous; for they advocated long ago, and propagated everywhere, what the Liberal Leagues demand at present. But suppose that the Germans, for the sake of an alliance with the Liberal Leagues, should put aside all the other great questions, what may they then expect from such a one-sided organization? Of course, nothing else than the advocacy of its particular aim, which anyway can be agitated by word and pen. But they will never gain a political influence, which is, however, under the present circumstances, necessarily the most essential. Only that party can gain political influence which chooses for its field of action all the interests of the people. True radicalism demands a universal progress; and the one-sided agitation of one question only, without noticing the other just as important ones, is therefore decidedly contrary to true radicalism. Under some circumstances, one timely demand may be raised above the others, and so a party may be devoted to that one especially. But as soon as it leads to the entire exclusion of all others, then even the victorious agitation of it will demand a certain reaction, by which the questions thus neglected will afterwards take their revenge. But, even considering it from a purely practical point of view, the interest of the party will necessitate the combination and reciprocal effects of all questions of progress to be constantly kept in view. While the one-sided representatives of special interests are always isolated, those who take interest in each other can offer hands for mutual alliance. He who agitates exclusively religious emancipation cannot expect the cooperation of those who think that emancipation from political corruption and reform of the whole political system are more essential at present. But, by supporting each other, they form a party, and thus profit reciprocally.

Should the agitation of the Liberal Leagues be in future limited only to narrow boundaries, as it is now, their cooperators will be but few. Should they, however, enlarge the field of their agitation, as the German free congregations did—should they also devote their interest to all other timely important demands, as those of political reform, emancipation of women, socialism, etc.,—then they will command a larger force; and the reforms to which they are now exclusively devoted will be propagated with far greater success than can be done by them alone.

Their main representative, Mr. Abbot, the editor of THE INDEX, is against the enlarging of the present so-called Demands of Liberalism. It is his opinion that one must devote all his power to one aim. However true it may be under certain conditions, it is a very narrow view in general. If we apply this principle to the combat of two large political parties, it is evident that that party is lost which follows Mr. Abbot's advice, and gives its whole strength to the principle it advocates. Somewhat different it is with a question for life, as, for instance, the abolition of slavery.

The Convention of the German Radicals takes place before that of the Liberal Leagues. It is therefore not impossible that the former may influence the latter, especially if the Americans should be notified in an appropriate manner of the views of the Germans. Should the Liberal Leagues, however, pay no attention to it, the Germans will have nothing else to do but to let them alone, while their platform will, nevertheless, remain a part of that of the German.

Mr. Heinzen considers that the German plan of cooperation among radicals is broader, more comprehensive, and likely to prove more influential, than the plan of the Liberal League, because, as he thinks, the former is "all-sided," aims at "universal progress," and "chooses for its field of action all the interests of the people," while the latter is "narrow," aims at progress in one direction, and devotes itself to simple emancipation of the State from the control of the Church. He believes that the German plan "will command a larger force"—that is, will unite a larger body of supporters—than the plan of the Liberal League, because it includes agitation for "political reform, emancipation of women, socialism, etc." And he concludes that the German radicals will have nothing to do with the Liberal League, unless it "enlarges" its objects so as to include everything which interests themselves.

As to the probable action of the German radicals, we are not in a position to form even a conjecture; Mr. Heinzen is far better qualified to predict what they will do than we are. But nevertheless, in the friendliest possible spirit, we wish to remind him that, when the question of uniting liberals in hearty coöperation is raised, the broadest plan in one point of view is the narrowest plan in another.

No doubt, a platform which is composed of many "planks" is in one sense broader than one which comprises only one. But it should be remembered that every new "plank" that is added excludes all who do not choose to stand upon it. The German radicals, it seems, are in favor of the Liberal League platform, which proposes the one and of completing the separation of Church and State, and object to it only because it does not propose other ends also. On the Liberal League platform, then, the German and American liberals can all stand on equal terms, neither being required to sacrifice a single conviction; for it is a great mistake to suppose that any one is required to suppress his individual convictions, or to limit his individual efforts for other objects than that of the Liberal League. A man who joins an association for the purpose of preventing frauds at the ballot-box does not cut himself off from joining another association for the purpose of raising funds to relieve the Herzegovinians. But if he refuses to join any association that does not in its platform adopt the objects of all other associations in which he may be interested, he cuts himself off from coöperation with all except those who agree with him on all subjects.

Is this broad or liberal? Is it "all-sided" for A to say to B, "I will not help you do something which I also want to have done, unless you help me do something which you do not want to have done"? That is a kind of bargaining which, plainly stated, we do not believe that upright Mr. Heinzen would sanction for a moment. Yet that is precisely the kind of bargaining to which he does in fact invite the Liberal League. The German radicals, as represented by the manifesto of their sub-committee in THE INDEX of December 16, 1875, propose three amendments of the United States Constitution:—

- "1. Abolition of the Presidency.
- "2. Abolition of the Senate.
- "3. Transfer of the whole Administration of the State to a single assembly of always responsible representatives of the people, whose individual members can at any time be recalled by their constituents and replaced by others."

Now we are not prepared to say that these steps would be wise or good; they may be, but we doubt it; we need to hear much discussion of their merits before we could approve them. The same is true of a majority, probably, of American-born radicals. Certainly we could not individually join in buying the support of German-born radicals by pledging ourselves to work for these three amendments; and it does not appear to us "all-sided" or "broad" or "liberal" at all, to exact such a pledge as the condition of coöperation with the Liberal League. The Germans, according to Mr. Heinzen, approve and sympathize with the proposal to separate completely the Church and the State; yet he substantially advises them not to aid those who seek this mutually approved object, unless the latter will first consent to aid him in other objects which they do not approve. Such a coalition as this would be contrary to every principle of high political morality. Rather than be a party to it, we should cheerfully see all our efforts to establish the Liberal League prove a failure. We do not aim at success on any such terms; and the German radicals will not increase the respect felt for them by their American-born brothers, if they seriously propose any such terms.

No—the "broader" you make a platform by multiplying its essential planks, the "narrower" you make it by reducing the number of its honest supporters. That platform has true "breadth" which enables all of like purposes to act together efficiently and with self-respect. The platform of the Liberal League is so broad that German and American liberals (the distinction is itself ridiculous, for all American citizens are Americans, no matter where they were born) can all unite to work for it, if they choose to respect each others' independent opinions on other subjects; and there is no sort of obligation not to work for other platforms in other ways. But the platform of the German radicals is so "narrow" that only they themselves can work for it. They do well to work for it, whether broad or narrow, if they think it good; and we are very glad that they should make an organized appeal to the public on its behalf, since that is the best way to get a hearing for their cause. But we shall be sorry, if they cannot or will not join with the Liberal League in a cause which they themselves approve, merely because the Liberal League does not join with them in a cause which it does not as yet approve; and we shall be still more sorry, if they put their refusal on the ludicrously weak ground of the superior "breadth" and "all-sidedness" of their own narrow platform. The Liberal League has no favors to ask of any other association as such; it simply appeals to all individuals who approve its object, whether they belong to other associations or not, to help it secure the separation of Church and State. This object constitutes a platform as "broad" as religious liberty itself; and all who believe in religious liberty will be perfectly at home upon it, if they choose to be reasonable rather than wilful. Whoever does so can belong to as many associations for other objects as he pleases; and probably every member of the Liberal League will belong to many such. But since they cannot all think alike on all subjects, it will be wise neither to refuse each other coöperation where they agree nor yet to seek arbitrarily to force their own idiosyncrasies on all the rest. That is the secret of all lasting union, and we believe that many have now discovered it.

METEOROLOGICAL AND POLITICAL.

I wonder what May-day was in New England! Here in the capital of South Carolina we had a cold rain-storm and a north-east wind with quite a New England air about it. The thermometer went down to 45°. The day before it had been ranging from 80° to 88°, and the heat continued far into the night. Then came thunder, and lightning, and floods, and the grayest of May mornings. Within twelve hours the mercury went down forty degrees. There was nothing to do but look up again discarded flannels, pile the wood into our hospitable great fireplace, and keep within doors,—with occasional peeps down into the old garden under our windows which was all aglow with roses, and up into the magnificent magnolia tree that has refreshed our eyes through winter and spring, and is now budding for a glory which we shall not see. It is plain that one does not wholly escape great and sudden changes of temperature by coming South. Yet we congratulated ourselves that we were not in the midst of the snow-storm which the telegraph reported in Pennsylvania on May-day, and that we were surrounded by an atmosphere that must soon recover from the effects of this blast from the north-east. And the recovery has come,—almost too much of it. Yesterday and to-day—I write on Sunday, May 7th—the mercury has mounted above 80° again, and flannels and fireplaces have evil suggestions. Yet what roses bloom under this sunshine! And we shall turn northward soon, grateful that our eyes have beheld such beauty, and grateful to the little city, though of evil political reputation, for the better promise of health that has come from its salubrious air.

I have, this last week, conscientiously attended the South Carolina Democratic State Convention (for electing delegates to the National Convention at St. Louis), as I attended a month ago the similar Convention of the Republican party. The two conventions present in strong contrast the old and the new eras of South Carolina politics. Of the Republican Convention the majority of the members were colored; and of the white members the majority were new residents that have come from the North since the war. The president of the body and the chairman of the delegation it elected to the National Republican Convention were both colored men. The Democratic Convention represented the old citizens of the State,—or rather the old governing class. There were three or four ex-Governors in it, and "Generals" and "Colonels" without number,—all, of course, of the Confederate army. I doubt if a finer-looking body of men could be assembled in any political convention in the country. Judging by evidences of intelligence and character, one would say that these are the men that ought to be in control of the government of the State; and it does not seem strange that they have not taken kindly to the government which has been established and administered by the party represented in the other Convention. If it were safe to say that the soundest political principles and the most humane and progressive ideas go with culture and blood, one could hardly hesitate with which convention to cast his lot.

But it needs no long memory to recall the fact that it was just the class of men of whom this Democratic Convention was made up that upheld slavery and the old South Carolina oligarchy, carried through the act of Secession, made war upon the United States flag, fought for slavery against the Union, and, when conquered, were discovered, in the early days of reconstruction, plotting to nullify the Act of Emancipation by a "Black Code" that would have practically reduced the negroes again to bondage. And recalling this brief history it becomes clear that the only way to meet the dire political exigency which the acts of these men had brought upon their State and country, was by negro suffrage and negro eligibility to office, even with all the involved possibilities of evil, resulting from ignorance, and mental and moral inexperience.

But years and experience bring their lessons, and it is evident that both parties have been learning. A large portion of the Republican party, led now by Governor Chamberlain, are fully awake to the fact that in order to keep the sacred trust of government and to be worthy to keep it, the party must put all selfish and personal aggrandizement aside, and seek only for honesty, justice, efficiency, and economy of administration. And the Democratic party are beginning to see, even in this State, that certain political events, when they have once happened, have happened forever and are irreversible. In this Democratic Convention three black men sat as delegates, and were most cordially received. And they were assured by speakers and resolutions that the Democratic party would guard as strictly as the Republican all the political and personal rights of the colored people. I have seen Democrats in the Legislature listening with respect to the speaking of their colored fellow-members, and deigning to reply to their arguments; and when the old aristocratic South Carolinian has met his former slave as an equal in legislative and political debate, the day for any revolutionary act against the black man's rights has gone by.

To be sure, I overheard a young sprig of one of the old white families say that "if it were not for the Union soldiers here, the white folks would make short work of that nigger legislature in the State House." But this young fellow, not yet out of his teens, was not, I believe, so true a prognosticator of the future conditions and action of political parties in the State as was the old negro with whom I talked the other night,—physically about as unpromising a specimen for a voter as one could find, and able neither to read nor write, but who said he didn't care any more whether they called him Democrat or Republican; what he wanted, and many more like him, was honest government; and he should vote for the man set up who knew best the straight way of right, right before him, and would walk in it. Here was wisdom born of political experience; and the party in South Carolina (and, it may be added, in the country) that will appeal to such wisdom and use it, is ere long to win the day.

W. J. P.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The opening exercises of the Exhibition at Philadelphia passed off to the satisfaction of the newspaper reporter, at least, and apparently, also, to that of the really great crowd of people assembled. The prayer of Bishop Simpson—judged from a philosophical, theological, national, or centennial point of view—was sufficiently remarkable for that, or for any other occasion. The hymn of Mr. Whittier was like other hymns which he has written, and to those familiar with his verses needs no other description. Of the cantata of Mr. Sidney Lanier, the less said the better. The address of President Grant was brief and appropriate, and was, in fact, much better worded than were the speeches of Mr. Welch and General Hawley. Although the Exhibition, as a whole, is in a state of great forwardness—considering the inertness of the people of the country with regard to it, during its early stages—none of the departments are yet in complete order, and as this fact is generally understood, the number of visitors upon any one day, with the exception of the opening, has thus far been small. It is too soon, as yet, to express any opinion with regard to the success of the Exhibition as compared with like exhibitions of other countries.

In one thing, however, the Exhibition seems already to have been quite successful; namely, in calling attention to the fact that the Puritan Sabbath is a provincial institution, the laws of which cannot consistently be applied to anything of an international character. The Commissioners, several weeks ago, decided (after a brief debate) to close the buildings of the Exhibition on Sundays, but to leave the grounds open. Later, however, they reconsidered the last vote, and decided to close the grounds as well as the buildings. Energetic protests against the decision of the Commissioners are coming in from all parts of the country, and what is more, many of these protests contain reasons which are clearly unanswerable. No one, unhampered by theological prejudice, could imagine for a moment that there would be any impropriety, much less any sin, in attending the Exhibition on Sunday rather than on Saturday or Monday. The idea, moreover, that Sunday can be rightly passed only in church-going and psalm-singing is an exploded superstition, which men old enough to act as Centennial Commissioners should have gotten through with many years ago. If the Exhibition be closed on Sundays, hundreds of thousands of people—precisely the people, moreover, who would be likely to receive benefit from it—will be debarred from attending it, from the simple fact, trifling as it may appear to many, that they cannot afford in these hard times to give up the amount of a day's wages in addition to paying the regular entrance-fee. A very large meeting, presided over by the venerable Dr. Furness, was held in Philadelphia last Saturday, and an address to the Commissioners was unanimously adopted, requesting them to open the grounds and buildings on Sundays, either free or at a reduced rate. It is to be hoped that the Commissioners may yet have the good sense to take this step, which we are glad to observe, is advised by the secular press throughout the country.

Congress of course did very little work last week, and nearly all the members naturally accepted the invitation to visit Philadelphia. We wonder if any member of Congress was troubled in conscience during his trip by the fact that he was "deadheaded" over the road by Colonel "Tom" Scott, a gentleman who has been industriously lobbying during the winter for an appropriation from Congress to help him in building the Texas and Pacific Railroad. But perhaps we should not allow this suggestion to obtrude at this time of Centennial rejoicing. It may be well, however, to remember, at some future time, that had it not been for Scott's free passes, Congress might not have adjourned for three days last week. The Senate passed a resolution directing the Committee on Commerce to examine the matter of Chinese immigration; and the House directed the Committee on Ways and Means to investigate the management of the New York Custom House. With the exception of the passage of the bill for carrying into effect the provisions of the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands, and a debate upon the Post-Office Appropriation Bill, nothing of interest took place in either House.

A very able letter from Secretary Fish, addressed to Mr. Hoffman, our Chargé d'Affaires at London, and intended for the perusal of Lord Derby, has been published. Mr. Fish goes over the whole ground of our treaty relations with England on the subject of the extradition of criminals, with especial reference to the present position of England with regard to the case of Winslow. He shows conclusively that under the existing treaty (that of 1842) between the United States and Great Britain, "in each country surrendered fugitives have been tried for other offences than those for which they had been delivered"; that, for instance, a man extradited from this country for forgery has been tried in England for larceny, an offence for which he could not have been surrendered. He shows that the two governments have always agreed heretofore in their construction of the treaty and in its practical application; criticises the Parliamentary act of 1870; declines to admit that a law passed by one country can alter the provisions of a treaty previously accepted by both countries; expresses surprise that Great Britain should have raised this obstacle at the present moment, when three criminals in her possession are desired by our government; cites a number of cases in support of his various positions; intimates that the continuance of the extradition clause of the treaty may depend upon the present decision of Great Britain; and concludes by directing Mr. Hoffman not to enter into any stipulation or understanding as to the trial of Winslow in case he is delivered up to justice. No reply to this letter of Mr. Fish has as yet been made public.

The Democrats of Connecticut have nominated Mr. Barnum for Senator, and he will be chosen by the Legislature. As a Representative, Mr. Barnum has been remarkable chiefly for his absences from Washington. He is of no value as a legislator, and owes his nomination to his wealth,—a fact which, in a State possessing many Democrats of irreproachable character and of unquestioned ability, does not help the Democratic chances for success at the next election. These chances have been lessened also by a seemingly trifling affair, the publication of a very silly letter written by Fitzhugh, the Democratic door-keeper of the House of Representatives. This gentleman, elated with his position, allowed his elation to slop over in a letter to a Texas friend, who, expecting an appointment from Fitzhugh and not receiving it, published the letter. Fitzhugh, and the ridiculous stuff contained in his letter, would merit no attention, were it not that the character of Democratic appointees is just now a matter of some importance, and it must be confessed that some recent selections have been extremely unfortunate. Moreover, no party in opposition can afford to make itself ridiculous, even by the appointment of a silly door-keeper.

Another scene in the Beecher-Bowen farce was played in the vestry of Plymouth Church last week in the attempt to take action upon the report of the Committee which has been examining the character of Bowen. After a variety of propositions had been considered and rejected, and after Dr. Ward (Bowen's counsel and editor of the Independent) had been expelled from the meeting for insulting Mr. Beecher, it was finally agreed that Mr. Bowen might tell his terrible secret to Dr. Taylor of the Broadway Tabernacle, on condition that the latter should never reveal it. Dr. Taylor has since declined to act as a "safe" for Bowen's secret, and what Bowen will do with it now we cannot even guess. No answer has been made, and it is safe to prophesy that none will be made, by Beecher to Moulton's propositions for a trial of the case between them upon its merits and before an impartial committee or jury. The arguments upon the reopening of the case of Beecher vs. Moulton have been made before the General Term at Poughkeepsie, but the decision has not yet been announced.

Opponents of capital punishment have an excellent opportunity to test the correctness of some of their theories in deciding what should be done with the man in Boston who has been convicted of the murder of a little girl in a church belfry, and who now confesses that he not only murdered the little girl, but that he has also committed several other murders or murderous assaults. The motive in each case seems to have been either lust or pure devilry. Upon one occasion, he asserts, he left his house with a determination to kill somebody, and finding an Irish servant-girl in a lonely place he thereupon killed her. How could this man be "reformed"? He has enjoyed all the advantages of modern civilization and of Christian preaching, having been employed for several years as a sexton of a Baptist Church. We have never been in favor of hanging, but will some good philanthropist tell us if those people are wrong who have expressed a feeling of thankfulness that this man is to be executed next week? If there be any truth in the theory of "the survival of the fittest," who is "fittest" to survive,—this man or those who would become his victims if he should be allowed to live?

Turkish affairs are approaching a crisis. The Herzegovinians are firm in refusing to accept the proposed plan of pacification, and although Montenegro has not formally declared war, no obstacle is put in the way of those who wish to help the people of Herzegovina. Serbia is said to be arming, and may at any time put herself among the active enemies of her nominal master, especially if the revolt in Bosnia, which begins in a formidable manner, should continue to spread. An insurrection is reported also in Bulgaria, but of this we have no particulars as yet. To add to Turkish troubles, an affair which may have serious results has occurred at Salonica, where the French and German consuls have been killed by a mob. Official reports (Turkish) put the blame upon the American consul who it is stated endeavored to rescue from her Mohammedan protectors a Greek girl who had been converted to Mohammedanism. His house was surrounded by a mob, and the other consuls, coming to his assistance, were killed. Later reports state that the American consul was not in the city at the time. Vessels of war have been ordered to Salonica by nearly all the European powers, although the Porte has hastened to apologize and to make offers of reparation to France and Germany. A conference (which may become an historic milestone) of Bismarck, Gortschakoff, and Andrassy, has been in session for some days, and as we write is still in session, at the house of the first in Berlin. It is understood that the deliberations of the conference have regard to Turkish difficulties and the action relative thereto of the Great Powers of Europe. Many people believe that the end of Turkish rule in Europe is about to come; but the holders of Turkish bonds are unwilling to believe this, and it is quite possible that some arrangement will be made to keep Turkey from dissolution in order that her creditors may not lose all their money.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, April 22, 1876.

Your readers will be aware that we have in England a large and powerful society called "The National Secular Society," or, more shortly, the N. S. S., which devotes itself to the propagandism of freethought and republicanism, guards rational interests when they are assailed, defends weak members of "the faith," agitates for religious, social, and political reforms, and serves as a general rallying-point of liberal thought. The annual conference of this body in May, 1875, caused some sensation, and the XIXe Siècle, a leading French paper, gave a long and accurate account of its proceedings, approving highly of two or three of the resolutions come to, one of which was to issue diplomas to those qualified to lecture on our platform, and another to issue a Freethinker's Text Book, a kind of armory for freethinkers, and a sign-post to direct students what to read. Diplomas have duly been taken out by various lecturers, myself among the number, and the approval thus given seems likely to prove beneficial.

The issue of the Text Book has just commenced. The executive appointed as editors Charles Bradlaugh, Charles Watts, and myself, one or two others having been asked to assist, but having pleaded overwork and other causes of hindrance. The Text Book is to supply arguments against Theism and Christianity, and is to give an exposition of secularism. It is, in fact, to be a résumé of freethought arguments, wherewith the busy may equip themselves, if they have not time to study the original authorities for themselves. The Theistic portion was, by arrangement of the editors, assigned to Mr. Bradlaugh, the Christian to myself, the Secular to Mr. Watts, and it was decided that the book should be issued in monthly numbers. The first number, entitled "Man: Whence and How," appeared on April 1, and already the third thousand is almost exhausted, two editions running out of print within the first week. It contains a solid foundation for the attack on Christianity to be made later by myself, destroying entirely the authority of the creation of man, on the truth of which depends the Christian fabric, arguing first, from the literary point of view, that the narrative is untrustworthy and unhistoric; then that the Bible account fixes believers to six thousand years for the age of mankind; and then bringing a vast mass of information from the various sciences which bear upon this point, giving in each case, the scientific authority, so that the statements made may rest upon unassailable ground. The first number only contained half the section, which will be completed in No. 2, to be published on May 1. The next section will be entirely devoted to Theism, will trace religion upwards from fetishism, and will give the atheistic argument tersely and exhaustively. This section will probably occupy about two monthly numbers, and will be succeeded by the commencement of my share of the labor,—the arguments against Christianity.

The only word said against the published commencement of the Text Book has come from a bitter personal enemy of Mr. Bradlaugh's, who objects that the Mosiac cosmogony need not be attacked any more than the Hindu or any other cosmogony, and also that there are too many quotations in the book. To the first objection the obvious answer is that, if writing a book for Hindu freethinkers, the Hindu cosmogonies would be attacked, just as, in writing for those in Christian lands, the prevailing superstition is the one to strike at; to the second, a Text Book which was simply an essay written by one man and containing his personal opinions would be an absurdity. Such a work must give a résumé of opinions, and freethinkers, in arguing from the scientific basis, will do so with more effect, by quoting Agassiz, Lyell, Huxley, and Darwin, than by quoting Mr. Charles Bradlaugh; and, fortunately, Mr. Bradlaugh has the wisdom and humility to see this, and to search for, and put at the disposal of those who look to him for guidance, the very best weapons which modern science affords for the attack on the superstitions of the day. If the succeeding parts are as successful as the first, English freethinkers will have cause to congratulate themselves on the issue by the National Secular Society of so much-needed a book.

The National Secular Society Song and Hymn Book has also made a considerable success, and is on its way to a third edition, although only published in December last. It is a pleasant sign of growing strength that from various parts of the globe come suggestions for closer union between freethinkers in different countries. Secular societies are starting up in Australia and in Italy, among other places. Even in Rome itself a society is now forming, and these send friendly messages, asking whether some kind of International Secular Society might not advantageously be formed. This is a question which will, very probably, come before us at our next Conference, which is to be held at Leeds in the coming June. We hope to muster there strongly, and recruit our energies for the ensuing campaign. Some who do not formally belong to the society, but who are one with it in heart and object, will be with us. Among these is Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, whose reappearance in public life after his long and severe illness is warmly welcomed by all, and whose words will be listened to with interest and thoughtful attention. The only unpleasant feature of these gatherings is that there is usually present at such meetings a small knot of noisy free-lances, who are good at grumbling but at nothing else, and who, instead of working to forward the general cause, do nothing all the year, and then show their devotion by criticising any thing that has been done by anybody else. These folk do not really hinder business, as every body knows their entire hollowiness and uselessness, but they just make a small unpleasantness which is gladly caught up and utilized by Scripture readers and other small fry.

Matters ecclesiastical are quiet just now, during the Easter recess, and there is a general lull before the coming storm. Both theologically and politically we may, as sailors say, "look out for squalls," for many dangerous clouds are rolling up on all sides. Theologically, there is the dread of disruption in the Church Establishment, from the pressure of the Public Worship Regulation Act against the Ritualistic body, and the whispers of the secession of a Unitate Church deepen in intensity as more prosecutions are threatened, and priest after priest is menaced. The Liberal element is also one of danger to the stability of the Church, for the efforts of such men as Dean Stanley to widen her borders and to destroy her exclusiveness raise so much opposition from the narrower sections, that the Church quivers with the shocks, and the victory of the Broad Church party would be the signal for the fall of the Establishment. Politically, things are also dark. Falling wages, overstocked market, rising prices, are now met by our Tory government with increased taxation, and a rise in the Estimates to upwards of £78,000,000. Add to this material distress the irritation and bitterness caused by domestic blundering—the Merchant Shipping Bill, the two Slave Circulars, the Suez Canal

Purchase, the Royal Titles Bill, the indifference to British subjects abroad,—and you will understand that we are in a somewhat restless and critical state. We have been finding out how capitably we can get on without our Royal Family. Our future Empress has been in Germany; our Prince Imperial in India and Egypt; our grand Duke of Edinburgh in Russia and Berlin; our Prince Leopold in Italy; our Duke of Connaught in Algeria,—and yet, sad to say, the government of the country has gone on, and "nobody seemed one penny the worse." Things are broadening out rapidly into a republic. American friends, will you not purge the name, so that the second-born republic of English stock may have no cause to blush for her sister?

Communications.

ON THE REVIEW OF TYNDALL AND MARTINEAU IN THE LONDON "SPECTATOR."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Tyndall's essay on "Materialism and its Opponents" has been reviewed in the London Spectator. The reviewer says that Tyndall is answering the various critics of his Belfast Address, and chiefly Martineau, one of the ablest of them. He says that he is bewildered whenever Tyndall takes to reasoning on the theological and metaphysical speculations which underlie physical philosophy; that he has perused the essay twice or thrice, and cannot understand what "really is its drift and teaching"; and that "it must remain one of the obscurest riddles of modern literature." His "exceeding difficulty of understanding" the drift and teaching of the essay arises, he says, from his bewilderment as to what the main positions of Tyndall's argument jointly amount to.

The reviewer says that Tyndall complains that Martineau, without having any excuse, has misunderstood him as saying that he "can 'explain' mind from matter"; and that Tyndall maintains, and somewhat elaborately proves, that he has always said just the contrary. "Here, then, is Tyndall's first position. Whatever strength there may be in materialism, there is one great and impassable flaw in it. It cannot bridge the gulf between matter and consciousness. So far, then, Professor Tyndall is not a materialist." But no sooner is this position, of the speculative failure of materialism, clearly established in the reviewer's mind, than, to his bewilderment, he finds himself overwhelmed by another position in which he says a class of different opinions are as positively, partly, and dogmatically expressed. "For instance, Tyndall says, 'were not man's origin implicated, we should accept without a murmur the derivation of animal and vegetable life from what we call inorganic nature. The conclusion of pure intellect points this way, and no other. But this purity is troubled by our interests in this life, and by our hopes and fears in the world to come. Reason is traversed by the emotions, anger rising in the weaker heads to the height of suggesting that the compendious shooting of the inquirer would be an act agreeable to God and serviceable to man.'" The foes of this "conclusion of the pure intellect," says Tyndall, include "not only the ignorant and the passionate, but a minority of minds of high caliber and culture, —lovers of freedom, moreover, who still find the ethic life of their religion unimpaired, though its objective hull be riddled by logic." Considerations of courtesy for these, says Tyndall, ought to influence the form of our argument; but the substance of it "ought to be presented in unmitigated strength." Here, says the reviewer, "the only flaw, he now says, in the materialistic argument is, not its inability to bridge the gulf between molecules and consciousness, on which he had previously insisted, but only man's dislike to face the conclusions of pure intellect when they are disagreeable to himself"; and thus, the reviewer says, "that very materialist argument," with "the hopeless and ineradicable flaw in it," which Tyndall had seen and pointed out, for failing to recognize which he reproaches his critics, "he now finds one of 'unmitigated strength.' These discrepancies are puzzling enough."

Puzzling enough if the positions and the statement respecting them are fairly set forth, which they are not. The reviewer sets forth the positions so as to make Tyndall akin to the sizar, who, when asked whether the earth moves round the sun, or the sun round the earth said: "Sometimes the one and sometimes the other." The inconsistency suggested does not exist. It is true that Tyndall has always said that he cannot "explain," or logically infer, a state of mind from a state of matter; but it is not true that it is only now that "Tyndall appears to maintain that the pure 'intellect' has not any 'speculative fault to find with materialism'; and that 'it is only 'courtesy' . . . which makes Professor Tyndall tender with the antimaterialists'; and that 'if their position be worthy of respect it is not' on account of any 'speculative strength in it, but solely because it is a source of 'ethic life' in themselves'; for, as he says Tyndall remarks, 'the 'objective' truth of their religion has been positively riddled by logic.'"

In this Tyndall does not take a new "position," for, in the address, he says: "You cannot satisfy the human understanding in its demand for logical continuity between molecular processes and the phenomena of the human mind. This is a rock on which materialism must inevitably split whenever it pretends to be a complete philosophy of the human mind." But this is not inconsistent with Tyndall's materialism. He says that he cannot explain how mind results from matter, but he believes that it does, though he can no more explain why it is, than he can explain why water should result from a combination of oxygen and hydrogen. He says, in the essay, "Matter I define as that mysterious thing by which all this [including mind] is accomplished. How it came to have this power I never ventured an opinion"; and in the address Tyndall plainly implies that the materialistic argument ought to be presented in unmitigated strength; and that "pure intellect" points to no other derivation of man, physically and intellectually, than "from what we call inorganic nature." He says, "Had our education been purely scientific, or sufficiently detached from influences, which, however ennobling in another domain, have always proved hindrances and delusions when introduced as factors into the domain of physics, the scientific mind never could have swerved from a law of growth, or allowed itself to accept the anthropomorphism which regarded each successive [geological] stratum as a kind of mechanic's bench for the manufacture of new species out of all relation to the old." And to add strength to the materialistic position he says, "Is there not a temptation to close, to some extent, . . . with Bruno," who declared "that matter is not that mere empty capacity which philosophers have pictured her to be, but the universal mother who brings forth all things as the fruit of her own womb?" and who "came to the conclusion that Nature in her productions does not imitate the technique of man. Her process is one of unravelling and unfolding. The infinity of forms under which matter appears were not impressed upon it by an external artificer; by its intrinsic force and virtue it brings these forms forth." Tyndall said "we naturally and rightly reject the monstrous notion that any form of life could possibly arise out of such matter" as a combination of dead sensationless atoms; and he says the argument placed in the mouth of Bishop Butler "suffices, in my opinion, to crush out all such materialism as this." It is this materialism that is advocated by Buchner, Bradlaugh, and Underwood.

Referring to Darwin's idea of the origin of life from a small number of created forms, Tyndall said that he did not see any advantage in diminishing the number to one primordial form; "either let us open our doors freely to the conception of creative acts, or, abandoning them, radically change our notions of matter,"—letting us infer that he abandons the idea of the creation of organic forms, and that he agreed with Lucretius that we could do without the meddling of the gods. You said that Tyndall had not made any change in his notions of matter, and I think you are right; only that what you describe Tyndall to mean as a polarizing force is what Tyndall means by a living force, polar force with him being living force. Weiss, perceiving this, said Tyndall had changed his notion of matter, but we have not any evidence of "change," but only a fuller expression of his opinion. The critics in Blackwood's and Fraser's Magazines declared that the drift of the address is to teach materialism and atheism; but Proctor has recently declared that, rightly understood, it does not teach either, while Tyndall admits that he is a materialist but not an atheistic one; and he says in the essay that the inorganic, the vegetable, and the animal "worlds constitute a unity in which I picture life immanent everywhere." But atheists and pantheists have pictured life as immanent in matter. Cicero's "beloved" Dicaearch said that neither man nor beast has a soul distinct from matter, and that the power of thinking and acting is equally diffused through all living bodies, and is inseparable from them; and Strato, who in the third century B. C. was the instructor in the school of Aristotle, said that there was no mind separate from the body, and that the formation of the world was not the result of a God in or distinct from matter. The pantheist Bruno held the doctrine of life immanent in matter; he said that God is "the original and immanent cause of the universe," and that "Power, Wisdom, and Love are his attributes." He declared that "the form, moving cause, and end of organic beings are identical not only with each other, but also with the constituent matter of the organisms"; that "God caused the worlds to come forth out of himself," and that "God is Nature working." The point on which Tyndall closes with Bruno is that of life being immanent in matter; but we must not call him a pantheist, for he rejects the idea of God working in Nature. In the preface of the seventh edition of the address, he says, that "our sun and planets were once diffused through space as an impalpable haze, out of which by condensation came our solar system"; that the earth unfit for ages "to maintain life . . . is now covered with visible living things," which are not formed from matter different from that which surrounds them. And in reference to the question of the introduction of life, whether it "was implicated in the nebula—as part of a vaster and wholly incomprehensible Life, or is the work of a Being standing outside the nebula, who fashioned it as the potter does his clay," Tyndall says, "that as far as the eye of science has hitherto ranged through Nature, no intrusion of purely creative power into any series of phenomena has ever been observed. The assumption of such a power to account for special phenomena has always proved a failure. It is opposed to the very spirit of science."

When Tyndall speaks of "our reverence for" the "Creator" of matter, we must suppose that he admits some ultimate act of God in relation to matter; but he refers that to some undefined time prior to the nebulousity of our system. On this he is reticent, but he ridicules the idea that the power manifested in the universe, which he dare not call "He," "Mind," or "Cause," should be represented as an "Atom Manufacturer" (as does Clark Maxwell), or as an "Artificer of Souls"; Tyndall says it suggests doubts as to whether those who hold these notions were ever really penetrated with the solemnity of solving the problem of life; and, he says, when we consider the supposition that this power turns out annually, in England and Wales, a quarter of a million of souls, who, according to the dictum of Carlyle, are mostly fools, the increase does not say much in regard to reverence for Divine operations.

Tyndall said, six years ago, that the notion that the consciousness of to-day was evolved out of unconscious primeval mist may be too monstrous to be entertained by any sane mind, but that it would not appear so if we had been impregnated with the notion of Goethe, that "matter is the living garment of God"; and, he said, without a "total revolution" in the prevalent notions of matter, "the hypothesis of evolution must be condemned." That revolution will be the notion that all matter is alive.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN CHAPPELLSMITH.

NEW HARMONY, Ind.

WORSHIPPING THE GOLDEN CALF.

ORLAND, Ind., March 27, 1876.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Being an earnest believer in the truth of the Declaration of Independence, and believing that it is the duty of the people's representatives in Congress to devise and enact such laws as shall render said Declaration and the Constitution predicated thereon operative, and believing that the transatlantic monarchical gold-basis system of finance is as hostile to our secular rights, as the blood-atoning, sin-forgiving, innocence-crucifying, justice-evading, reason-repudiating religion of Judean origin is to the moral, intellectual, and spiritual development of humanity, I feel particularly sad to find your influence on the side of the oppressor; and if I had any faith in prayer or patience with the justice-defying doctrine of the forgiveness of sins, I would cry, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." If history was fairly quoted, and truth and justice respected, I could bear it better, for any cause that cannot be sustained by truth and philosophy should be by them destroyed.

But when fable, burlesque, and abuse are resorted to, it is a virtual acknowledgment that truth and argument are against the cause.

In conclusion, I would say that, as an advocate of reform, as a believer in progression, as a lover of humanity, I had fondly hoped you would remember those in bonds as bound with them, and not add insult to injury by ridiculing the cause of the oppressed. But I fear you have thrown off the restraints of fear before discovering the beauties of brotherly love as applicable to the slaves to capital.

I have worked for THE INDEX some, have sent several new subscriptions, have read it with considerable interest, and consider it the champion of the right on the school and taxation questions; but on the one vital question that towers mountains high above every other secular question, it is the deadly foe of American independence. My page is full, and my desire for any more INDEXES below zero while it worships the golden calf.

Yours for the greatest good to all,

C. B. DARROW.

NO NATURAL RIGHT TO VOTE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I desire to express my admiration for Rev. E. S. Elder's essay on "Woman and Politics." He, with the sincerest regard for the rights of woman, seems to put the matter in its true light.

As to the ballot for woman, it is more a thing of expediency than of justice. Is it expedient? There has been a great deal said of the right. All things that are right are not expedient.

It is plainly seen that, in our republican government, there is no argument for woman-suffrage in taxation. We tax property, whether it belongs to the individual or corporation, and we do not give votes because of property. If we did, then the minor, the woman, or the corporation, if a property-holder, should have vote, and vote according to property; the millionaire a thousand votes to one for him who has a thousand-dollar property. The genius of our government recognizes no such basis for suffrage.

Is there not a mistake in assuming any natural right for any one to vote? It is not a natural right, but a right wrought and established by government in its growth and development,—extended to those to whom the legislators, from their wisdom or want of wisdom, deem it expedient in order that the ends of government may be better accomplished.

J. S. S.

BOSTON, April 22, 1876.

THE NEW HAVEN LIBERALS.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 4, 1876.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

The "Free Lecture Association of New Haven," before which I have lectured the last two months, has nobly responded to the call for means for the Liberal Congress, by sending $75. Such an association is an honor to New Haven, and indeed to the whole country. It is alive to every good, humanitarian work. I hope to see many like it formed on a wholly unsectarian, grandly liberal basis, spring up all over the country.

Yours truly,

W. F. JAMERSON.

A LITTLE fellow who was at a neighbor's house about noon the other day, watched the preparations for dinner with a great deal of interest; but when asked to stay and eat something he promptly refused. "Why, yes, Johnny, you'd better stay," said the lady; "why can't you?" "Well, 'cause," said the little fellow, "ma said I mustn't unless you ask me three times." They invited him twice more right off.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8	"	"	"	"
" 26 " 51 "	6	"	"	"	"
" 52 "	5	"	"	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address,
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.75
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Belshazzar.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. G. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.75
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	1.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Bartol's Breviary, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions and their Influence.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.90
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBLETON and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede..... Barnaby Rudge..... The Mill on the Floss..... Felix Holt..... Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life..... The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols..... Middlemarch. 2 vols..... Wit and Wisdom of..... The Spanish Gypsy.....	3.50 3.50 1.25 1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Poems.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	6.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought. In reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	3.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	3.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	3.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In France. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	8.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.25
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	1.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.80
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints. Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1829 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERRIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.00
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.00
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	6.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SOBELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S..... 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50 .50 .50 .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	.90
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	11.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmund, and Lord the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Bible and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	8.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Missions.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is Homelike.

Fifth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.

Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 600 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by F. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges $3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge 6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

DR. EDWARD E. DENNIS-

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

ERINSTEIN, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

NUMBER LIMITED TO THIRTY.

T H E

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade $3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham 1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald 1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid 2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotherton. Post-paid 1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

T H E I N D E X

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by

James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.;

one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W.

Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker.

Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 60

cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13

and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one

hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred,

$3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing.

25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts.

each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April

5, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each,

$50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25

Broadfield St., Boston.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE's Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont

Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton

Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

787 Washington St., Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and

Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled

severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"

"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Her-etics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized,

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876.

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance, having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,
Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1873, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC RHEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1876.

WHOLE NO. 335.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated; and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advances of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
- Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

tion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

ONE OF our subscribers nominates Secretary Taft for President. A better one could not be found.

A LETTER from Darien, Wisconsin, just received, informs us of the existence of a Liberal League of which we had not before heard: "We have now in successful operation a Liberal League with nearly fifty members, embracing the finest minds in the town. President, Dr. Crosby Carleton; Secretary, Daniel Rodman."

THE WISDEST SENTENCE in the address of the Reform Conference at New York, May 18, is this: "Passive virtue in the highest place has too often been known to permit the growth of active vice below." This is no world for passive virtue—for men who are content to be clean without making open war on dirt. Dirt is aggressive, and cleanliness will soon become dirt if it is not aggressive too.

LET ALL who see no danger of increasing interference of the Church with the State ponder well the resolution introduced on May 20 in the General Conference of the Methodists at Baltimore, advocating the election of Christians for "all the civil offices of our Government." We shall have more to say on this subject next week: there is now only time for an indignant protest against this wicked proposal.

REV. ROBERT COLLYER sent this pleasant little note to Mrs. Kilgore together with a handsome contribution to the "Paine Bust":—

CHICAGO, May 1, 1876.

Dear Madam,—I send you herewith a draft for $50, —a subscription from a few friends here toward the Centennial Bust of Thomas Paine by our friend Sidney H. Morse. Mr. Morse has sent me photographs of the model. I like it very much,—am unable to judge of it as a likeness; but as the ideal one has of Thomas Paine it is wonderful. Kind regards to the radicals.

Yours, ROBERT COLLYER.

MR. J. H. WILBUR, who on May 5 introduced in the Baltimore Methodist Conference some resolutions protesting against the transfer of the Indian service to the War Department, made a statement touching the appointment of Indian Agents which shows how dangerously the country is drifting toward a practical amalgamation of Church and State: "Under the present plan, the churches nominate persons to fill the agencies, and they are confirmed by the Senate." So it seems that "the churches" have already usurped one of the chief functions of the Executive Department of the United States Government—the appointing power! And the fact can be boldly stated to the American public without the least protest on their part! Is it not about time for the National Liberal League? Verily, the Congress of Liberals has a work to do.

CHICAGO has a Sunday Lecture Society. Mr. H. D. Lloyd, the President, stated in his recent report that the course of the last season (Oct. 3, 1875, to May 7, 1876) had an average attendance of 1,300 persons. The subjects have been of a miscellaneous character, the lecturers being such men and women as R. W. Emerson, Robert Collyer, Susan B. Anthony, M. D. Conway, Joaquin Miller, James Parton, Prof. Proctor, and others. Charles Bradlaugh was engaged in this course, but unfortunately sickness prevented his actual participation in it. The expenses were only about $19 in excess of receipts. This Chicago society and others at St. Louis and Milwaukee are reported by Mr. Lloyd to be offshoots of the London Sunday Lecture Society, started in 1869; but probably the example of Boston, which established the Horticultural Hall "Sunday Afternoon Lectures" in the same year, had quite as much to do with originating them. At first the Boston course was under private management, but the Free Religious Association assumed charge of it two or three years later, and have made it a permanent institution.

SUCH A LETTER as this, written recently by an Episcopal clergyman, shows a catholicity of spirit, and a willingness to welcome truth from any quarter, of which there are too few examples anywhere: "Enclosed please find cheque for $3.50 to your order. Please send me THE INDEX for one year. Also I should very much like to have two back numbers, if you can supply them—Jan. 22, 1874, and July 9, 1874. If you haven't them, or if they are difficult to get, I should be willing to pay more for them, as I was particularly interested by two articles in them by Mr. Gannett and Mr. Potter. If anything is still left to my credit after that, please send me No. 4 of the Free Religious Tracts—on 'Transcendentalism,' by Theodore Parker. Though I am a Christian, and a minister of the Episcopal Church, and am at home in that position, I read THE INDEX always with profit, and sometimes with pleasure and approval. You have done me a good service in making me see more clearly than I had before, that Christianity does not mean anything unless it means personal allegiance to Christ. I cannot be too grateful for such assistance in thinking and living as that gives me. Accept my very best wishes for yourself and those who are with you." To the spirit of that letter we respond with warm sympathy and unfeigned respect. With a Christianity which is thus compatible with justice, veneration for equal rights, and fearless devotion to truth, we have no quarrel whatsoever; though we may not intellectually accept it, we can with absolute sincerity clasp the hand of such a Christian as a friend and brother.

AT THE opening of the Presbyterian General Assembly in New York, May 18, Rev. Dr. Morris, the retiring Moderator, prophesied, in the Annual Sermon, the "unification of the American Presbyterian churches," as a step towards the "unifying of Protestantism." The tendency to union among Protestant Evangelical sects, ignoring minor sectarian differences and yet putting intensified emphasis on the great leading doctrines of Orthodoxy, is one of the chief religious features of the age. Its ultimate bearings on religious liberty are not at all appreciated by the cheerful optimists who so naively exult over the spread of liberal thought. The enormous power of Protestant Orthodoxy, if ever concentrated in a single organization and not balanced by the power of an equally well organized liberalism, will be felt when it is too late to oppose it successfully. Our religious liberties to-day depend chiefly on the mutual emulations of the sects, each too jealous of its rivals to tolerate domination by any one of them. Once convert these mutual rivalries into a combined movement against "Romanism and infidelity," and our real freedom would be trampled under foot. It is the consolidation of corporations which constitutes the greatest peril to the liberty of the individual in the future of this country, as the growth of the railroad monopoly proves to the intelligent; and a consolidated Protestantism, if not met by a consolidated liberalism which shall give organic power to freedom, will be the certain re-union of Church and State under some practical form of tyranny. The issues are of the gravest importance; let us not sit with folded hands and sleepy eyes, when every far-seeing leader on the other side fully understands that Orthodox concentration means Orthodox empire—Liberal concentration means universal liberty. The one would be endless strife; the other will be "peace on earth and good-will to men."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. B. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. E. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. E. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BURLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wias, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vuur, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MADISON, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON, HOLLAND, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cockingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.
 DARIEN, WIS.—Crosby Carleton, President; Daniel Rodman, Secretary.

(FOR THE INDEX.)

Reminiscences of Strauss.

TRANSLATED FROM THE LEIPZIG "GARTENLAUBE."

BY A LADY.

The first effect caused by the appearance of Strauss' great work, the Life of Jesus, was that of staggering surprise on one hand, of horror and indignation on the other. One felt the cutting blast which, resulting from such bold inquiry, swept pitilessly away the old and dearly cherished beliefs, but did not perceive at once the redeeming power, fresh and of vital warmth, streaming forth from the soul's deepest recesses, the consciousness of a new freedom and humanity which, by severing connection entirely with the past, removed a great obstacle from the way. The blow came suddenly; like a flash of lightning it darted into the spiritual ranks; no premonition, no newspaper notices, as is customary now-a-days, had prepared the way for the book and set the public mind in expectation. No one knew the author, excepting the few in his immediate neighborhood. Without the usual preliminaries, a work appeared of which any critic must say that the study necessary for it would fill up the measure of a lifetime. Who was he? Where did he live? Public curiosity was rife, especially in North Germany; but the few who knew the authorship of the book gave no clew.

As soon as Strauss had revealed the secret that the records of Christianity were the results of the fancy and imagination of a people inclined to myths and legends, it fell to his own lot to be a subject of fable, which, as may well be imagined, was not at all to his advantage. There were not many in that timid, pusillanimous time who could lift themselves to the belief that such a relentless schism could be produced by moral impulse, and especially by the purest which exists, the force of conscience and love of truth. But the mystery was soon cleared. There were at that time, it is true, no railroads and telegraphs, no press, with its army of correspondents, to satisfy the public curiosity as at the present day; explanations and disclosures required time; but a question like this, of import to the world, was only a question of time.

To general surprise it was discovered after a while that the author of the Life of Jesus, the subject of eager, general discussion, was a young man but little over twenty-seven years old. Cultivated travellers who met him represented him as an agreeable, scholarly person, whose bearing inspired the highest respect, and with none of the repulsive ugliness which a blind rage had so readily imputed to him. The accounts of the student circle to which Strauss belonged, which we in youth listened to with such eagerness, are still fresh in mind; and the picture which Professor Zeller, of Berlin, has sketched from memory of the youthful Strauss corresponds with them exactly. Even then in outward appearance, as this picture represents him, Strauss did not agree in the least with the idea which most people would have formed of him after reading his book. The delicate lines of the youthful face, the meditative bearing, and the effect of frankness and almost girlish shyness caused by a peculiar expression of the thoughtful, deep-set eye, gave then no premonition of the bold critic dissecting his subject unfeelingly with the cold and pitiless weapons of science.

A closer acquaintance revealed a man of great mind, cultured in many directions, while a more intimate relationship betrayed a witty, genial companion and an excellent story-teller,—a nature possessing the keenest appreciation of everything naive and humorous. United with these qualities was a tender, delicate, and artistic nature, which in the purity and reserve of its being shrank from every contact with rudeness and coarseness, whose every personal advance cost a certain effort and self-control, every uncongenial contact a speedy and timid retreat within itself. At the same time those traces of a manly character betrayed themselves clearly which, in his public career as an author, came boldly to view, a scorn and indignation which dared expression, a firm, decided will, and a courage in scientific inquiry which, if occasion required, would bid defiance to a world.

Thus the youthful but ripened thinker and inquirer presented himself to the world, the instrument which the wrestling, fermenting age had made ready in secrecy for the solution of one of its greatest problems. What Nature had lent him in gifts, attributes, and lofty impulses, had been promoted by the circumstances of birth and surroundings. A son of the lovely and poetical Suabia, which has given Germany so many pioneers in the realms of science, he spent a happy childhood in his native city, Ludwigsburg, until his fourteenth year (he was born on January 27, 1808), when he entered the "cloister school" at Blaubeuren, the specially fruitful hot-bed of the youthful scientists of that time. Around its distinguished teachers crowded a band of gifted and ardent disciples, among whom the youthful Strauss was not the least noticeable. Fresh from home, he entered the "cloister school" at Blaubeuren a bashful, homesick boy, whom one would scarcely have recognized three years later in the youth ripened by the study of the classics, by love for the ideal and search after truth,—the cultured youth who on his entrance at the university inspired both teachers and students with deepest respect. If (as his friend and fellow-student Fischer relates) the proud, tall figure with the St. John's head and old-time German hair had not given premonition of the future critic, yet the unusual betrayed itself in the earnestness of his scientific inquiries, in the independence of his judgments, in his mental originality, and decided character.

Of course, in a nature like his, the storms and contests of doubt which all young theologians are compelled to weather were not lacking. Of a deep and tender social nature, with a love of the beautiful and an uncommon poetical tendency and talent (as many beautiful poems from his pen testify), he betrayed also an exceedingly devout, romantic, and mystical tendency, which was overcome only by the progress of his scientific inquiries. These led him to the study of the works of Schleiermacher, and afterwards of Hegel, the most vigorous thought-system of the age, which had an especial attraction for him, and a decided influence upon his mind. Thus he was not only endowed with rich and positive knowledge, but his great career was most unmistakably pointed out to him, as in 1830 the theological examination was passed with honor, and the call to a vicarage in the village of Klein-Ingersheim was accepted.

It is of specially piquant interest that Strauss, the young preacher, was very much loved by his little congregation. Zeller says that his sermons, with all their solidity, were remarkable for an exemplary adaptability to the understanding of the people; he confined himself to the practical-religious value of the Bible teachings, and his treatment of them was enhanced by an agreeable delivery, clear, vivid, and simple in the highest degree.

But the pressure of science did not permit this limited career long; it impelled a pilgrimage to Berlin, to the men who deserved his gratitude so richly. But scarcely had he reached the capital city, when Hegel died of the cholera, and the intercourse of Strauss with his disciples there was very limited. He saw but little also of Schleiermacher, whose views on the books of the New Testament coincided no longer with his own. Impelled by the love of science, and infected by the atmosphere of Berlin, pregnant with inquiry, the plan of the Life of Jesus was formed in the mind of the young unknown Suabian. In six months he was at home again, a professor at Tübingen, giving philosophical lectures to large and enthusiastic audiences. His great capability as instructor made itself very conspicuous here, and men now living who received the benefit of his instruction never speak of him without deep feeling. His lectures, says Zeller, had the influence of "grateful showers upon thirsty soil." After three terms they were provisionally suspended,—the desire to complete his book, the Life of Jesus, being so strong within him that he felt he must take the time and leisure for its execution. In a year the work, with the exception of the closing treatise, more than fourteen hundred printed pages, was completed. The printing required about the same length of time. The first volume appeared in the summer, followed by the second in the autumn, of 1835.

The trump-card was herewith thrown out, which was not alone to bring the agitation in thought of the age to a more decisive point, to set the sluggish and confused encampments of the Old and New more decidedly against each other, but was destined also to decide the future career of the author. It was very evident that he had not written the book with the design of causing excitement or arousing indignation; a courageous search after truth had necessitated its appearance, and although it was not a book for the reading masses, yet it could not be otherwise than that its influence should be universally felt. This influence was increased by the hoisted signals of distress, by the noisy drum-beat of adversaries, whose importance as protectors of the so-called divine secrets was so seriously threatened. Such must have been entirely blind not to have seen the serious danger of the opposing move,—not to have realized that this was not merely a bold stroke of the hand to be warded off, but a question of dealing with the imposing dignity of science, with the most thorough knowledge, with a mastery of logic united with the magic spell of language, a style of expression unparalleled hitherto in scientific works in all Germany. The storm burst; for years theological literature was concentrated upon this one book, and translations of it into English and French showed the interest excited by it in foreign countries. Multitudes of articles were written, many of them the most vulgar attacks and most pitiable denunciations, which only fanned the flame they tried to extinguish; it burst forth only the brighter, and in three years after the appearance of the book a third edition was necessary, and soon after a fourth.

This fanatical outburst could boast, however, of one point gained; before the appearance of the second volume Strauss was removed from his professorship at Tübingen and transferred to a position in a boys' school in his native city, Ludwigsburg. He retained this inferior position, however, only one year, and then resigned it, in order to devote himself unremittently to his literary labors. He removed to Stuttgart, where, in accordance with his modest, retiring tastes, he lived almost the life of a hermit, devoting himself entirely to his great tasks and studies. Those famous controversies with Stendel and Eschenmayer, Hengstenberg, Wolfgang Menzel, and others, were written here, which Rudolf Gottschall excellently defines as "a cabinet of gems with the plastic character-heads of these adversaries"—consequences of the most brilliant attack that German literature has seen since Lessing.

Here in Stuttgart, also, his celebrated work supplementary to the Life of Jesus, the Doctrine of Faith, was written. In systematic succession it dissected the collected heads of church doctrines, showed their human origin, their development, and final defeat in the combat with modern science.

One event interrupted the quiet life of the great thinker and set him for a brief period before the goal of his most ardent desires; the ministry beckoned to him, the calling to which by inclination and adaptability he was most unmistakably attracted. It is well-known how this call to a theological chair at Zürich was revoked, on account of the mob-cry raised by priests and pietists. It was a hard blow for Strauss, since a hope was thereby cut off forever, and a sacrifice imposed upon him from which he was to suffer his life long. In later years he referred to this painful event of his life in one of his prefaces, in words which one can scarcely read without emotion: "Just about this time, twenty-five years ago, my Life of Jesus went out into the world. The theologians will scarcely celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary, notwithstanding it has helped more than one of them to beautiful thoughts which never occurred to him before, and thereby to place and honors. But many a better man in every land, who dates his spiritual emancipation from the study of this book, will be thankful for it his life long (this I am sure of), and so celebrates, although perhaps unconsciously, this jubilee with me in silence. As for myself, I may well bear ill-will against my book, for it has done me injury enough (well deserved, cry the pietists). It has shut me out from the career for which I had inclination, and I think perhaps talent; it has snatched me out of natural relations, and thrust me into unnatural; it has made my life solitary; and yet I think what would have become of me, if I had not spoken out the word within me; if I had suppressed the doubt which lay upon my soul; and so I bless the book which in truth has injured me outwardly, but which has preserved my soul's life and health, and (I dare to comfort myself with the thought) that of many another. And I would bear witness in these, its festival days, that it was written from moral necessity, out of the purest motives, without passion, or kindred impulses, and as free from fanaticism and underdesigns as I could wish many of its critics had been."

"I testify further that it has not been refuted, but more forcibly confirmed; and that, if it is less read now than formerly, it is because it has been imbibed by the culture of the age,—because it has forced itself into all the veins of science."

"Finally, I testify for it that, in the twenty-five years of its existence, not a line of importance has been written upon the subjects of which it treats, in which its influence is not to be traced."

It is evident from this expression of feeling that it was not a matter of indifference to Strauss thus to play the rôle of "outlaw," which the pitiable nature of circumstances forced upon him. The whole man speaks out in these words,—deep sorrow, but at the same time exultant triumph that, in the grandeur of self-justification, he can rise above the injustice done him. It is hardly to the honor of German universities and faculties that such an imposing, self-attesting, and superior power should have been left unnoticed on the way; that through decades not a single one of these seats of learning should have shown the due appreciation of science, the courage and self-denial, to call for the services of this man. From this circumstance dates that tone of acute bitterness in him towards a kind of incorporated science whose efforts tend to the blunting of conviction, the covenanting ingeniously with untruth, in order not to forfeit position and activity. If the ample income, the fruits of his independent labor, and his moderate habits of life, had not placed him beyond the reach of want, it might be said of this great German writer, that a combat with poverty had helped also to desolate his life.

Still another longing of his nature, his desire for the possession of a home and the enjoyment of domestic life, was also to be denied fulfillment, except for a brief period. In an engagement at the Stuttgart Theatre of the distinguished opera-singer, Agnes Schebest, from Berlin, his admiration was aroused by the beautiful singing and classical interpretations of the artist, and his heart won by the grace of manner and beauty of the woman. The celebrated prima donna became the wife of the quiet scholar; the newly-married pair retired to a small estate near Heilbronn, afterward moving into that city where congenial intercourse with a circle of cultivated and refined families proved a source of enjoyment. But the marriage was an unfortunate one, and after five years the couple separated. The children by this marriage, a boy and girl, remained at first under the mother's care; but after a few years the father took them, and found thereby a source of blessing and happiness.

This shipwreck of his home resulted in a kind of wandering life, which continued to the end of his days. In the stormy, revolutionary period of 1848, he moved from Heilbronn to Munich, whither he was allured by the art treasures which that city offered. Then with his children he spent sometime in Weimar, cherishing memories of the golden age of German poetry, especially seeking all traces of Goethe, of whom he was always a most ardent admirer. From Weimar he moved to Cologne, the residence of his brother; later to Heidelberg, which held him captive six years, exchanging this residence finally for Darmstadt, where he remained five years. Meanwhile temporary visits were made in Heilbronn, Berlin, Bonn, Munich, Biebrich, and Baden-Baden. The change from place to place was occasioned by the death and departure of friends; the choice of a new residence depended upon the intellectual intercourse offered, the prospect of art and literary resources, the beauties of Nature, and regard for the health and education of his children. In the main, however, Strauss suffered from the discomforts of such continual change; personally he regarded this Bohemian life as a misfortune; but it has proved to the advantage of the German nation and its literature, since it is unquestionably to this same independent leisure and complete self-sacrifice that we are indebted for those rich creations which sprouted from the unfettered activity of the author,—creations in whose expression and style Goethe and Lessing have celebrated in Germany a new birth.

It is not our intention to enumerate here the entire list of Strauss' works, neither to characterize any in detail, but merely to make mention of the principal ones. When at length he had sufficiently defended his work, exhausting with penetrating acuteness, in brief as well as extended writings, everything connected with the subject—when disciples and fellow-combatants arose about him to carry on the contest in the path marked out by him,—then, towards the end of his fortieth year, he turned his back upon theology to satisfy other powers and impulses of a nature cultured in so many directions. Although from habit he read and studied untiringly, yet it was years before he found any subject sufficiently enticing to control his pen. "I must be violent, if I am to write," he remarked once to a friend. The happy instincts attendant upon such gifts as his, however, pointed out the right way for him soon. Primary among the subjects which irresistibly attracted him was Nature's secret as represented in man's image, the innermost essence and working of human personality; an impulse deep within him led him often to peer into the dark and intricate life-paths of marked and interesting men, ill-used, misunderstood, or not sufficiently honored champions of the mind, in whom the age was reflected, or who had outgrown the age. A broad and uncultivated field of most satisfying activity opened before him; the subtle and keen analyst, the humane searcher of the hearts of men, of their sorrows and workings, could find satisfaction here; the historical inquirer, the connoteur in literature and art, could test his strength in this subject; while the poetical instinct in him, the taste for artistic form, was able here to find full expression. Fifteen years of the life of our author were devoted almost exclusively to such work as this, and the results are those imposing life-pictures, perfect, classical masterpieces which will stand without doubt to future generations as among the highest ornaments of our literature. With his keen and penetrating mind, with the frank and healthful simplicity, with the "large, clear, and peaceful eye" which Flecher extols in him, Strauss has raised biography to a living, breathing work of art, which stands as one of his most brilliant services. Were we to mention signal examples of his efforts in this direction, with Schubart's Life in his Letters, Nicodemus Frischlin, and Märklin (the latter, the life and character of a young comrade of his, in which work the author has woven a considerable thread of his own development), we should name as shining with especial brilliancy the grand and tempestuous life of Ulrich von Hutten; also the brilliant book Voltaire, which appeared almost contemporaneously with the sudden outbreak of the last French war, and which, notwithstanding this event, made so deep an impression that a second edition of the work was called for at once, and in 1872 a third was found necessary. All these life-pictures stand out not merely as works of art for æsthetic contemplation and idle enjoyment, but as heroes, whom the artist has selected because with their pictures he could express something necessary to his age,—because he perceived in these men the warm life-current which agitates our own time,—because their contests and fate offer earnest lessons and warnings for the struggles and contests of our present century. Referring to his life of von Hutten, Strauss has spoken clearly on this subject:—

"In times of calamity as in prosperity" (he wrote in 1870 in the preface of his second edition), "the people gladly invoke the spirits of their illustrious dead; these are mostly champions who have striven for light against darkness, for freedom against despotic tyranny. To know itself surrounded by a cloud of such witnesses constitutes the nobility of a nation, and, if there is a nation which can boast of such a nobility, it is the German. One form I invoked once out of this cloud in an evil time. It was in the years when Germany, after an exhausting miscarriage, lay in utter weakness, when petty and mighty aggressors became her masters anew, when supercilious neighbors mocked her, when those black birds of prey came wheeling about her as if she were already a carcass, and, screeching, swarmed upon her. It was the time of the Concordats, those servile treaties with Rome. Then I cried, 'Is there no Hutten among us?' And, as there was none among the living, I undertook to restore the image of the dead, and to hold it up before the gaze of the German people."

Thus it follows that Strauss, even in the time of apparent evasion of the subject, maintained full sympathy for religious freedom. After he had been silent for years in the high-raging conflict of religious questions, he appeared in 1864 with that comprehensive continuation and emendation of his principal work which, under the title, The Life of Jesus, treated for the German people, is known to all scholars, and of which especial mention was made at the beginning of the present article. With this important work and two others of less significance, which appeared in 1865, The Christ of Faith and The Heavens and the Wholes, Strauss ended his efforts for religious freedom, it being among the movements of progress sure of execution. The book, The Old Faith and the New, with which he astonished the world six years later, stands upon a quite different, entirely new ground, raising questions with regard to the highest subjects, the answer to which the world had not reckoned as among his tasks. It addresses a small community within the aristocracy of mind, and leaves regardless on one side like an abandoned outpost, the blindly groping upward strivings of the people's life. Simply for this last reason we cannot be counted among the friends of this book; but, with very many others whom its contents estranged, and in a measure repelled, we do fully believe that it was prompted by deeply moral impulse, that it excites great questions and probes the wounds of the age; in this especially are we not mistaken, that in a scientific and literary point of view it is a masterpiece, and testifies preeminently to the unimpaired powers and worth of its author. It was the swan's song. In the midst of the great excitement which the book caused on all sides, he removed in 1872 into the almost idyllic stillness of his native city, Ludwigsburg, the home to which he had always been fondly attached. Here in the neighborhood of his son, a military surgeon in Stuttgart, and under the devoted care of an old servant and friend of his father's family, he hoped to feel a reviving and healthful influence in the memories of early days; but in vain; for scarcely was the hitherto vigorous sexagenarian settled in his quiet, modest quarters in Ludwigsburg, when the forebanners of the dreadful disease attacked him, which was to bear the great champion of religious freedom prematurely into the realms of peace.

For forty years the peculiar and powerful brilliancy of this man has lightened up Germany, a star of the first magnitude, foremost among the preëminent intellectual lights which have shone upon this age of culture. Not always beneficial and refreshing like the mild ray of spring, sometimes even in harsh and decided contradiction with an undeniably good will, an undoubted desire for the promotion of freedom and humanity, yet shining always from the heights into the depths, pointing out great aims, ever demanding, invoking, inspiring souls far and near, and so forcibly that neither friend nor enemy could turn away indifferently. If we call his image up before us as the impartial future will regard it, the gaze falls not upon a great thinker and a mighty genius only; we recognize something more elevating,—the strong, manly courage of conviction and truth, qualities of a great character, which never concealed its knowledge, a man who never questioned if what he was and said would bring good or harm,—if it pleased others or not. As among the theologians he forfeited the adherence of many who, by some discretion on his part, would have made him the leader of a great party; as he sometimes swung his lash over princes and principalities,—so he never left the masses, who looked confidently up to him, in doubt of his fidelity to them, but convinced them that in essential points he was their zealous partisan and champion. From this straightforward, heroic courage in pursuit of truth, a courage which despised all false ingredients as Lessing despised them before him, the inflammable nature of his work from the earliest stages of his career may be explained. The priests and numerous enemies of his under their influence would gladly, in accordance with their nature, have defamed his private character, and dragged it in the dust; but they were foiled here by the exemplary purity of a calm and elevated conduct of life, to which the common, the petty, and the base were as foreign as all eccentricity, vanity, and arrogance.

The "arch-heretic," as he was latterly termed, has been described by his youthful companions as a "Johanneskopf," a retiring, but eminently scholarly nature, with a delicately-strung, easily-aroused poetical feeling,—at the same time as an unaffected, congenial person, and a decidedly witty and jovial companion. He retained these qualities as long as he lived, in spite of all his bitter experiences. He sought rest and recreation after severe mental labor in quiet communion with Nature, in the enjoyment of art and poetry, and especially of music; above all, however, in intellectual society, in the intercourse with cultivated men and women, upon whom the grace of his personality exercised an irresistible charm. Strauss was universally recognized as a loving son, a faithful brother, an exceedingly fond, sacrificing, and conscientious father, the true and warm friend of his friends, and it may truly be said that the love he so richly gave was returned in like measure.

But a single shadow, which untiring gossip has actively extended, seems to rest upon his life,—the unhappy and early terminated marriage with a gifted and much admired wife. With reference to this delicate and purely personal affair, scandal-hungry curiosity demanded explanation from him, and as of course he did not offer it, there was no end to the whisperings of busy tongues. But even this darkness begins to brighten. In an appendix to the second volume of Religiösen Reden recently published, Henry Lang, of Zürich, refers to a confidential letter which a lady of Würtemberg wrote to a friend in 1848, the original being in Lang's possession. This letter is sufficient proof that Strauss bore a five years' martyrdom with extraordinary patience, love, and goodness of heart, which men less noble than he would not have borne as many months. Only when the worst threatened, the danger to his mental personality, was the bond broken which bound him to the gifted woman who understood him so little. There is no blame to be attached to him other than the rashness of his choice, in which he did not bring his nature into consideration, and particularly the severe simplicity of his habits of living.

Another reproach made by the left wing of "Liberalism" has reference to his political stand-point; and surely there is a contradiction here. The man who in the province of religion made a clearance with such radical resoluteness held conservative views in politics. He who had listened with sensitive ear for some revelation of a religion in the world, born and nurtured in the spirit of the people of a dim past, showed no appreciation, no kindly look for the fermenting, regenerating tendencies in the life of the people around him. It was a void in his nature; but this may be explained by reference to those especially eminent qualities of his mind which have lent his writings their strength and charm; namely, to the clearness of thought, which was so averse to everything intangible, confused, and unripe, and to his sensitive and refined artistic feeling, which felt itself wounded and repelled by anything lawless, noisy, and violent. Nevertheless, it was a lack, and it is to be regretted that the fixed laws of development, as they are passionately and forcibly executed in mighty revolutions of the people, should have been of so little import to Strauss. But let no one believe on this account that Strauss was not the advocate of modern freedom; that, in contradiction with his work, he desired the triumph of injustice and oppression, or the preservation of ancient servitude in any form whatsoever.

Germany's power and greatness (he wrote in 1872) could be based only upon an unbiased mental culture, hampered by no clergy, no narrow church-statutes; and as he in the war just ended would have fought in the van against the enemy from abroad, so he would have contended among the foremost against the enemy of freedom and progress at home. His clear-seeing patriotism protected him from the charge of connection with political designs, he was one of our warmest and best patriots. When the war broke out in 1870, and a doubt lingered in the inward conscience of the nation, wild with passion and excitement, if this appeal to the sword were a morally justifiable deed, and one not simply forced upon them, the author of the Life of Jesus was the first among the representatives of science to break the silence. From the stillness of his study, those powerful manifestoes were issued, those open letters to Renan written, which settled every doubt, and gave to this war what it demanded,—the evidence of calm thought, the sanction of a mind subservient to no will or command. Not alone from the grandeur of the occasion which they saluted, but also by reason of their contents and form, these letters are to be reckoned among the most significant and effective declarations which the history of our national combat can produce; like a fresh laurel-wreath they entwine the hoary head of the man whom a blind party-rage on all sides was so ready to denounce as heartless, and lacking in sympathy for grand universal aims.

As "Master," Renan, the celebrated Frenchman, addressed with reverential accent the German scholar at the beginning of our national contest, by this term having in view, of course, his masterhood only in the realms of knowledge, of scientific inquiry, and its expression. That with this superior intellect, which revealed with unrelenting severity a world of errors and petrified abuses, a rich and noble nature of rare fervor and depth was united, was known but to a comparative few, by reason of the unsettled and stormy condition of the age. But to be assured of this it is only necessary to read the tender eulogy upon his brother, written by him in 1863; also Memories of his Mother, penned on the confirmation day of his daughter. His character first presented itself in its true light to his contemporaries, when true and trusted men related of the wonderful greatness of soul with which the disdained apostle of heresy endured the breaking up of his physical powers, the terrible agony of his last, lingering, weary sickness. He did not deceive himself long in regard to the hopelessness of his case. Over his writing-desk in the Ludwigsburg sitting-room hung significantly enough two pictures by Wächter, so in harmony with his condition,—"The dying Socrates," and "Job with his three friends," When Strauss must say with this martyr of ancient Jewish record, "My spirit is faint, my days are numbered, the grave is ready for me," he yielded in the combat of life, paying no further heed to the judgment of critics upon his last work. True to himself, and with unclouded cheerfulness of spirit he went forth to meet death; laying aside, unread, the letters which weak pietists in vain presumption ventured to send to the dying man with the hope of converting him.

His hours of suffering and pain were devoted to reading and mental activity, to warm interest in events pertaining to his country, but especially to loving intercourse with kindred souls, who with proofs of tender love and sympathy brought light and comfort into his darkened days of pain. All who visited him testified to the impression of moral consecration and exaltation which this sick-room made upon them, the room from which many significant utterances, many glorious letters have gone out into the world, in which also those charming occasional poems of the father to the children were written,—verses, exhalings the warm breath of love, which have lent such charm to the little work on Strass by Professor Zeller, so often quoted in this article.

Cultivated circles far and near watched with grave anxiety the fatal threatenings of his disease, and it is one of the significant symptoms of the changes of time that among the many men and women, at home and abroad, who gave testimony to the champion of spiritual freedom in his physical distress, of their deep respect and heartfelt sympathy, two princesses are to be named,—the German crown princess, Victoria, and her sister, the princess Alice of Hesse-Darmstadt. But the hopes of sympathizing friends for his recovery were in vain; at noon, on the 8th of February, 1874, he breathed his last, gently and peacefully, in the arms of his son.

A few days before his death he read Plato's Phædo in the original, and if the last impression of friends visiting him were the same as Plato has pictured at the end of Phædo there was reason for it, for with the same composure and grandeur of soul as he of old, wandered a wise man and philosopher of our own time the last way.

Around the pale face of the deceased, the features of which, as described by eye-witnesses, bore the impression of an overpowering majesty, assembled, on the 10th of February, 1874, a multitude of congenial souls, drawn thither from all directions by the notice of his death. To no accompaniment of the funeral bell, and unattended by the clergy, as he himself expressly desired, he was borne through the still, snow-covered streets of his native city to the friendly church-yard. And, as he also desired, by his open grave only a few hymns were sung, a few brief parting words spoken, and the wintry earth then shut from view the last remnant of a life, whose picture henceforth the ideally-disposed fathers of our age will represent to their children as a pattern and example, a life mighty in its accomplishments, grand in its strivings and aims, and, this we must say in spite of the protest of all professed holiness, truly pure and holy.

[For THE INDEX.]

CLERICAL HONESTY.

That the creed of our Orthodox churches is not cordially and unreservedly accepted by all members of the Orthodox body is a fact which is growing more and more apparent.

Stimulated by thoughts, suggested by scientific discovery, or the results of historical criticism, many a thoughtful professor of religion is anxiously trying to define in distinct outlines the points of church doctrine which he has long held half-dreamily in his own mind, and to assure himself of his belief in them. Pursuing thus his inquiries into the groundwork of his creed in the light of the latest scientific results, he is often distressed to find that he cannot now assent conscientiously to all the tenets of Orthodoxy.

Not unfrequently is this the experience of the Orthodox minister himself, so far as sewing-circles, pastoral visits, clerical duties, and the grinding pressure of two sermons a week give him an opportunity to keep abreast of the times, and to think deeply and independently. If many of the more intelligent and better-informed clergymen, in what are termed our "Evangelical" churches, were compelled to answer honestly a series of searching questions relative to their creed, their replies would probably startle the mass of their unthinking and unsuspecting hearers. Fifty years ago there was hardly a doubt entertained of the scientific reliability of the Mosaic cosmogony. To-day few clergymen of any scholarship would be found bold enough to defend it, precisely as it stands recorded in the first chapter of Genesis. Yet the mass of the Church members know neither the reasons why it has been abandoned as authoritative, nor perhaps are they aware of the fact that it has been thus discarded. They simply know that there has been a great discussion upon the subject, and their minds are full of an uneasy apprehension about it; but not one in a hundred can tell exactly what he believes in reference to it, nor does he know what his minister believes, so reticent is the latter upon any point in the Bible whose change of interpretation, he pleads, might spread a panic of scepticism among the rank and file of the believers.

There is here evident on the one side a lamentable want of proper instruction, and on the other a lack of courage among many Orthodox ministers; an unwillingness to state what is known to be true, and a fear to root up a superstitious adherence to the untenable theory of verbal inspiration.

These clergymen, it would seem, through fear to trust the truth among their people, possess in reality two sets of notions, one of which they display to the public from Sunday to Sunday, and the other to one or two chosen friends in the privacy of their studies. Do you suppose that an intelligent Orthodox minister would calmly tell you in confidence that he believed the account of the origin of the rainbow given in Genesis,—or that he accepted without hesitation the story of Jonah and the whale,—or even the astrological illusion of the Star of Bethlehem? If, indeed, he were sure that his words would go no further, would he say to you that he fully believed in the doctrine of the endless punishment of all who do not believe on Christ,—which forms a part of the creed of every Orthodox church? The number who would thus acknowledge their belief in these things is probably small; but the majority of those who privately declared their disbelief in them would be very careful not to let their liberal sentiments be known to their congregations. Few are the Orthodox ministers who dare to speak boldly even of the mistake which the apostles and the whole early Church made, in supposing that Christ was to come immediately,—probably before their own death, and certainly before the passing away of that generation. Yet that is something which no scholar doubts for a moment. What Orthodox minister in reading the fifth chapter of John's gospel dares to omit the fourth verse, and to explain that it is an interpolation in the text, and was originally the marginal note of some copyist, explanatory of the superstitious belief of the ignorant in the descent of a supernatural being to trouble the waters? Yet every Greek New Testament scholar knows this to be so, and is perfectly aware that the verse ought not to be tolerated in the text. But it is read solemnly week after week, as part of the "Word of God," by those who know better. The "expounders of the Scriptures" too often pass quietly over such points, and leave the minds of their unthinking hearers undisturbed. During the past year how few sermons upholding the doctrine of the everlasting punishment of the wicked have been preached in Orthodox pulpits! Yet if that be the actual creed of the Orthodox churches, the dreadful alarm ought to be constantly sounded.

Now it is, of course, unwise for ministers to present to their congregations merely a number of doubts and negations, with nothing positive to offer in place of the crude views which they have shown untenable. But there is an increasing number of thoughtful young men and women in their audiences, who are keenly interested in ascertaining the right ground of belief in reference to many important dogmas of the Church. These need to be instructed, and not to have their inquiries pushed aside as irrelevant or wicked. Let, then, the minister who has himself been forced, in the light of scientific research, to take a view of Biblical inspiration widely different from the old verbal one taught in the Church-creed, boldly proclaim his views to his congregation! Let him frankly tell them the errors of the old system of interpretation, and the advantages, nay, the positive necessity, of adopting a more liberal one! It is useless for the enlightened clergy to assume any longer a false position on many of the topics which are agitating more or less all the thoughtful readers of their congregations. So long as they do so, we shall have again the old spectacle of the Roman augurs winking to one another over the examination of entrails for divination; we shall have the old system of esoteric and esoteric doctrines,—one set for the crowd, the other for the initiated; and just so long shall we suspect that there is some truth in the epigram of Punch:—

"What makes all doctrines plain and clear?
About five hundred pounds a year!"

An Episcopal clergyman, not a thousand miles distant from this city, was recently asked by a particular friend how he could, consistently with the views which he secretly held, repeat a certain passage in the baptismal service. "Oh," was the reply, "I always cough when I come to that word!" But what man who has either self-respect or a desire to proclaim the truth will hobble through life, concealing his real sentiments behind his hand in a feeble cough? There are known to the writer quite a number of Congregational clergymen, who are in much the same position as this Episcopal brother with the cough. Their views on Inspiration, Future Punishment, the Atonement, and some other topics, are identical with those of certain theological students who find themselves debarred from entering the Orthodox ministry, because they are unable to give unqualified assent to all of the required tenets. The brethren already in the ministry reply thus to the remonstrances of those who are unable to enter: "Our views have expanded since we entered the gateway of church-creed and council. It is true that we could not reënter the Church, if we were in your position, with the views which we hold in common with you. But here we are! We are married and settled. We must earn bread for our families. We will preach what we can,—practical duties, 'every day' Christianity, and skillfully avoid the dangerous work of liberalizing our people." The outside party say in return: "This is not honest. So long as you remain thus, you are occupying a false position. If we hold the same views with you, why should not we be allowed to occupy the same sphere of usefulness that you enjoy? Why do not you, who are already within the Church, strive with all your might to substitute a more liberal order of requirements for one who is desirous of preaching the gospel of Christ? Why do you by your silence give a tacit but false acknowledgment that you believe in all the tenets of the Orthodox body?"

But if this state of things be true of this country, much more is it a fact in England. It is perfectly plain that Dean Stanley, and Brooke, and other Broad Churchmen have grown so liberal in the Church, that they could not possibly with honesty sign to-day the Thirty-nine Articles, if they were applicants for admission to the ministry. They and many others prefer to remain in and to labor with the body of the Church, and thus strive to liberalize

it. They are indeed doing a noble work, but their speech is too often veiled, and it is hard to understand how such broad thinkers can continue to make use of many phrases, real faith in whose natural interpretation they have long since lost. Their eloquence ought to be directed towards the enlarging of the gateway into the Church for those who are in intellectual doubt on many of the required doctrines.

The writer of this article had recently a conversation with the pastor of an Orthodox church. The latter was asked if he believed in that part of his creed which stated that the punishment of those "out of Christ" was everlasting. With much hesitation he confessed that he did not. "Even if you did believe it," asked the writer, "would you dare to preach that doctrine openly to-morrow?" "No," was the answer; "it would wound the sensibilities of my hearers. The time has gone by for the promulgation of such doctrines, even if believed!" "Would you then dare to preach the opposite of that doctrine,—in fine, to present candidly your own views on the subject?" "No," was again the reply; "that would also offend them. That would be called heresy."

This is a fair illustration of the way in which many Orthodox ministers seem to be open to the charge of mental cowardice. But how long is such a state of things, repugnant to all earnest lovers of truth, to last? Unhappily, through a timid avoidance of intellectual topics, preaching is fast degenerating into a mere periodic tickling of the sensibilities,—now on the comic, and now on the pathetic side. People who have been for an hour entertained by a sensational kind of religious wit, or have been agitated for a moment by some thrilling tone, fancy that they have been morally and spiritually improved thereby. The people need, however, a very different kind of food. They need instruction at present about the grounds of their religious belief, and they need to learn what views they may rightly hold of Biblical inspiration. If ministers have been forced to adopt privately more liberal views, the people in their churches ought to be told of it,—not as if it were any confession of weakness or sin, but rather as a frank avowal of a necessitated change of view in consequence of new light. Anything but this right of "private interpretation," this avoidance of dangerous topics, this coughing behind the hand! Let us have light fully and freely poured in upon the accepted Orthodox doctrines, and see how they will stand the test of facts, just as scientific and historical research has revealed them! The most dangerous thing which can be done is to half-smother or to avoid the eager inquiries of those who are impelled to them by their study and reflection. There is something radically wrong in a church-order whose applicants for admission are refused on the ground of heresy, although they share the precise views of the more liberal of the clergy. It will not be long ere such arbitrary walls as these will be thrown down; if not from within, outwardly, by liberal, true-hearted men in the Church, then from without, inwardly, with a severe shock, by a suddenly aroused and indignant people, who find that their spiritual teachers have been in reality playing them false; uttering words with "private reservations" unknown to them. In the latter case, the damage to Christianity will be much greater, and the time required to restore the equilibrium of faith much longer,—if, indeed, it can be restored at all.

J. L. STODDARD.

BOSTON, 124 Beacon Street.

[For THE INDEX.]

A USE FOR THE CHURCH STILL.

BY REV. J. C. LEARNED.

Freethought, impatience of creeds, latitude of inquiry, are the characteristics of our civilization. But the trouble is to make men who have escaped the bonds and espionage of despotic faiths feel that any institution called by the name of a church can or will furnish moral and religious culture, and yet leave them in the possession of conscience, reason, and liberty. They regard a free or liberal church as a misnomer, a contradiction of terms, like a spiritual body, a white blackbird, or a democratic despotism.

The church, any church, means to them something more than an agency of influence and persuasion, a free fellowship of consenting minds, which one may join or withdraw from at will; it means authority over both faith and practice, the power to excommunicate and degrade, even the assumption of divine rights, claiming to hold the very keys of Heaven and Hell, judging and passing sentence upon the saved and lost. The whole idea, therefore, of a church as we understand it, is new and unfamiliar. There will be found many, doubtless, to say that there is no need of such an institution as a liberal church. The Church proper is for the ignorant and superstitious, where infallibility and absolute authority are the only Orthodoxy. But when men approach religion with freethought, with the individual reason, the Church is outgrown; it is no longer a necessity.

That men reason in this way shows their subjection even yet to the old ecclesiastical idea of the uses of religion. Every day men are freeing themselves from the bondage of ancient tradition. Old doctrines once held sacred as truth itself are dissolving; vast systems of belief are in ruins; the old phraseology, even if retained, is used with new meanings, or subscribed to with great mental reservations. The authority of all churches is less respected, less feared than formerly. All men capable of forming a judgment in such matters know that there is no infallible word of wisdom, no absolutely saving ordinances, no indispensable sacrament in the churches.

Does all that imply that men are less religious? Because I reason about or reject a communion wafer, does it follow that I have cast aside my sense of responsibility? Or even if I hesitate to apply the term personal to the Deity, does it follow that I have no emotions of worship and adoration in the presence of the Infinite and Eternal? It is the sense of the ideal and sublime that makes a man religious. There is an ideal of conduct as well as of beauty. There is an ideal of affection, of purity, of fidelity, of wisdom, of truth, far surpassing in power the actual of natural beauty or physical grandeur, which impresses us more deeply than any unpeopled infinity of time and space. And shall not men and women who love the sublime and beautiful in Nature, or in art, and who would make the moral ideal take on the actual in daily life—who are not afraid to exercise the best faculties wherewith God has endowed them,—shall not such associate themselves together for mutual good, for meditation and worship, to promote the ends of virtue and of spiritual culture? May we not have an institution founded upon these aims, a fellowship of sympathy, a refuge in our loneliness, a shelter for our children, a weekly rest upon our journey, a place of conference and comfort, where we may build our hopes, consecrate our endeavors, lift up our aspirations, so that God himself shall bless alike our purpose and our work?

O. B. FROTHINGHAM AT THE MASONIC TEMPLE.

NEW YORK, March 3, 1876.

The Sunday services conducted by the Rev. Octavius B. Frothingham at the new Masonic Temple attract large congregations of the most intelligent men and women in our community.

The hall that has been leased by the Independent Society, whereof Mr. Frothingham is pastor, is situated on the corner of Sixth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, and reached from the latter thoroughfare by a broad, massive stairway of polished marble, adorned with classic emblems in bronze of the fraternity by whom it was lately reared.

It is a simple hall, and the bare, white walls are yet innocent of any touch of color, and while waiting for the beginning of the service the eye rests neither on them nor on the two rows of heavy columns that blossom into the foliated terminal capitals of Corinth, but seek repose and find it on the organ front, which faces the congregation, and is exquisitely decorated in every brilliant and beautiful color that an autumn sunset could lend.

I speak of this organ particularly because it has so long been the custom to cover organ fronts with inappropriate and gaudy gilding, and it is a genuine source of delight to observe a perfect harmony of color before the harmony of sound begins.

There are about a thousand opera chairs in the hall, and opposite there is a dais, on which are placed a reading-desk supported by a single column, together with a small walnut stand and several armed chairs, the blue covers of the latter affording another grateful gleam of color. At the foot of the desk mosses and the large leaves of some familiar garden plants are usually placed, above which a few clusters of brilliant flowers mingle with the smilax and ivy that creep toward the top. A nosegay, arranged with artful carelessness, is generally to be seen upon the stand, close to which is the pastor's chair.

On a recent Sunday, when I was one of an expectant throng, these observations were made, and I know from inquiry that they may be applied generally. The hall was nearly full, and the organist (a lady) was already seated when Mr. Frothingham walked quickly up the aisle, through a side door and out upon the dais at the moment when the opening voluntary upon the organ was commenced. At its close, after a slight pause, an appropriate selection—from the "Creation," I think—was sung by the quartet choir, and then, when the last note had ceased to reverberate, the pastor stepped to the desk, raised a small volume in front of his breast, and turning over the leaves said in a low, distinct voice, "Will you listen to the reading from the Indian Scriptures?"

After reading with exquisite expression and distinct emphasis numerous proverbs, many of them singularly terse and beautiful in their composition, he paused for a moment, and then, "this from the Arabic," continued the reading of truths which the translator has made universal knowledge. This custom is varied I believe only in the selection of the matter; sometimes our Bible is used, and sometimes "the Bible of others."

Then another hymn, and Mr. Frothingham arose and stood at the desk to pronounce the opening prayer. His always earnest face bore an expression of intense feeling, and for more than a minute he remained motionless, with clasped hands, slightly upturned face, and closed eyes. Presently his lips began to move, though for an instant no audible sound escaped them, and he may have been but searching and concentrating his own mind. When the first word reached my ear the stillness in the hall was perfect save the sound of the speaker's voice, and throughout the delivery of the prayer it remained unbroken.

The earnest expression of Mr. Frothingham's face when he rose seemed to command every one's attention; his silently moving lips caused them to strain the ear to catch the first faint sound, and when the full, serious voice bore forth the appeal for goodness, and truth, and virtue, and brotherly love, and strong humanity, not a word was lost. It was no supplication for the alteration of eternal laws, nor any unmeant confession of abject worthlessness and misery, but a noble, manly aspiration to men and women to act worthily and well on earth.

When ended, Mr. Frothingham resumed his seat, seemingly somewhat exhausted, his left elbow upon the table, and his head resting upon the open hand that partly shaded his face, while the faint tones of the organ that had taken up the ending of his prayer were lost in silence.

Then began the discourse. Probably most readers of the Boston Journal know something of Mr. Frothingham's glittering oratory, which at first attracts hearers who are afterward charmed by the pure gold of candor, integrity, and truth, which is its foundation. His logic is always inductive if not always consecutive; and though he may not hold his hearers from point to point of his argument, still if they question for a moment it is only while waiting for the answer which surely comes. He uses no sophistical syllogisms to really mystify while seeming to convince, and he throws on his own opinions the white light of investigation whereby to discern the truth. He does not rend asunder the prejudices of others with the blow of a trip-hammer, but rather penetrates them with the keenly-cutting anger, letting light through. The wounds he inflicts are always kindly meant, as the surgeon's who cuts out the cancer to save the life.

Once he said of one of his own arguments, "Call it iconoclasm, image-breaking if you will; but every idol is a mask, and to shatter the idol is to reveal the God."

Some of Mr. Frothingham's finest efforts have been made in discussing topics connected with the conduct of life and the various social relations; and into these subjects he enters with an integrity of purpose that alone could inspire such enthusiasm as he invariably displays. In the discussion of matters of faith or theology he is inclined to mordacity, and denounces with biting satire what he regards as baleful superstitions; and as he stands alone among our pulpit orators in avowed belief, the temptation to level his bitter shafts must be often resisted, for he speeds them but seldom.

His discourse is always characterized by intensity; and by reason of his marvellous powers of imagery is rarely without the adornment of some vivid word-picture that lives in the hearer's mind in brightness and beauty.

People who oppose Mr. Frothingham on other than theological grounds declare that among a community as pure and unselfish as he would have them it might be possible to live up to all his precepts; but that to the work-a-day world they are far-off and transcendental, while his friends claim that however he may be removed from the sphere of common humanity he never fails to render the world he lives in attractive and fascinating, nor to lift his hearers, for a time at least, from their pains and cares, and lead them to higher aspirations and nobler resolves.—"Clavering," in Boston Journal.

THE INFERTILITY OF HYBRIDS.

BY JOHN FISKE.

The second objection which we have to consider, though less immediately obvious, is more weighty; and though there is no reason for regarding it as insuperable, we must admit that it has not been entirely disposed of. This objection is implicated with the difference between the morphological and the physiological definitions of species, and is usually known as the argument from the infertility of hybrids.

As ordinarily stated, indeed, this argument is merely the expression of a sorry confusion of ideas. By a curious misunderstanding the infertility of the mule is often urged as a direct objection to the Darwinian theory. But this is putting the cart before the horse. It is not the infertility of the offspring of the horse and the ass which should be cited as an objection to the theory of natural selection, but it is the fertility of the offspring of the carrier-pigeon and the pouter, or of the pouter and the tumbler. Morphologically the carrier, the pouter, and the tumbler may be regarded as distinct species artificially developed from a common wild stock; but so long as mutual infertility is held to be the physiological test by which we are to distinguish between varieties and species, it may be argued that, in spite of their great morphological differences, the carrier and the tumbler are only varieties, and not true species.

And, going a step farther, it may be argued that until the theory of natural selection has accounted for the rise of infertility between races derived from a common stock, it has not completely performed the task of reconciling deduction with observation.

Against the derivation theory in general, this objection has no weight whatever. That races originally fertile together should, after long subjection to different sets of circumstances, become infertile with one another is, a priori, in the highest degree probable, when we reflect upon the extreme sensitiveness of the reproductive system to changes of habit in the organism as a whole.

When we remember that "the constitution of many wild animals is so altered by confinement that they will not breed even with their own females," we need not be surprised that the leopard and the lion, which during many ages have had very different habits of life, will not breed with each other. Nor need we wonder that the horse and the ass, with less important differences in general habit, have become partially infertile together, to such an extent that their offspring are hopelessly barren. Though the modus operandi of this change is, as yet, ill understood, it is a change quite in harmony with what we know concerning the intimate dependence of the reproductive system upon the rest of the organism. And let us not fail to note that it is the achievement of this change in the capacities of the reproductive system which completes the demarcation between two bifurcating species, and finally prevents the indefinite multiplication of intermediate varieties.

But while this objection has no weight as against the theory of derivation in general, it may fairly be urged that the failure to explain the origination of mutual infertility is, for the present at least, a shortcoming on the part of the theory of natural selection. After the conclusive arguments brought up in our ninth chapter, the derivation theory will no longer, in the present work, be regarded as on trial: that the higher forms of life are derived from lower forms will be taken as proved.

But whether the theory of natural selection has completely fulfilled its proposed task of explaining the mode in which such derivation has been brought about is quite another question. And while admitting the full force of the considerations alleged by Mr. Darwin, in his admirable chapter on Hybridism, it seems to me that there is a gap at this point which further research will be required to fill. As Professor Huxley reminds us, "It must not be forgotten that the really important fact, so far as the inquiry into the origin of species goes, is that there are such things in Nature as groups of animals and of plants, whose members are incapable of fertile union with those of other groups; and that there are such things as hybrids, which are absolutely sterile when crossed with other hybrids. For if such phenomena as these were exhibited by only two of those assemblages of living objects, to which the name of species... is given, it would have to be accounted for by any theory of the origin of species, and every theory which could not account for it would be, so far, imperfect."—Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy, Vol. II., page 43.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 20.

Kersch & Schless, $3.20; D. Wolfenstein, $3.20; C. Vonnegut, $3.20; D. R. Sparks, $3.20; E. M. Wyckoff, 75 cents; D. Y. Kilgore, $5.20; A. J. Heberling, $2.00; Wilmot Wilson, $3.20; Jas. C. Trowbridge, $3.20; Jos. Wright, $3.20; M. M. Secor, $3.60; Emily J. Leonard, 25 cents; E. Plummer, $3.20; J. Green, $3.20; Geo. Allen, $2.10; F. A. Barrick, 5 cents; Mrs. M. S. Wetmore, $3; O. H. Green, 75 cents; Wm. Hilles, $1.60; W. W. Stout, $4; E. B. Wolcott, $3.25; W. S. Cunningham, $3.20; H. Molleaux, $2; T. D. Elliott, $4; H. E. Möering, $3.20; W. H. Boughton, $3.25; F. A. Flagg, $3.20; Henry Villard, $3.20; Mrs. A. E. Thompson, $3.20; J. Y. Brown, $10; Fanny Sharpe, $2; T. Bush, $2.40; M. Thrane, 20 cents; C. A. Greenleaf, $10; C. W. Story, 50 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.00
A. Scheffing, Philadelphia	1.00
Richard Hackett, Philadelphia	1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
R. M. J. Vall, Port Jervis, N.Y.	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold, "	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Sisson, Port Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R.I.	2.00
S. R. Honey, "	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. S. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio	.30
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia	5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia	1.00
George Langford, "	1.00
Thos. Phillips, "	1.00
Carl Doeringer, Milwaukee	1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass.	1.00
A. Friend, New Bedford, Mass.	10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y.	10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y.	20.00
S. R. Koehler, Boston	2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa	1.00
H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	1.00
H. C. Gray, Painesville, O., (collection)	5.50
J. Sedgebeer, "	.50
Through Banner of Light	15.50
" Boston Investigator	16.75
" New Age	5.50
M. Altman, New York City	20.00
F. A. Green, Boston	5.00
Friends in Boston	2.00
J. V. Blake, Boston	5.00
A. Friend in "	5.00
Geo. W. Park, "	3.00
Chas. W. Wendte, Cincinnati	5.00
Robert Moore, St. Louis	10.00
James Eddy, Providence	5.00
W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.	.50
W. L. Foster, East Soughton, Mass.	2.00
Mary G. Thompson, Worcester, Mass.	3.00
John Wise, Philadelphia	1.00
A. Friend in New Jersey	10.00
John Gillies, St. Louis	1.00
Robert Collier, Chicago	50.00
"An English Brother" (25)	27.25
J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa	1.00
Louis Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.	2.00
B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. Wm. Heine, Pleasant Hill, Mo.	1.00
Adam Wolfe, Fort Byron, N. Y.	2.00
Thos. H. Matthews, New Bedford	5.00
S. F. Spangler, Winthrop, Iowa	5.00
D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.	1.00
E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.	5.00
C. M. Dennison, New York	5.00
Mrs. Orrin Gillet, Parma, Mich.	5.00
M. Jacoby, St. Louis	2.00
O. W. Heyer, St. Louis	2.00
Philip Godheart, St. Louis	1.00
Mrs. Kotany, St. Louis	2.00
Kohn & Co., St. Louis	5.00
C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn	5.00
William Green, Brooklyn	5.00
Sidney H. Morse, Boston	100.00

May 23.....$528.48

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 25, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of	F. A. Angell, New York	$5.00
" 13.	"	M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.	2.00
" 13.	"	W. Barnadall,	2.00
" 13.	"	E. Whicher, Boston	5.00
" 13.	"	J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.	1.00
" 21.	"	Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	2.00
" 21.	"	M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.	3.00
" 21.	"	R. H. Ranney, Boston	6.00
" 21.	"	F. E. Abbot, Boston	25.00
" 21.	"	C. A. Gurley, Palisai, N. Y.	50.00
" 25.	"	Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.	10.00
" 25.	"	S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.	5.00
" 25.	"	John Hiat, Winchester, Ind.	5.00
" 25.	"	A Friend	1.00
" 25.	"	C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
April 1.	"	Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston	15.00
" 1.	"	T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	3.00
" 1.	"	Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	5.00
" 1.	"	Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleve- land, O.	5.00
" 1.	"	S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.	2.00
" 3.	"	A Friend in New York City	50.00
" 8.	"	Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
" 8.	"	R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.	6.00
" 8.	"	J. D. Lange, New York City	5.00
" 8.	"	Jane P. Titcomb, Boston	2.00
" 8.	"	Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
" 8.	"	B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	10.00
" 8.	"	Warren Griswold, " "	5.00
" 8.	"	C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
" 8.	"	F. E. Nipher, St. Louis	2.00
" 8.	"	K. Hoeph, La Crosse, Wis.	3.00
" 10.	"	H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston	5.00
" 13.	"	S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	"	A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.	5.00
" 13.	"	C. B. Peckham, Newport, E. I.	5.00
" 13.	"	Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
" 13.	"	Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
" 13.	"	Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.	10.00
" 13.	"	G. P. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.")	8.00
" 17.	"	J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
" 17.	"	J. W. Sullot, Salem, Ohio	5.75
" 17.	"	J. S. Bonsall, " "	.90
" 17.	"	M. Schlesinger, Albany	5.00
" 17.	"	O. B. Frothingham, New York	25.00
" 25.	"	Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.	90.00
" 25.	"	Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.	5.00
" 25.	"	W. H. Crowell, " "	5.00
" 25.	"	J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.	1.00
" 25.	"	Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.	2.00
" 25.	"	C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee	2.00
" 25.	"	J. A. Heintzelman, Phila.	5.00
May 1.	"	D. G. Craudon, Chelsea, Mass.	1.00
" 1.	"	S. R. Koebler, Boston	3.00
" 1.	"	Geo. M. Murray, Jersey City	1.80
" 1.	"	H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	5.00
" 1.	"	C. A. Simpson, Saxonville, "	5.00
" 1.	"	J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon	5.00
" 15.	"	B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.	5.00
" 15.	"	"An English Brother" (£5)	27.25
" 15.	"	John Gillies, St. Louis	1.00
" 15.	"	J. W. Frank, Dyart, Iowa	4.00
" 15.	"	L. Lowenthal, Rochester, N. Y.	5.00
" 15.	"	Dr. Max. Landsberg, N. Y.	5.00
" 15.	"	A. Walther, Brooklyn	2.00
" 15.	"	E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.	2.00
" 15.	"	M. Altman, New York City	20.00
" 15.	"	R. E. Grimshaw, Minneapolis, Minn.	5.00
" 15.	"	Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.	3.00
" 15.	"	F. P. Hicks, " "	1.00
" 15.	"	Benj. Gerrish, Jr., Bordeaux, France	5.00
" 15.	"	W. L. Foster, East Stoughton, Mass.	5.00
" 15.	"	W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.	.50
" 15.	"	C. H. Phillips, Boston	3.00
" 15.	"	W. P. Phillips, " "	1.00
" 15.	"	H. S. Williams, " "	5.00
" 15.	"	Mrs. Owen Gillett, Parma, Mich.	5.00
" 15.	"	D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.	2.00
" 22.	"	C. M. Dennison, New York City	5.00
" 22.	"	James McArthur, Chicago	20.00
" 22.	"	C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn	5.00
" 22.	"	Liberal League, Toledo, Iowa	10.00
" 22.	"	" " " " " " " "	26.10
" 22.	"	Mrs. A. L. Richmond, " "	5.00

8653.30

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

THE Pacific Liberal, edited in San Francisco by A. J. Boyer, formerly editor of the Dayton (Ohio) Woman's Advocate, is doing substantial service in the organization of liberalism on the Pacific Coast. We are glad to recognize it as a valuable ally, and commend it to the support of all friends of the Liberal League in California and elsewhere.

THE EXPENSES of the Congress of Liberals are going to be more than was at first estimated; and though the limit originally set has been overpassed (a result most flattering and cheering in these hard times), there is not the slightest danger of more being contributed than will be wanted. If there should be a surplus, it will be turned over to the treasurer of the National Liberal League, when organized; but enough has not yet been contributed to defray the cost of reporting the convention and publishing the proceedings in proper shape, in addition to the other expenses. If every one will help, two thousand dollars can be raised at once. Many could probably double their previous donations; and that list of contributions will form an indispensable portion of the pamphlet Report, if published.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE
CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15.	A Friend in Boston (paid)	$100.00
April 28.	Miss Marian Hovey, Boston (paid)	100.00
April 17.	Wm. H. Sayward, Dorchester (paid) $25 }	100.00
May 3.	Free Lecture Ass'n, New Haven, " $75 }
May 8.	Nath. C. Nash, Boston (paid)	100.00
May 13.	Samuel L. Hill, Florence, Mass. (paid)	100.00

$500,000

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

NOTICE.

The Fifth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at No. 35 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 3, 1878, at 2 P.M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

E. R. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The ninth Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, June 1st, 7½ o'clock, annual business meeting in Horticultural Hall, for the election of officers, reading of reports, and addresses on the practical aims and work of the Association.

Friday, June 2d, at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject—"Free Religion and the State:" essay by James Parton, followed by addresses from Rev. M. J. Savage, Miss Susan H. Wixon, and others. Afternoon subject—"Free Religion and the Church:" essay by Samuel Longfellow, followed by addresses from Rev. James. Freeman Clarke, Felix Adler, and others.

A social festival will be held in Horticultural Hall on Friday evening. W. J. POTTER.

W. J. POTTER,
Secretary.

A LETTER FROM KARL HEINZEN

In reply to our editorial article of last week on "Two Kinds of Breadth," Mr. Karl Heinzen sends us the following letter, which we publish with great pleasure, thanking him for the frankness and courtesy with which he writes:—

MR. F. E. ABBOT, EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

IN your paper of May 18 you publish a translation of an article of the Pioneer, concerning a union of the Liberal Leagues and the German radicals, accompanied with editorial remarks which show that you misunderstood and therefore misrepresented entirely my real meaning.

1. In what way do you think the Liberal Leagues will have to work for their ends? Of course, by a party organization; and such organization has not only to propagate its ideas, but has to employ practical political means by voting, by nominating candidates, etc.

2. Now it is evident that the efficiency of such working depends on the number of the co-workers under one leadership. There is another organization that agrees with yours in its special object, but at the same time has at heart other important aims too. It wishes to cooperate with your organization. But to do this in reality and with efficiency, both organizations must unite, must form only one organization under one leadership. Is this possible in any other way than by either enlarging your platform or by sacrificing the platform of the other (the German) organization?

3. The German radicals cannot and will not give up the political and social reforms for which they have worked so many years, and which they deem even more important than the Church question at this time. Is it unreasonable, then, or "contrary to every principle of high political morality," to make the attempt to arrive at an understanding with the Liberal Leagues about those political and social reforms, as well as about the Church question? If this attempt fails, the German radicals have to go their way alone, and, instead of one united organization, two have to be kept up, which necessarily divides their means and weakens both,—although the Germans will continue to work for the objects of the Liberal Leagues, as they did long ago when no Liberal Leagues were thought of.

4. The difference will be that two organizations with two leaderships will have to be kept up, which must be an impediment in the way of cooperation even for the one object they both advocate. To give up this one, or "to advise the Germans not to aid those who seek a mutually approved object," I never thought of. I just as little give up my convictions or principles as I am a friend of "bargaining," as you call an attempt to change views and convince each other by discussion and arguments. You have not to "buy the support of German-born radicals," as you say; they just as little want or need to be bought by your giving up your own convictions as they will sell theirs for the support of others.

5. Now you see that, instead of trying to separate, as you interpret my article, I try to unite; instead of weakening, I wish to strengthen; but not by means that in the end would have the opposite effect. There could be no radical party at all among the Germans, if they had in view no other objects than the Church question. They have no idea of a liberal who can be a friend of religious liberty, and at the same time an enemy to political and social reforms; although they can understand very well that "a man who joins an association for the purpose of preventing frauds at the ballot-box does not cut himself off from joining another association for the purpose of raising funds for the Herzegovinians" or for the purpose of learning the German language. They are wont to contemplate things from an universal, philosophical stand-point, which unites correlative ideas, and treats human progress as a coherent movement embracing every human interest.

6. Whether you and your associates can agree with us also about other objects than the Church question, cannot be decided before all our views are known to you. I have tried to put these views together in a sketch of a platform which perhaps a friend of mine will translate for your paper, if you will publish it. The necessity of such translation will at the same time show the unnecessary of your remark that a distinction between German and American Liberals is ridiculous.

Respectfully yours,

KARL HEINZEN,
Editor of Der Pionier

If our last week's article rested on a substantial misunderstanding, and therefore misrepresented Mr. Heinzen's position, we are very sorry. We were careful not to insinuate the least intention on his part of proposing a "bargain," even while we thought that this was the logical consequence of his position; and we disclaim very earnestly any and every disrespectful thought concerning one whose whole life has been a long, brave battle against heavy odds in a very unpopular cause. So we shall discuss the question at issue only in the spirit of one who admires even while he differs; for the tone of the above letter, as any intelligent reader will perceive at once, is that of a single-hearted, devoted, sincere, and thoroughly upright man.

For convenience' sake we have numbered the paragraphs of the letter, and will follow their order.

1. It is not for us, or for any one, to say beforehand what the National Liberal League, to organize which the Centennial Congress of Liberals is called, will do after it is organized. It will act for itself. But it has never been our wish to see it take shape as a political party in the same sense in which the Republicans and the Democrats are political parties—that is, to nominate candidates of its own, as the Prohibitionists and the “Greenbackers” have just done. It may come to that; but the time for such action has not yet arrived. The true work of the Liberal League at present seems to be to compel public attention to a great public question now too much neglected; namely, shall the republic itself decide all issues according to the laws of natural human reason and conscience, or shall it submissively accept and execute the decision of the churches, which is supposed to represent the decree of a supernatural power? No reform can be carried till this question is answered; and the wrong answer is given in many important cases, as is seen in the closing of the International Exhibition on Sundays. As we conceive it, the function of the National Liberal League will be to create such a public opinion by persistent agitation as shall secure a just settlement of all such issues, no matter what political party is in the ascendant. Its organization should be adapted to this end, not to the end of electing officials on the platform of a comprehensive programme; it should resemble that of the old Anti-Slavery Society rather than that of the Republicans or Democrats. There is no reason in the world why every American citizen who knows that the State ought to be totally emancipated from the Church should not join the Liberal League and work heartily for it, while he may at the same time belong to a dozen other organizations for other objects, if he pleases.

2. Now if the Germans contemplate the formation of a political party as such,—if they intend to adopt a platform inclusive of everything they desire to see accomplished, and to nominate party candidates of their own,—they have a perfect right to do so. Nobody questions that. But they have not, in our opinion, a half-chance of success. They are attempting altogether too much. Before a new recruit can be won, he must be convinced that the German platform is right on all its points; and the more points there are, the harder it will be to convince him. So far as the “number of co-workers” is concerned, the fewer essential principles there are, the more co-workers can be reasonably expected. The Liberal League proposes only what all liberals already believe in—the practical necessity of the total separation of Church and State; hence, if it can show that Church and State are still very injuriously conjoined, it may fairly reckon on the coöperation of all liberals who possess a true public spirit. But, if we understand the matter, the Germans include in their platform objects and principles on which liberals themselves are absolutely certain to divide; they cannot, therefore, reasonably expect to “unite” all liberals on such a platform. We applaud them, if they mean only to agitate the principles on which they themselves are agreed already; but we can simply wonder, if they think they could carry an election anywhere on that platform to-day, or "unite" a large number of voters in its support.

In short, if the Germans do not care enough for the separation of Church and State to work for it, unless they can at the same time work for the abolition of the Presidency and the Senate, and so forth (and that certainly seems to be the implication of Mr. Heinzen's letter), we see no possible way of uniting the two organizations. They can exchange friendly salutations, and coöperate as far as possible; but it seems best to make no attempt at formal fusion. All the German radicals can, if they choose, belong individually also to the Liberal League, without disbanding and without giving up any of the other objects they cherish; those of the Liberal League who cherish the same objects can also belong individually to the German society; but why wish to have a Procrustes bed in the matter? It seems that the Liberal League is too short and the German society too long; then, without lopping or stretching each other, let the two shake hands, and make the most of their common sympathy as far as it goes.

3. We are utterly unable to see why the Germans, without "giving up" their own objects or abandoning their own organization, should not join the Liberal League to carry out more efficiently one of their own objects. That would involve no bargaining, no compromise, no sacrifice of conviction whatever. If we should personally come to sympathize with Mr. Heinzen's political and social platform (as we may yet—who can tell?), then we could with a clear conscience belong at the same time to both organizations. Why should not the rule work both ways?

4. The "two organizations" cannot be dispensed with, it appears. Nor is that fact to be regretted, so long as the two platforms are essentially different. The country swarms with organizations for different objects, and their respective memberships overlap each other everywhere. This is inevitable. So soon as a particular cause assumes a certain importance in the eyes of its friends, they will organize to promote it; and there is no "narrowness" about this. The inexhaustible fecundity of American life involves this necessary multiplicity; we are not sorry for it; it is the nature of free institutions to foster it. He would be a very small-minded person, or else a very "unorganizable" one, who did not sympathize with and join many of these numerous societies. The practical common-sense of the American character makes it a mere matter of course to consider membership in more than one as a very proper thing.

5. We cordially appreciate Mr. Heinzen's desire for unity, and do not imagine that he has the slightest wish to perpetuate separation between German-born and American-born citizens. We are wholly of the same mind. It is a misfortune when such separation exists. We Yankees need the Germans and the Germans need us; we are all Americans together, with one country and one destiny; and it is a pity when clannishness takes the place of a frank-hearted spirit of fraternity. Moreover we heartily approve Mr. Heinzen's refusal to limit his endeavors to "the Church question"; we too have other reformatory objects, as well as he, and so has every man. But it happens that men's minds as to what constitutes "political and social reforms" differ exceedingly; and a stiff creed on this subject neither unites them nor conduces to "philosophical" habits of thought. The scope of our own interest is by no means limited to the Liberal League; but that happens to be the one thing which just now seems to be our especial duty, and for that we now work. It is true that human progress is infinitely complex; but it is equally true that he who will never work for anything less than universal human progress will never promote it in the least. All progress consists of steps; and it is wise to be content with taking one step at a time.

6. It will give us great pleasure to publish Mr. Heinzen's platform, which will be doubtless read with attention by all; and we shall be very glad to receive the translation he so kindly offers.

AS IT SHOULD BE.

"Col. R. H. Howard, of South Carolina, is a member of the Legislature, as also Tony, his former slave, who goes by the name of A. H. Howard. They sit side by side in perfect equality, making laws. The former, of course, is a Democrat, and the latter a radical. After adjournment the colonel superintends his farm, and Tony works for him as a carpenter, taking his meals in the kitchen with the cook."

Undoubtedly, A. H. Howard learns something of life in the kitchen which Col. Howard has not learned in the parlor; and so they represent opposite sides in politics. Which shall we disfranchise? May not the carpenter be worthy of confidence as well as the carpenter's Son? The only trouble is that the cook, who is probably a woman, cannot vote also, and so A. H. Howard loses the advantage he might gain by intelligent political discussion at meal-times.

E. D. C.

THE BICKERING PHASE.

We have reached it, and must pass through it; we shall pass through it, and come handsomely out of it; but we are in it, at present, and must look the fact in the face. The enemy perceives it, and exults. Friends perceive it, and grieve. The enemy regards it as the omen of destruction. Friends mourn over it as a sign of misunderstanding, and a menace of disunion. The gentle Register, whose charity is too celestial in quality to serve as a cloak to cover things so ugly as a neighbor's sins, and whose faith and hope are at present fully occupied with casting the horoscope of its neighbor's ruin, copies so much as serves its purpose of a letter that honestly rebukes certain radical shortcomings, in view of correcting them,—turning the writer's intent in a direction he never contemplated. The New Age is ingenious in putting disloyal constructions on language which was used without the feeblest suspicion of disloyal significance, and is swift to prophesy the downfall of liberty in the midst of its friends from the narrowness that exists only in its own imagination. The Stereoscope charges THE INDEX with dishonorable conduct because the editor printed a private letter at the special request of the person to whom it was sent, who himself suppressed the name because it was a private letter, and used the letter for the purpose of conveying in part his answer to certain accusations against himself; the letter being but part of his own article, printed over his own initials, and with an intent plainly declared; the editor having no responsibility in the matter, and being pledged to publish whatever the special contributor might send. Whoever may have been at fault for the meanness, it certainly was not THE INDEX. Now this we call bickering, and, calling it so, characterize it as trifling and ungenerous. It surely is not difficult to render justice in cases simple as these, and among brethren too.

Why is the justice not rendered? No doubt the seemingly captious criticism we have complained of may be ascribed, as some ascribe it, to a jealousy for liberty which has become exceedingly sensitive under the disappointments that have been encountered, and the infidelities that have been displayed. There may be sincere apprehensions lest the cause of freedom be in danger of betrayal by its professed champions, and such apprehensions should be respected. Not something, but a great deal is to be pardoned to the spirit of liberty. We can endure roughness from it, discourtesy, hasty reproof, and even causeless suspicion. The eternal vigilance that is the price of liberty cannot be always calm, equable, circumspect, and considerate. Sensitiveness is a prime virtue in liberty; a grace to be cultivated and cherished.

But there is room for another conjecture; namely, this,—that the captiousness is due to the absence of serious purpose; to aimlessness and want of occupation. As the mill that is not supplied with grist makes the greater clatter, and wears itself soonest out; as the stomach deprived of necessary food is particularly demonstrative, and turns its fangs against its own vitals; so minds that work powerfully and noiselessly on matters of moment, spin and whirl with reckless velocity, when no work is given them, and vex themselves to tatters.

Radicalism needs, in our judgment, a practical aim. It seems to be beating the air. The field of pure speculation no longer offers the palpable objects it requires to give substance, concentration, mass to its form. Dr. Bellows lately accounted in part for the unsatisfactory condition of Liberal Christianity by the decline of the spirit of antagonism, the cessation of hostilities on the part of the Orthodox. Unitarianism, he said, was losing its edge from having no substance to try it on. It was "spoiling for a fight." Indolence is more dangerous than duty. True it is, and must not be forgotten, that in some parts of the country radicalism is sorely pressed, and must fight for its existence against active foes. But in the centres of thought, which in this country are numerous, the speculative opposition of sects and theologians has ceased to be formidable. When liberals turn against liberals, it is an indication that the illiberals have slackened their fire and withdrawn their army. There is no more cogent proof of the need of some practical scheme of activity than this misuse of weapons, this misdirection of missiles, this waste of ammunition. It is not necessary, it may not be wise, to concentrate all the forces on one and the same point; let the objects proposed be suggested by special crises by the needs of the particular time or place; let them succeed each other with the changing moods or dispositions of the year or the generation; let them be general and universal, or local and particular, as the occasion may require; but let them be tangible and practical. That radicalism is disintegrating, or likely to disintegrate, is a thought not to be for a moment entertained. That radicals are separating into schools, sects, or cliques, must not and need not be admitted. There is no ground for dissension, not even for criticism that reaches below the surface, or for suspicion that rouses bitterness. No principle has been compromised, as yet, and, with ordinary caution, none need be. Cannot we resolve to let bickering alone, and turn our enthusiasm into channels that carry power towards the accomplishment of some good ends? No matter how many organs we have, provided they be in good tune and discourse excellent music. No matter whether they be large or small, provided they are the best that circumstances allow. No matter whether they all play the same tunes, provided they all play some strain of the music of humanity.

O. B. F.

RADICAL WORSHIP.

The Free Congregational Society of Florence, Mass., is accustomed to an observance of Sunday which is somewhat peculiar to itself. The forenoon is devoted to its very interesting and flourishing Sunday-school. The afternoon public exercises are designed to supply a substitute for ordinary church services. They usually include a lecture or address by the speaker, who may be engaged for the day (the resident one contributing this part of the programme about twice a month), with musical accompaniments. The latter, inasmuch as they are conducted by a superior choir, with the aid of an organ and Chickering grand piano, are always of high excellence.

But with a view to a more direct educational benefit and economy in expenditure, which, in common with everything that requires money for support, the society is obliged to consider during the present hard times, it has for some months past depended more than formerly upon home resources. This it has done, with a good degree of success, through the arrangement of special exercises to take the place of speakers from abroad. One of these has met with so much favor that it has become the established order for the second Sunday of each month. It is made up of recitations, songs, dialogues, and readings by children and adults, interspersed with music by the choir. Recently a device has been put into effect, with the same object in view, for the last Sunday. It is in the form of a paper, consisting of miscellaneous contents, chiefly original, to which the name of the Commian Journal has been given. Apart from the novel and interesting medium which it furnishes for the communication of ideas and knowledge, and much which pertains to the affairs of the society that cannot be so well conveyed through any other, this promises to become an effective and important stimulus to the cultivation of the power of expressing thought in writing, particularly among its younger contributors.

These special exercises were marked, three or four weeks since, by one of an even more notable character than those that have been referred to. I allude to the celebration of the birthday anniversary of Shakespeare. The programme upon the occasion comprised the following parts: music, by choir; the reading of a short, original, biographical essay appropriate to the observance, by the resident speaker; "Rejoicing Chorus" from "Macbeth," by choir; dialogue from "Measure for Measure"; music from "Midsummer Night's Dream"; reading from "Henry VIII.," reading of a selection from a critical essay on Shakespeare of E. P. Whipple; scene from "Henry IV.," music, by the choir. The respective parts were in admirable contrast to each other, and exceedingly well adapted to throw into relief the special characteristics; and impress upon all present a renewed sense of the greatness of the marvellous genius of the world's master poet.

It is the established custom of ordinary public Sunday gatherings to celebrate the lives and influence of famous persons of antiquity. But these for the most part are limited to the record of a single book and race. They are illustrations simply of a special type of character,—the exercise of only certain faculties. It is the great mission of radicalism to aid in the development of a broader range of human interest and sympathy, the recognition of greatness and goodness not in one book or people alone, but wherever they may be found; to believe in the present as well as in the past; to endeavor to see that justice is done to men of all time and every class; to estimate at their true worth the heretics as well as the believers, the sages as well as the saints; to acknowledge all as the world's benefactors who have contributed to the improvement of man's estate, the increase of knowledge, the pleasure of the mind, the quickening of its faculties, a deeper and clearer perception into the mysteries of nature and the soul. There can be no more conclusive evidence of the greatness of Shakspeare than that made manifest in the fact that, notwithstanding the contrast between the circumstances among which he lived and wrote, and those of the present, the estimation of his productions has increased continually. They have been the source of profound and ever-fresh delight to those of every class, the young and old, cultured and uncultured, alike of each succeeding generation. If he had been some crack-brained, religious enthusiast, the whole aim of whose life had been to be as miserable as possible, and to acquire unmitigated contempt for the world in which he lived, some haggard and uncleanly representative of mediæval holiness, whose days and nights were passed in a gloomy cell apart from human concerns and fellowships, we should behold him in an aureola of dazzling radiance, and thickly invested with accumulated legends and traditions.

Of course to those who are inclined to superstitious notions in regard to Sunday—who are attached to the stereotyped conception and mode of observance of it which prevails,—such a use of the day as I have indicated may appear sacrilegious and impious. But, surely, there is a far higher wisdom in, and more valuable influence to be gained from, the commemoration of the life and work of one who was so genuine a teacher, who knew and delineated with so wonderful a power what there is in the heart and experience of man, and to whom the world has been indebted for such indisputable and tangible benefits, as Shakspeare, than in that of the half-mythic or wholly mythic religious personages and events for which the Church sets apart certain days in its calendar.

D. H. C.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

Perhaps the most important political event of last week was the action of the Democratic Convention of Ohio which adopted a soft-money platform and advised the nomination of "Bill" Allen for the Presidency. Mr. Tilden's chances for the Democratic nomination were lessened considerably by this result of the contest between the two wings of his party in Ohio, and it now seems possible that the Democrats may be driven into the adoption of a non-committal platform with regard to the currency question at the St. Louis Convention. In this event, Republican success at the next election would be almost certain, even with Blaine as a candidate. The New Jersey Republican Convention adopted a hard-money and protective-tariff platform, and chose delegates who are understood to be in favor of Mr. Blaine. The Republican Convention of Kentucky favored quite enthusiastically the nomination of Bristow. The Tennessee delegation is divided between Bristow and Morton; that of Delaware is in favor of Blaine; and that of Alabama is divided, the larger part favoring Bristow.

The address adopted by the New York Conference expressed the views of those who desire a reform in our methods of administration; and the appointment of an executive committee makes possible the formation of a third party in case of unwise action at the coming conventions of the two existing parties. Future practical action by those who attended the Conference will depend entirely upon the nature of the platforms adopted and the character of the men nominated at Cincinnati and St. Louis.

A "greenback" convention has been held at Indianapolis, and Mr. Peter Cooper was nominated for President, with Newton Booth, of California, for Vice-President. Mr. Booth is understood to be an aspiring politician, and if so can do nothing better for his future reputation than to repudiate immediately all connection with soft-money heresies. The newspapers report that Mr. Booth considers his nomination of no importance, and that he will not even take the trouble to decline it; but we trust that a little reflection will convince him that it is of great importance to every public man to have his opinions upon certain subjects so well known that no convention could have any reasonable excuse for supposing him to hold any other opinions. If Mr. Booth does not believe in soft-money, let him now say so in unmistakable terms, for upon this question no politician can be allowed to-day to attempt the service of both God and Mammon. Mr. Cooper has already declined the nomination on account of old age and attending infirmity, and recommends "Bill" Allen for President. Mr. Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, has been nominated for the Presidency by the National Prohibitory Convention which met at Cincinnati. The platform was a jumble of absurdities.

The discussion of the question of jurisdiction in the Belknap affair has occupied the attention of the Senate nearly all the week, and still continues. $9,000 has been appropriated to pay the expenses of a committee appointed to investigate the national offices in Louisiana; and the Senate also resolved to investigate the present Louisiana or Mississippi troubles. A bill was passed authorizing the payment of certain claims reported by the Secretary of the Treasury; and another authorizing the appointment of receivers of National Banks. The House defeated, by a vote of 133 to 73 (not two-thirds in the affirmative), Payne's bill authorizing the issue of $10,000,000 of silver coin in exchange for legal tenders; allowed Mrs. Sherman-Fitch to receive, free of duty, her diamonds from the Khedive of Egypt; abolished the tax on receipts of savings-banks; passed the Post-Office Appropriation Bill; accepted a statue of Ethan Allen, to be placed in the Capitol; and directed the Speaker, to send to the authorities of the District of Columbia the testimony taken in relation to the conduct of Clapp, the Congressional Printer, that he may be indicted and prosecuted.

A fracas has occurred at Laurel Hill, Louisiana, near the Mississippi line, between whites and blacks, resulting in the killing of several whites and a number of blacks, variously reported at from 17 to 60. Of course a condition of society in which an outbreak of this nature may occur at almost any moment is greatly to be deplored; but we believe, nevertheless, that no Congressional resolutions or investigations can result in making it one whit better. The average black man in many parts of the South is only a few degrees removed from the savage or, at best, from the barbarian, and many white men of the same territories are but little better than semi-civilized. We need not expect, therefore, that the members of either of these classes should exhibit, when brought into personal contact, that control which we are in the habit of taking for granted throughout the North-east States; and when we add to this normal lack of control the prejudices engendered by the former relations of master and slave, and the antagonisms which have grown out of the war and the process of reconstruction, it is evident that murderous assaults must occasionally result, whatever the name or methods of the party in power. It will take years, and many years at that, before we can hope for a peaceful Southern society; and in the meantime inflammatory speeches from politicians of the Morton school do no good to the black man or to the white man.

The part of the sentimentalist in politics was well played last week by General Banks, who delivered one of the silliest speeches ever applauded by sane Congressmen. It was proposed, during a discussion of the Navy Appropriation Bill, to abolish the navy-yard at Charlestown, whereupon Mr. Banks made a speech full of references to the memories of Bunker Hill, beseeching his fellow-members to spare Bunker Hill Monument the insult of taking away the navy-yard, and offering "to pour his heart out in tears," if needful, to prevent it. As every Congressman who listened to the speech well knew that a chief function of the navy-yard in question is to become a temporary workshop for needy voters prior to election, Banks certainly displayed heroic courage in attempting a sentimental success amid most unfavorable circumstances; but that he did succeed is shown by the "clapping of hands from both sides" which greeted him as he sat down. But we warn General Banks that even Bunker Hill Monument is not solid enough to back up many attempts of that kind.

It is pleasant to find in the newspapers an occasional paragraph telling of the continued success of Eads in his scheme, known as the "jetty" plan, for deepening the water in the mouths of the Mississippi River. We learn, for instance, that the other day a steamer, drawing twelve feet of water, sailed up a pass through which the water last autumn was but eight feet in depth. It will be remembered that Eads undertook this work at his own risk; that is, although his ultimate profits may be very large, he was to be paid nothing, we believe, or very little indeed, unless he succeeded; and even then, as he proposed, the amount of his payment was made contingent upon the degree of his success.

The demolition of the Old South Church in Boston has been decided upon, and as merchants and politicians have begun an attack upon the Old State House, it is probable that this also will soon share the fate of the old Hancock House which was torn down a few years ago. We confess to a feeling of regret at the passing away of these old buildings; nevertheless it is useless, we suppose, to protest against their removal, as in every community may be found people who will manage in some way to bring about the destruction of any old landmarks which seriously interfere with business or with pleasure. We do not believe, however, that in this respect our people are much worse than the people of other countries. The antiquities of Rome, for instance, do not interfere with the business of the Roman people, but are, in fact, a principal source of profit to them, and the same is true to a greater or less extent of the antiquities of other countries, which, as a rule, moreover, have been preserved not from design, but from accident or from necessity.

The report of the Spiritualist Protective Committee, now nearly ready, will show, it is said, "that of a score of leading mediums from Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, and other places, who have been tested, more than one-half have proved frauds. One well-known Boston medium was shown to have practised exceedingly transparent deception in the production of spirit hands; another, who claimed to produce flowers from the spirit land, was detected in bringing to the seance natural flowers from a greenhouse. She also used artificial flowers from a millinery establishment, and some of the wires and colored paper used in the manufacture were found on the carpet of the parlor in which she gave the seance." We do not call attention to this report for the purpose of suggesting that the Committee might do well to examine a little more closely the mediums who have not yet been proved frauds, but to suggest to some medium who has been proved genuine the advisability of attempting to get hold of Bowen's dreadful secret, which he still carries with him, notwithstanding his expulsion from Plymouth Church. We think the spirits might stand it, even if it be thought too strong a dose for the weak mortals of this world; no revelation injures the medium, we believe; Bowen we are sure would feel relieved; and Beecher,—well, of course every one knows that Beecher would not be hurt by it a bit.

There is some prospect, as we write, that Turkish affairs may be adjusted, for a time at least, without the necessity of a general European war. Bismarck, Gortschakoff, and Andrassy, have decided that Turkey shall continue to live, and that the Sultan shall grant the full demands of the insurgents in Herzegovina and elsewhere, furnishing, moreover, guarantees that the promised reforms shall be practically carried out,—under European supervision, if necessary. The trouble at Salopica, the origin of which has not yet been explained, is in process of settlement; numerous arrests have been made, several executions have taken place, and the Sultan has agreed to pay a large sum of money to the widows of the murdered consuls. There is, however, a great deal of fear among the Christians throughout the Empire that Mohammedan fanaticism may at any moment take the form of a general rising against them, and foreign residents of Constantinople have begun to send away their families. The Sultan has been forced, by a Constantinople mob, to depose his Grand Vizier and to reinstate a former occupant of the office,—a Turk of the conservative or extreme Mohammedan school.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, May 3, 1876.

Last week I devoted much of my letter to the National Secular Society. Let us journey to-day into more heavenly places, and, comforted by the companionship of peers spiritual and temporal, of archbishops, bishops, marquises, earls, and other exalted personages, let us glance at the Christian Evidence Society, an organization worked with much prayer and fasting to cast out the demon of infidelity in these latter days. The Christian Evidence Society is wealthy, respectable, dignified. Its duty is to resist the inroads of scepticism. It is, in fact, a kind of ecclesiastical Mrs. Partington, trying to drive out the Atlantic Ocean of heresy with the mop of faith. One of its earlier efforts was to start a journal, under the editorship of a Mr. Cowper; a journal chiefly remarkable for the mendaciousness of its so-called evidences, and the virulence and lack of good faith with which it attacked its polemical adversaries. One of its most curiously amusing reviews was directed against the English Life of Jesus, by Thomas Scott, the well-known tormentor of the Orthodox, from the bottomless pit of whose hatred of superstition and priestcraft issues the army of locusts like unto scorpions, who have stings in their tails, that innumerable multitude of little white tracts, which are scattered up and down through the land, destroying the rank weeds of Orthodoxy, and falling, like a blight, on the swollen pretensions of the clergy.

Mr. Scott's tracts are much feared and hated by the Christians. Little, innocent-looking things, rolled with special neatness, and delivered harmlessly by the post; doves in appearance, they are as wise as serpents in reality, and spread doubts on every side. Into rectory and parsonage they find their wicked way; the smooth-faced vicar opens one, and, deceived by its title (say, "Beauties of the Prayer-Book"), and believing it to be some publication of the Religious Tract Society, he is sleepily half way through it before he finds himself reading the most atrocious heresy. Some of the darts are sure to remain and rankle in his mind, and the chances are that they prick him to remind him of their presence when he is decorously reciting the "dearly beloved brethren" on the following Sunday. Thus has Mr. Scott made himself a terror unto the faithful, and he was therefore naturally marked down as fit prey for the devouring maw of this Christian Evidence Society. His Life of Jesus was seized, stretched on the rack, torn to pieces, et après? The victim arose from the dead, and passed into the heaven of a new edition! The review was the most pitiable fiasco ever seen. Against the clear facts and strong logic of the heretic it raved and roared like a lunatic, reminding one strongly of a furious cat, which, with arched back and swollen tail, spits vehemently at a large mastiff that walks quietly on without taking the smallest notice. Mr. Scott challenged the society to single combat, but in vain. "Give me a man that we may fight together," quoth he; but no David answered to the summons.

Established to fight for the creeds, the society feared the shock of combat, and consoled itself with an annual meeting, at which it wept copiously over the giant strides of infidelity. The review was only a shot fired just to keep up appearance of fighting where fighting was practically impossible. For before this the society had tried wrestling with another combatant and had sadly failed. The editor of the redoubtable journal had himself bearded the lion in his den, and had debated with Mr. Bradlaugh on the gospels. He came with flourish of trumpets, a warrior armed to the fray, to crush down the ignorant atheist with the weight of his knowledge and his scholarship. They met; they fought; but, horror of horrors! the scholar was beaten with his own tools. He retreated, shorn of his plumes. "I don't pretend to Greek scholarship," murmured the atheist, as his foe retreated, "but mine is good enough to beat that of Mr. Cowper." Thenceforth, increased bitterness on the part of the Christian Evidence Society's Journal and its baffled editor.

Sad to say, the journal died last autumn. Archbishops, bishops, peers, and commons were not sufficient to bear up against its weight. They printed, but few bought; they wrote, but few read. Alas for the indifference of the Christian public! The journal established to crush out the National Reformer and the Scott tracts went out, while the others go on their way rejoicing with ever-increasing vigor. But, though the journal was dead, the society survived, and it proceeds with its accustomed labors. It keeps paid lecturers to travel about the country to deliver lectures on God, miracles, prayer, and kindred topics; but it maintains an ever-feeble struggle, and will soon, probably, follow the fate of its journal.

During last winter one of these lecturers, a Mr. Browne, a Cambridge graduate, delivered a lecture on miracles in the large and important town of Leeds. Some members of the local Secular Society challenged him to debate with one of the leading lecturers of the society, and, very reluctantly, he took up the challenge. No hanging back was permitted. He was ruthlessly pursued and nallied down, and the debate was arranged to take place in Leeds on April 27 and 28, between himself on the one side, as official representative of the Christian Evidence Society, and Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, as official representative of the Leeds Branch of the National Secular Society. Preliminaries were duly arranged; a verbatim report was to be taken, and a copy given to Mr. Bradlaugh for publication. The simple expenses of the two lecturers were to come out of the proceeds, and, these items paid for and the hall and printing bills discharged, the surplus was to be handed over to the Leeds Infirmary. The question for debate was fixed: "Can miracles be proved possible?" A very large hall was taken, and on Thursday and Friday last the debate came off. The Mayor of Leeds presided on each night, the duties of the chair being of the lightest, as the behavior of the immense audience was exemplary throughout. Mr. Browne is a thoroughly candid, sincere, and honorable gentleman, and showed the most perfect temper and courtesy during the contest. His good feeling was fully reciprocated by his antagonist, and not a shade of unpleasantness marred the debate. Unfortunately for the interest of the argument, the Christian was sadly overweighted; his logic was hanged, drawn, and quartered, in terrible fashion, dry and merciless; he was pushed up into the most uncomfortable corners, and forced into performing the most illogical somersaults. Having, for instance, stated that "Nature is not myself," and having defined Nature as something exterior to consciousness, he was asked whether he was "supernatural, preternatural, extra-natural, or unnatural," and he elected, amid some laughter, to be styled "extra-natural," from which admission so many other extras were deduced, that the natural became "small by degrees and beautifully less." In fact, he was so thoroughly beaten out of his original positions that the conclusion of the debate was somewhat disappointing. Mr. Browne urged Müller's Bristol Orphanage as an illustration of an overruling Providence, it being supported by contributions given in answer to prayer to God; but Mr. Bradlaugh retorted that Müller advertised largely in addition to prayer, and that lately an epidemic of fever had raged there, owing to defective drains, and the sanitary inspector had been called in, suggesting that what was evidently needed was "a little less prayer and a little more drains." Mr. Browne having defended physical evil as a valuable training without which life would not be worth having, it was mildly urged that, in that case, life would not be worth having in heaven, where physical evil was to have no existence; and then, proving how moral evil sprang from physical evil, the one being the parent to the other, Mr. Bradlaugh closed his last speech with a tremendous attack on the Providence who left man to such misery, and, having the power to free him by miracle, left him to be mutilated and crushed out of all semblance of humanity: an attack so vehement, so eloquent, so different from the dry argument that had preceded it, that Mr. Browne seemed, for a while, absolutely petrified, as face to face with some awful view of Nature that he had never before seen. His final speech was hesitating, timid, almost despairing in its tone. It was evidently a protest coming from his heart, a clinging to the hope of some solution to the fearful problem which seemed to press him down, a determination, "were the evidence ten times less than it is," to "cling to my Master Christ." It made one sad to listen to him, so manifestly earnest and so manifestly unhappy, clinging, as a drowning man might cling to a straw, to the sinking creed, and blind to the glorious hope of a redemption for mankind in this world, a hope possible of realization by man's effort and by man's toll, if only man will trust to himself for his own salvation, and work it out with brave heart and clear brain, fearing no celestial antagonist, and trembling before no miracle-working God.

WHAT DIVINES had assumed as the distinctive revelations of Christianity, theologic criticism has matched by exact parallels from the Stoics and poets of Greece and Rome. Read in Plato, and you shall find Christian dogmas, and not only so, but stumble on our evangelical phrases.—Emerson.

Communications.

A SUNDAY IN NEW JERSEY.

NEW YORK, April 3, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I am glad to notice in THE INDEX of March 30 that the Centennial Commissioners have decided they are not authorized to grant space for Evangelical church-building, within the limits of the Exhibition grounds. Maybe the protests against the closing of the grounds on Sunday, though not changing the plans in that particular, influenced somewhat the Commissioners' reply to the Evangelical Association. Let us be thankful for a half loaf.

Yesterday, Sunday, as I was planning about my yard and summer garden in New Jersey, where I reside, and was working a little (though out of respect for the tender feelings of my neighbors I plan rather than work Sundays), our occasional doctor came along. We talked together a few moments about the Sunday question, and no doubt my frank anti-Christian sentiments were somewhat new to him, though his profession carries him among people of various beliefs. His conversation reminded me of my often-repeated experience, that a Christian rarely comprehends the stand-point from which we reason; as my remark that I desired a complete separation of Church and State was interpreted as meaning the abolition of all churches and Sunday-schools. He confessed that his practice would be soon valueless, were he to express his particular opinion freely to his patients; yet he did not seem to realize that he proved by this remark the charge we make,—that freedom and Christianity are not compatible.

Our conversation impressed me more than ever with the necessity of action on the part of those opposed to the churches ruling this country; and it is to be hoped that the Congress of Liberals will be a success.

I am glad you took notice of the Tribune's article on Thomas Paine's bust.

Yours truly,

"A."

THE SAME ON BOTH SIDES.

"Dr. Hogg, of the United Presbyterian Mission in Egypt, reports that two natives have been bastinadoed at Negadeh for meeting with others to read and study the Bible. One of them has since died from the effects of the cruel treatment. This outrage has awakened the indignation of the more enlightened and liberal class."—Boston Evening Journal.

Such fanaticism exists where common-sense and common honesty are wanting. Some of our Christian fanatics would like to bastinado those who cannot call the Bible the only divine book, and who do not consider it just to force people to read it.

Do not blame the Indians for murdering on your frontiers. Those poor ignorant men have been compelled to consider the whites as robbers and murderers, and do unto you as you do unto them and others. Uncle Sam has land enough for all; work it, and abstain from your selfish speculations mixed with cheating and lying!

Christian fanatics, do not find too much fault with the fanatics from other sects and churches; they do only what you have done, and what some others would do, if the guard, common-sense, did not prevent them. Assumptions, like your own, that you are in possession of all bliss, monopolize heaven, and leave only a place in hell to all who cannot believe as you do, are one of the causes of such outrages as we hear from Negadeh, Salonica, and other places. Let those people alone, and apply your missions here, and with the money assist the poor around your costly churches. A part of your worship is like the sacrifice of a fat ox, surrounded by hungry people who cannot believe as you do, but who have not cunning enough to get possession of the fat ox.

CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N. H., May 14, 1876.

FREE MASONRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I differ so much from C. H. H. in his article on "Masonry," in THE INDEX of April 6, that I cannot forbear the expression of a different opinion.

When he says, "Masonry is as broad as humanity," he must forget that a large portion of humanity is excluded from its membership and privileges. I am glad if they make no distinction among their members on account of religious or political opinions; but while they do make distinction in respect to sex and race, they surely cannot justly claim to be on free religious grounds.

The "common" charity claimed for them appears to me very exclusive. A particularly unfortunate man cannot get into the society. If he is very poor, want of money alone will exclude him. If he is very old, he is not wanted; or if he is sick or a cripple, he is not acceptable. In short, if he is in a situation to be likely to be in need of assistance, this charitable institution has no place for him. It looks to me like a combination of the young, able-bodied, and rich men to help each other, in preference to helping the more unfortunate and feeble. If they spent half of the money in real charity outside of their prosperous institution which they spend for banquets and foolish finery to adorn their own persons, the institution might deserve to be called charitable. I have failed to find anything in their professions or practices to recommend the institution to minds imbued with the principles of justice and equality.

M. C. GRIFFIN.

LAWRENCE, Kansas, April 13, 1876.

SWEDENBORG is reported to have said: "The oldest angels in heaven are the youngest."

Sanctuary of Superstition.

THE REBEL FLAG.—When the angels ran up the rebel flag in heaven, God immediately put them in chains, millions of them, and threw them over the battlements, and they remain still chained in hell.—Rev. A. B. Earle, the Revivalist, in Boston, in 1866.

BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY INDISPENSABLE.—Why, the man who believes that, when this body dies, all conscious existence ceases, will rob his family, rob his neighbor, and why should he hesitate even to murder, if death will bring oblivion to him as to the beasts of the field?—Extract from funeral sermon by Rev. J. B. Woodward, Lafayette, N. J., April 15, 1876.

PRAYER FOR AN INQUIRER.—"Our Father who art in heaven, show us what Thou wouldst have us do. O Father, show ME what Thou wouldst have ME do." My friend, pray this daily in your closet. When you pray the second half, clasp your hands very closely, and SHED TEARS if you can, that the Father may know you are in earnest.—Printed directions found in the Testament of one of the disciples of Moody and Sankey at the Hippodrome.

THE LORD'S STONE AT CANTERBURY.—At the distance of about one-half mile from the village of the Shakers in Canterbury, N. H., there is to be seen in a pasture, far from any public road, a marble stone, in height about seven feet, which was brought from Lebanon, N. Y., the head-quarters of the Shakers, about six years since, and erected by special command of heaven, as an object of worship by the holy anointed Elders of this novel sect, and their deluded followers. The devotions around this stone consist of kneeling, tumbling, walling, singing, dancing, and other antics, too numerous to mention, which so forcibly remind the spectator of the worship of the Hindus, that he can hardly persuade himself that he is in America.

The inscriptions on this stone are as follows:—

[NORTH SIDE.]
The Lord's Stone,
written and placed here in Pleasant Grove
by the command of our Lord and Savior
Jesus Christ.
Erected June 24, 1848:
Engraved at Canterbury, N. H.
[SOUTH SIDE.]
Word of the Lord.

Behold I am the true and living God, and in my infinite wisdom do command my people to worship none but me. Here I have placed a fountain of the water of life, and no soul shall come within the bounds of this my fountain, or pollute this my word, with unclean hands or an impure heart, but shall feel my heavy judgment either in time or eternity. From this holy place my goodness shall go forth from east to west, and from north to south, and many poor souls shall gather into my spirit, and be strengthened by my hand of charity and love. But a heavy curse shall meet the rebel who dares to presume to destroy the word of my mouth which I have caused to be engraven, or that will injure this, my holy stone, which I have commanded my people to dedicate solely to me. For I am Jehovah, and before me and my holy anointed—Shaker Elders—every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that I AM dwelleth in my Zion, in the midst of my holy people, and I will bless, protect, and prosper them forever and ever. Amen.

Quoted from the "Lowell Journal" in Dr. Buchanan's "Journal of Man," Vol. 3, pp. 33, 34: December, 1851.

THE "PENITENTES" IN NEW MEXICO.—A noteworthy indication of the intelligence of these people is found in some of their religious practices, chief among which are those of a sect who call themselves Penitentes, which are of so extraordinary and revolting a nature that it is difficult for an Eastern man to believe the accounts of their doings until he has seen them with his own eyes. This order is very extensive among the natives, and in many of the rural districts embraces the greater part of the population, though just what their religious belief is I have not learned. The society is one of great secrecy, and of their secret customs and actions it is impossible to obtain information. Their leading idea, if we can judge from their public ceremonies, is that self-inflicted torture possesses some preëminent virtue. Accordingly, every year during Lent these fanatics go into a season of extraordinary penance. Each community of them has a house or chapel, devoted to their rites, and, from time to time, parties emerge from these houses barefooted, and stripped to the waist, and armed with bundles of branches of the thorny, poisonous cactus. These are tied firmly together at one end, and then fastened to a stick of convenient length, like an old-fashioned flail. Using the stock for a handle, they whip themselves upon the bare backs with the cactus branches, marching along to the music of some barbarous chant. This is kept up until their backs are hideous masses of gore, the blood streaming down at every stroke, and the mangled flesh cut and bruised by the horrible instruments of torture, so that you would scarcely recognize it as a part of a human being. During the last few days of the Lent season I saw several of these parties marching along engaged in this horrible work, of which my description fails to convey any adequate idea. These tortures frequently result fatally.

They also make enormous crosses of heavy timbers, under the weight of which a strong man can barely stand, and the penitent takes it on his back and carries it about until he falls down with exhaustion, the cross on top of him. Often in this condition, at the penitent's own request, others come and whip him with cactus and the sharp stalks of the Spanish bayonet, until he faints away. When they get deeply excited toward the close of the penitential season, they whip themselves on all parts of the body until scarcely a square inch of surface is left which has not been mangled by the cruel thorn of the cactus.—Letter from Santa Fé, dated April 23, and published in New York Sun of May 2, 1876.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6c per line.	For 52 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
13	25	51	52

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.
Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of our country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keabub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world; and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science; A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Lyrical Revival.....	2.25
The World's Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 3 vols. London, 1871-4. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Moral, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Maasson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	2.00
Romola.....	2.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	2.00
Felix Holt.....	2.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Bahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	6.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	6.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.). Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skelligs.....	1.25
Studies for Stories.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Eye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forum of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Dore, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versabilities. Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism for, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MAUDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.25
Autobiography.....	1.00
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Romances. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Mismanagement of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence. I. The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.00
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., fexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	13.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEESCHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Book. Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	3.00
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Scotch Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.). My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic of the Age of Elizabeth.....	2.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	2.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS.

PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.

Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

DR. EDWARD E. DENNIS-TON'S

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

—AT—

KEINSTEIN, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

NUMBER LIMITED TO THIRTY.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.00.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. E. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place
Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by

James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.;

one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W.

Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker.

Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60

cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horizontal Circular Hall Lectures, Feb. 13

and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one

hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred,

$3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing.

25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts.

each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents
wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE
& CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April

5, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL

& CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages,

containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS,

from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cts.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples

worth $1 free. STINSON &

CO., Portland, Maine.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each,

$50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25

Bromfield St., Boston.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE'S Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale

at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont

Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense

kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Redding a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place,

Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year,

a Monthly Record and Review of the latest

and best works in Radical, Freethought, and

Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled

severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"

"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Her-etics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament,"

the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc.

Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $800 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,
Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC REEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1876.

WHOLE No. 336.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE SECOND Radical Club of Boston will hold their annual picnic at Waltham, on Sunday, June 11.

CATHOLIC PAPERS announce that the "Second Annual Convention of the National Union of Young Men's Catholic Associations" will assemble in Cathedral Hall, Eighteenth and Wood Streets, Philadelphia, on June 28. Catholics and Protestants equally well comprehend the absolute necessity of organization to carry out their purpose of "conquering the world for Christ"; shall lovers of liberty be less intelligent in defending the world for Man?

IT IS RELATED that "the late John P. Hale, well remembered for his readiness and wit in the United States Senate, was not remarkable in college for scholarship, but was liked for his geniality. In his Latin not infrequently the author's meaning escaped him, but it was strangely clear to him when he edited the class by rendering Horace's saying, Dimidium facti, qui cepti, habet ('He who has begun is half done'), 'He that is well lathered is half shaved.'"

PUBLIC MEETINGS were held last week in Philadelphia to sustain the Commissioners in shutting the Exhibition on Sundays. Telegrams favoring the purpose of the meeting were received from Buffalo, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, and Williamsport. It is stated that the Commissioners promised the Presbyterian General Assembly's committee to keep the present rule in force. It is a trial of strength between the church-party and the people, and want of organization will probably cause the defeat of the latter after all. But the end is not yet.

REV. R. L. DABNEY, a Protestant Evangelical clergyman of Virginia, and a Professor in a theological seminary, lately published a letter to the Superintendent of Public Schools in that State, in which he took ground similar to that of Bishop McQuaid against State education, and urged the same argument of "parental rights." It will be found that Catholicism and Evangelical Protestantism, just so far as they oppose secular education, will be irresistibly driven to close union; and it is a delusion to expect much help from Evangelicalism in this great issue.

MR. MORSE, determined not to be behind hand in case the subscription to the Paine bust shall be completed by July 1, has been quietly at work upon the marble, and the bust is now well under way. It will be ready in good time, and we hope the amount now steadily increasing will be at once carried forward. The bust should be in Philadelphia in season for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and it can be if the subscription is speedily completed. It should be understood that the $1200 includes with the bust a fine marble pedestal four feet high, and the transportation of the whole work to Philadelphia.

THE STRUGGLE in France over the relations of Church and State is to be a long one, and will turn in great measure on the educational question. Which shall control the education of the people—the State or the Church? If the State does not, the Church will; and the Church's control of popular education is the certain destruction of popular liberty. M. Lallemand said at the session of the General Assembly of the Catholic Committees of France, on April 18, that "it is a great mistake to think that Catholic journals should not interfere in politics."

Of course! Catholicism is a political power, and so is Evangelicalism; America is finding this out to her cost. If the liberals remain politically inactive, they must ultimately share the fate of all who neglect to protect their own liberties.

SAYS THE New York Tribune, mentioning a speech of Rev. Dr. Dickson at the Presbyterian General Assembly last week: "The prolonged applause which followed his declaration that the Bible must not be taken out of the public schools was significant." That applause tells more of the coming struggle on the school question than all the scattered "liberal orthodox" voices on the other side. Why should liberals be willing to deceive themselves on this point, or to talk foolishly about the progress of liberal principles among the Orthodox? That there is such progress in certain directions is true enough; but the action of the great representative bodies is the only safe measure of its amount. Nothing is more delusive than to catch up some impulsive utterance of a half-heretical preacher like Professor Swing or Mr. Murray, and noise it abroad as a proof that Orthodoxy is "liberalizing." This applause reveals how stubborn and tenacious it is of unjust privileges.

THE MAJOR PART of the space of THE INDEX this week is devoted to a republication of the various press notices of the volume published a year ago by the Free Religious Association. We requested our readers at the time to forward to us all such notices as came to their hands, and now heartily thank those who were so kind as to comply with this request. Probably there are many which we have not seen, but all we have seen are here reproduced. The fifty-odd journals whose criticisms are thus marshalled side by side express fairly enough the general impression made by Freedom and Fellowship in Religion on the public mind; and this week, when the Free Religious Association hold their ninth Annual Meeting in Boston, we thought that the members would all be interested in seeing this compact exhibition of the general results of their first literary venture in book form. It will be of great value as an essential part of the record of their public work; and we therefore respectfully and cordially dedicate this number of THE INDEX to the Free Religious Association.

THE NEW YORK Sun is sometimes reckless and over-sharp, but in this paragraph it flies like an arrow to its mark: "Advertisements of patent medicines furnish support to many so-called religious papers. Not a few of them would perish but for the aid they receive from medical quackery. Hence the importance of the movement in the Baltimore Conference to exclude these advertisements from the organs of the Methodist denomination. The editors and the quacks can make a strong argument for their union. The editors may go on arguing that they are enabled to propagate religion with the resources of quackery; and the quacks can show that the so-called religious press is the best field for their operations, the place where they can put their money so as to do the most good. Of the quacks who thus advertise, there are some whose medicines are injurious to the men, women, and children who use them; and we often see, in so-called religious papers, quack-medicine advertisements which are an outrage upon decency. If religion be a matter of truth, how can its organs sustain themselves by such falsehoods?" THE INDEX needs all the resources which are honestly available, but it has refused hundreds of dollars of quack advertisements, and will continue to do so. We had a visit two or three years ago from a man interested in patent medicines, who impudently took us to task for our published standing rule on this head. Finding little encouragement, he left in a passion; and THE INDEX lost a subscriber! But it would lose them all before it would either annul or disregard that rule.

"Freedom and Fellowship in Religion."

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ESSAYS.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION. A Collection of Essays and Addresses. Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1875. $1.50.

We approach a volume issued by the Free Religious Association with a strong desire to be thoroughly just toward it. For, in the first place, desiring as this paper does to treat with fairness men of all creeds and all beliefs, we are especially anxious to be fair toward such as through unpopularity are in danger of receiving less than justice. "Free Religion" is a term which to most readers carries in it something of opprobrium, and on this account we would guard ourselves against hasty or harsh judgment of those to whom it applies. And, further, we are disposed to listen considerably to any thoughtful and earnest man whose position is different from our own, hoping to learn something from him. Fas est ab hoste doceri; much more is it right to learn if we can from those who are not enemies, but who are seeking truth by a different path from ours.

By its principle, the Free Religious Association assumes no uniformity of belief among its members; and no absolute consistency is to be expected among the dozen essays by different authors which make up this volume. Some of them express views which harmonize with a large conception of Christianity; others at least imply a negation of all distinctively Christian doctrine; and one or two are in pronounced and emphatic opposition to the very name of Christianity, and all that goes with it. It will be better, therefore, to speak of the chapters in detail than to generalize upon them all.

The Introduction, by Mr. Frothingham, is upon "The Religious Outlook." He notes in a page or two the decay of theology, the establishment of the scientific method, etc., and devotes the bulk of the essay to establishing the proposition that Christianity is on trial before the world, and the verdict is going against it. We wish Mr. Frothingham had been more explicit in telling us what he means, in this connection, by Christianity. For the most part, he seems to identify it with dogmatical and ecclesiastical systems. In this view we can at least understand his satisfaction in the prospect of its downfall. The "devout intelligence of modern times," he tells us, is going to press its demand "till every vestige of the Christian theology is swept away, and reason is alone and supreme in the domain of truth." It seems a little hard on us Christian believers to allow not even a "vestige" of truth to our cherished faiths; but, if Mr. Frothingham believes them all false, he may well rejoice in the expectation of their being swept away. But we can hardly understand his state of mind when he goes on in the next paragraph to expatiate on the failure of Christianity to affect the practical conduct of society, and to declare that "the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount are as irreconcilable with the cardinal principles on which modern society is based as are the implications contained in the Thirty-nine Articles, or any other Christian confession." Is it all, then, a part of the same beneficent revolution? Is it owing to the "devout intelligence of modern times" that society discards the principles of the Sermon on the Mount? Is that, too, an omen of the new heavens and new earth which science, "devout intelligence," etc., are bringing in? We own we should ourselves suppose it not amiss to go on preaching the Sermon on the Mount a little longer.

This Introduction, which in its polemical spirit seems to catch at whatever makes against the abuses or the uses of Christianity with indiscriminating haste, is hardly a fair representative of the spirit of the book as a whole. Mr. Wasson's essay, which follows it, is on "The Nature of Religion." It is highly abstract and philosophical in its forms of thought, enthusiastic in its temper, and can hardly with justice be described in a few lines. It asserts with great emphasis and ardor man's interlinked relations with the whole universe,—a universe which is divine, and contains an element higher than man. The reality of human freedom and of duty, and the grand obligation of sympathy, are ardently enounced. For worship the provision would seem to be somewhat vague. The next paper, by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Unity and Universality of Religious Ideas," is in some respects the most pleasing and satisfactory in the book. The great religious ideas, says Mr. Longfellow, are these: God, Duty, Benevolence, Immortality. Taking these up one by one, he gathers the testimonies to them contained in the religions of every land and every time. This collection of noble religious utterances, from the widest range of sources, is delightful and inspiring. We cannot refrain from adding that if all the prominent representatives of "Free Religion" were as emphatic in their testimony to these very ideas—including God and Immortality no less than Duty and Benevolence—as they are in asserting the principle of Freedom, we should see more power and promise in the work of some of them.

Mr. Samuel Johnson has an essay on "Freedom in Religion," metaphysical in its cast of thought, but satisfactory in its assertion of the reality of spiritual facts, and its connection of them with the practical concerns of life. "Religion and Science," by John Weiss, is extremely readable. Mr. Weiss is a brilliant writer; and his vigorous thought and glowing imagination are matched by a style clear, crisp, and telling. At times his strokes fall with needless recklessness. But there is a temper of courage and faith in this essay which we greatly enjoy. To the facts of science he gives a lofty, spiritual interpretation. He laughs at the idea that any explanation of man's development from any inferior being is going to lessen the nobility of his present estate. "Why need one care how he grew into a being who throbs with the instantaneous purpose of salutary ideas, with the devotion of his thought and conscience to the service of mankind, with a ravishing sense of harmony and proportion that breaks into his symphony and song? When a man reaches the point of being all alive, thrilling to his finger-tips with all the nerves a world can contribute, shall he distress himself because, upon examining his genealogy, he discovers no aristocrat, but a plebeian, for his ancestor?" "I do not care for the path, when I come in sight of the mansion of love and beauty that has been prepared for me. Its windows are all aglow with 'an awful rose of dawn.'"

We must omit all comment on the essays of Messrs. Potter, Frothingham, Chadwick, Higginson, and Mrs. Cheney, to give what space we have left to Mr. F. E. Abbot's paper on "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion," which seems to us the strongest and most remarkable chapter in the book. Mr. Abbot places Christianity and Free Religion in direct opposition to one another, in which, it should be said, not all his fellow-essayists would agree with him. He argues that Christianity as a distinctive system is based on a mistake; that its vital elements are not its peculiar property, but shared with other religions, and expressed in a higher form in that Free Religion which is to possess the future. We, who stand on the name and the fact of Christianity, and associate with it our own most sacred experiences and our highest hopes for the race,—we yet recognize in this paper of Mr. Abbot's a sincerity, a nobility, and ardor of moral feeling, which we deeply honor. And wide as is the difference between his position and ours, we believe that our agreement is deeper than our disagreement.

Briefly, Mr. Abbot's word is that the corner-stone of Christianity is allegiance to Christ, and that its radical defect lies in the spirit of servitude which this carries with it. He thinks that the assumption of the Messiahship by Jesus was due to an honest mistake; and that this personal exaltation of himself was the flaw in his otherwise sublime career. He regards Jesus as born within the circle of Jewish ideas, becoming filled with a profound and genuine sense of having a divine work to do, and falling in with the current belief of his people in identifying the highest possible work with the Messiahship. His originality and greatness lay in the conception that he was to win power by renouncing it; that he was to reign by serving, and govern men by love. In this, says Mr. Abbot, was wonderful nobility,—yet, not the highest nobility of absolute self-forgetfulness. "There is but one ambition sublimer than to REIGN BY SERVING, and that is, to SERVE WITHOUT REIGNING. I cannot shut my eyes to the nobler purpose; I cannot forget that Socrates both lived and died to make it real."

At that comparison we pause. Was, then, the life of Socrates nobler than the life of Christ? To the most dispassionate view, was he more truly self-sacrificing? We own we see but one answer. It seems to us that Mr. Abbot has misread his subject, and that the lordship which Jesus claimed was but the instrument to the work he would do, and not the end for which he did the work. The theme is far too great for us to more than touch. But is it not matter of observation that from this life—which Mr. Abbot thinks was, after all, self-centred, though in a noble way—unnumbered men and women have caught the spirit of pure and passionate devotion to the service of mankind? Have not ten thousand lives been set upon the noblest ways of self-sacrifice by the influence of Christ, where one has been moved by the influence of Socrates? And have the sweeter and more plentiful waters come from the narrower and less pure fountain?

Mr. Abbot will have it that wherever in the historical development of Christianity there has been subjection to human authority, magnifying of dogma and ordinance, usurpation on the one hand, and servility on the other, there has been its normal and natural course. Romanism, he declares, is the true Christianity. To all which mode of treatment we have one word to say: In so far as by Christianity you mean what we call the abuse of Christianity, then we agree with you that the sooner it goes by the board the better for mankind. But, further, we protest against any such interpretation of the facts. There is a real and a very serious difference between Mr. Abbot's position and that of the believer in free and spiritual Christianity. But he unduly magnifies that difference, by identifying the perversions of Christianity with its true ideal.

We have studied with great interest Mr. Abbot's analysis of the contrast between Christianity and Free Religion. It is impossible not to respect the loyalty to conviction, the loftiness of moral feeling, the rare vigor of thought and directness of expression, with which he writes. We have found not only mental stimulus, but spiritual enrichment in these glowing pages. Mr. Abbot represents—we might almost say embodies—an intense reaction against the servility, formalism, and externality which are the reproach of Christianity. In the rebound he seems to us to fall into the opposite extreme; to largely misconceive the true genius of Christianity, and, still further, to relinquish some of its elements which are vitally true, and to mankind at large indispensably true.

As "the two corner-stones" of the two systems he puts "faith in the individual Jesus" and "faith in universal human nature." We should amend the first, to read: "Faith in that God whom Jesus declares and interprets." And it would seem to us that, from Mr. Abbot's own stand-point, "human nature," in its extraordinary blending of good and evil, is a far less worthy object of faith than that Divine Soul of the universe toward which the noblest elements in human nature reach out with longing unspeakable. To the reality of that longing, and to the satisfaction which it finds, Mr. Abbot has borne noble testimony. Why does he here put human nature as its own divinity, rather than that God in whom, by his own belief, it seeks and finds its home?

The fellowship of Christianity, says Mr. Abbot, is confined to Christians; that of Free Religion is as wide as humanity itself. The social ideal of the one is to Christianize the world; that of the other is to humanize the world. These two propositions we may set over against each other. Christianity includes as one of its central elements the obligation to bring all men into the highest and best estate; the only question is, what is the best estate? That question comes up when he proceeds to consider "the two spiritual ideals." That of Christianity is contained in the exhortation, "Be like Christ"; that of Free Religion in the word, "Be thyself." The former, he alleges, leads to servile attempts at reproduction of a single type, and to lifeless and mechanical imitations. This seems to us wholly fanciful. Was Paul's character wanting in individuality? Was Augustine's, or Luther's, or Wesley's? The history of the Church in all its branches shows an infinite variety of types of character; to say that Fénelon, or St. Francis of Assisi, represents a uniform ideal is to take an utterly one-sided view. Yet, unquestionably, Christianity attributes to Christ that characteristic quality which is noblest, and is to be sought of all; and in taking as its ideal a character whose central force is supreme, self-sacrificing love, we think it rightly expresses the very highest truth in regard to character, a truth which finds no adequate expression in Mr. Abbot's scheme.

He goes on to consider, finally, "the two essential spirits." That of Christianity he conceives to be "self abnegation, self-distrust, self contempt," and "utter spiritual prostration before Jesus, and utter submission to his authoritative will." Hence, "the suppression of the free self, the paralysis and humiliation of the individual will, in order that the will of the Master may be accomplished." The language is invidious, but we recognize and accept the truth underlying it. We believe that the dependence of the soul upon a Higher Power, the subordination of its personal desires and claims to a perfect Will which is ordering all things, is its highest attitude; and that in this dependence upon the Highest and Best is the spring of a loftier energy and nobler freedom than can elsewhere be found. Mr. Abbot himself we think intimates this truth; and the opposition which he assumes between his own view and that of Christianity lies partly in his own fancy.

But in his exaltation of humanity he appears to lose sight of that lower element in human nature which has to be renounced and put under foot: that which Paul meant when he said, "Put off the old man and his deeds"; the qualities of bestiality, ferocity, exaltation of self, and contempt of others, which darken all the pages of history, and against which the best of mankind has to maintain unceasing warfare within himself. And, by as much as Mr. Abbot underrates this enemy within man, we think he overlooks man's necessity of a constantly realized dependence on a Divine Helper. In the gospel of freedom, as he interprets it, we recognize many noble elements—which we believe harmonize perfectly with true Christianity,—yet we find nothing so high as the supreme word of Jesus: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself."

We will not here pursue the controversy with Mr. Abbot; rather, we will quote from his description of "Free Religion," and say: This, by whatever name it be called—you call it Free Religion, we should call it Christianity,—this we recognize as belonging to the very inmost nature of true religion; and he who stands for this is our brother, by whatever name he be known:—

"It is the soul's deep resolve to love the truth, to learn the truth, and to live the truth, uncoerced and free. It is intellect daring to think, unawed by public opinion. It is Conscience daring to assert a higher law, in face of a corrupted society and a conforming Church. It is Will setting at naught the world's tyrannies, and putting into action the private whispers of the still, small voice. It is Heart resting in the universal and changeless Law as eternal and transcendent Love. It is the soul of man asserting its own superiority to all its own creations, burning with deep devotion to the true, and just, and pure, and identifying its every wish with the perfect order of the universe."—New York Christian Union, June 23, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP.—The famous English volume of Reviews and Essays has had a number of imitations, but none worthier or more notable than the volume just published by Messrs. Roberts Brothers, entitled Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. It contains ten independent essays, "written by different minds, in different moods, for different occasions, working without the least reference to one another, and associated here by no other bond than that of a common feeling of intellectual need, a common persuasion of their personal responsibility to meet it as they can, and a united conviction that sooner or later it will be met adequately and triumphantly." The reader will form some idea of its scope and variety from the following list of contributors and contents: "The Nature of Religion," by David A. Wasson; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Sentiment," by Samuel Longfellow; "Freedom in Religion," by Samuel Johnson; "Religion and Science," by John Weiss; "Christianity and its Definitions," by William J. Potter; "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion," by Francis E. Abbot; "The Soul of Protestantism," by O. B. Frothingham; "Liberty and the Church in America," by J. W. Chadwick; "The Word Philanthropy," by Thomas Wentworth Higginson; "Religion as Social Force," by Ednah D. Cheney,—with an Introduction by Mr. Frothingham.

The editor modestly calls it a "contribution towards the religion of the future." Perhaps that phrase most happily describes its intent and ultimate result. But it is a good deal of a contribution, a whole bundle of them in fact; yet the religion of the future has no place in them, is not outlined or even guessed at by them, and is only vaguely referred to as a remote but certain something that is to be, and to be vastly fairer, and truer, and more comprehensive, and more beneficent, and sufficing than anything that has yet been realized or even imagined. All the essays palpitate with unspoken prophecies; all the writers are inspired with expectancy; yet they all deal with present and vital themes, in the spirit of to-day, and with the least reference to the designs of the temple that is slowly rising under their hands and over their heads. In no recent volume has the future made itself so conspicuously visible or so palpably felt as in this, in which it appears as sentiment rather than substance, as inspiration rather than idea. The freest thinking, yet a faith that is almost enough to remove mountains,—the two are together. Mr. Frothingham admits that among rationalists the intellect has thus far been chiefly active. But this was because the need of criticism was the most imperative. "For a long time yet the relentless armor must be worn, and the pitiless weapon kept sharp and bare; but sentiment and imagination, recovering from the shock occasioned by the fall of their old idols, are rallying courage to do their part in peopling the new heavens with worshipful ideals, and clothing in robes of glory the august forms which the seraphs at the gate of knowledge allow passage to the upper skies."

This volume marks the direction religious thought is unmistakably taking. Right or wrong, true or false, the tendency is clear. The significance of these essays is quite as much in their leading as in their contents. In fact, the way is more than the station yet reached. The road determines the goal. Liberals are often accused of having no positive beliefs; it is forgotten that rationalism is not a result, but a method, with all it leads to. The differences between the old freethinkers and the new are marked enough; but one of the chief differences is that the latter have a method, while the former had none, but wrought with no law but whim, and no determination but habit. They were too conscious of their liberty to use it, and their antagonism to systems which had been tyrannical and imprisoning overmastered their desire for truth and their ability to acquire and organize it. Voltaire, and Bolingbroke, and Herbert, and Paine were fugitives from a slavery whose iron had entered their hearts and twisted their faculties askew,—not the pioneers of a colony, nor hardly the explorers of a new region of truth; they were simply prisoners at large, with all the results of their prison-life registered in their experience. There is something of this unscientific antagonism in the essay of Mr. Abbot on the "Genius of Christianity"; a shaking of the fist, a throwing of missiles, a terrific and ill-suppressed impatience, as of the prize-fighter in a procession where he is bound to keep step with pacific people while he aches to lay hold of his old enemy from whom he can hardly keep hands or eyes. But even in his essay this element is subordinate to other and nobler qualities. The new faith bears no relation to the old denial, and should not be mentioned in connection with it.

These essays treat of so many important topics, and treat them all so vitally, that it is difficult to compress their total meaning into a word. They mark the new religious departure, not only from the existing types of Christianity, but from all supernaturalism and all systems founded on tradition and authority. They indicate a more radical movement than is recognized at first, away from Unitarianism and Universalism as well as from Evangelical Protestantism. It is a movement away from Christianity as a system of religion, away from all organized religions, towards those universal ideas, and sentiments, and faiths, and aspirations which belong to man in virtue of his manhood, and are the birthright and endowment of human nature. All of Christianity that is true, and universal in its application, and helpful to society and man, it carries and joyfully absorbs; it takes every brick, and stone, and statue out of the old Church that can be used in rearing and adorning the new temple of humanity, but puts Paul by the side of Plato, and Solomon and Seneca together, and Epictetus along with John, and Jesus with Sakya-Muni, and Confucius, and Zoroaster, and Savonarola, though he may overtop them all. It is the boldest religious eclecticism that the genius of man has yet attempted. Take the fine essay on "Christianity and its Definitions," by Mr. Potter, as an illustration. It attempts to discover and state the final fact, the distinctive entity, in the Christian religion; and it does this in a spirit as reverent, and sympathetic, and believing as any Christian ever exhibited. It is no part of his intention to show how the errors that became incorporated with the religion helped its diffusion; how the Messianic idea gave it a loving lodgment in the hearts of thousands of disappointed Jews; how the delirium of Jesus fitted it to take the place of polytheistic religions; Providence uses even the errors and superstitions of mankind as hooks to fasten them to a chain which draws them to himself; he is concerned only with what is distinctive in the religion, and that, however stated, must yield to what is universal in it, and will ultimately blend with what is universal in all other faiths.

One of the most striking essays in the volume is that of Mr. Higginson on "The Word Philanthropy," a Greek word for a quality older than Christianity, and which almost seems to have come into Christendom, like the word that designates it, from a Greek source. Mr. Wasson's paper, like all his efforts, is full of incisive thought. He defines religion as "the sense of relation, of unity, with the infinite whole; and morals, reason, freedom, are bound up with it." Mr. Longfellow's admirable essay on the "Universality of Religious Ideas" shows how much larger is the kingdom of truth than any of the churches, and that the benevolent and moral elements which have been claimed as the peculiar property of Christianity belong also to other religions, and are the product of human nature. But the essay that will be read with most interest, perhaps, and in some respects is the most remarkable in the volume, is that on "Religion and Science," by John Weiss. It is a truly brilliant production. He shows that religion is not imperilled by any scientific discovery, and that however savants and scholastics may quarrel, facts never fall out by the way. The antagonism is in our weak heads and not in the universe, and the attempts to dissolve consciousness and analyze the moral instincts into registered reminiscences are as futile and foolish as to try to explain away the law of gravitation and reduce the multiplication table to a pulp. He is not afraid of evolution. "If Mr. Darwin could prove to-morrow that we have descended from an anthropoid ape that tenanted the boundless waste of forest branches, we should as cheerfully accept our structure created out of dust in that form as in any other. There is dignity in dust that reaches any form, because it eventually betrays a forming power, and ceases to be dust by sharing it. I am willing to have it shown that I travel with a whole menagerie in my cerebellum; your act in showing it to me shows that you nor I are members of that menagerie. We are its feeders, trainers, and interpreters. We act God's part towards it, as He does upon the scale of zones and continents. In us, in fact, he improves upon his natural action by bringing all his dumb creatures under one roof, where he enjoys the benefit of knowing that his motive in creating them is understood and delighted in." "Manhood ennobles all ancestors, and they enjoy princely revenues in its vitality. Must I make myself miserable because I am told that for nine months of my existence I was successively a fish, a frog, a bird, a rabbit, a monkey, and that my infancy presented strong Mongolian characteristics? This, then, was the path to the human mind, that outwims all fishes in a sea where no fish can live, that leaps with wit and analogy more agile than frogs and kangaroos, that travels by aerial routes in spaces where no bird's wing could winnow. So be it, if it be so. I do not care for the path when I come in sight of the mansion of love and beauty that have been prepared for me!" This, and forty-two pages in the same vein. Of course there is enough in the volume that a keen critic may fasten upon for objection. It would be very tame and almost profitless but for its constant provocatives to thought. But it is a striking volume, more remarkable for its affirmations than for its criticisms, and especially significant as a finger-point.—New York Golden Age, June 5, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—These essays and addresses are by different individuals, and upon various subjects. The writers agree only in a desire and a determination to oppose everything distinctively Christian, or, as one of them puts it, in the introduction of the volume, they "demand the indefinite modification of the Christian theology"; and they will "press the demand till every vestige of theology is swept away, and reason is alone and supreme in the domain of truth." We have, therefore, in these pages, we presume, the latest and brightest outcome of the "advanced thought of New England," the gleanings of those starry intellects that stand enthroned far above the mists and clouds that wrap other mortals. It is wonderful to see how their elevation enables them to take "broad views." They have ceased to confine their study or their faith to narrow limits. Boundary-lines that mean something to other men have faded from their sublimated vision. They have become the representatives of pure freedom, and their views are supposed to be a little nearer absolute truth than were any which Moses, or St. Paul, or St. John held. It is very interesting to know how things look to them up there in the heaven of unhampered reason. For example, Mr. Wasson tells us "religion in its broadest, simplest definition, is the consciousness of universal relation." There is no occasion for us to trouble ourselves about the seemingly divergent teachings of St. James, and of the Apostle to the Gentiles; or even about the differences between Christianity and Paganism, or even about the distinction between truth and error, or virtue and vice. For these opposites are related to each other—they could not otherwise be opposites,—and the consciousness of that relation constitutes religion.

But alas! this kind of religion is not faithfully practised by its preachers. They fail either to represent or to discover; we are not sure which. The exact relation between things, the schism of Dr. Cummins, and the present position and strength of the Church which he abandoned, must come under the head of that "universal relation" the consciousness of which lies at the foundation of religion. Here is an instance of the way in which one of these religionists applies his creed:—

"The debates on the subject of ritualism, at the late conference in New York, disclosed an unsuspected gulf of separation. The departure of Dr.

Cummins with a large following is ominous of dissolution in that communion."

We call attention to this statement, not because of its utter falsity, though it is about as inaccurate as it could have been made, but for the purpose of showing that the author's idea of "relations" is sadly obscure. The man who calls the following which Dr. Cummins has "large," must be comparing it with something exceedingly small, possibly with those who agree with him in his statement as to what religion is.

We quote a few examples of the teaching furnished in these papers:—

"The faculty by which we perform the act of idealization is the soul. . . . The idea of God has a twofold origin,—the craving of the intellect for a cause, and of the soul for perfection. Confident that nothing he sees is self-existent, man necessarily postulates something that is self-existent, and as necessarily proceeds to invest that something with a nature and attributes. . . . It was the Catholic principle that God, translating himself into the finite, had made man in his own image; so man had no option but to make God in his image, by retranslating himself into the infinite, and imagining himself as divested of limitations."

The process is further shown in the case of the doctrine of the Trinity. We call attention to the wonderful facility with which the key works. What a pity that Job, in his useless searchings, could not have read this book.

"We want to imagine Deity as absolute and infinite. But no sooner do we attempt to do so than the idea of absolute negation of Deity forces itself upon us. Having one absolute Being, then [note the logic], we must have two; so the idea of dualism appears as a necessary idea:—

"But the laws of thought forbid us to stop there. We cannot imagine two Beings to co-exist without imagining also the effect of their action upon each other. But such effect constitutes a third form of existence, so that, given the human consciousness of being at all, we are absolutely unable to exclude from our thought a trinity of beings."

And thus the man goes on, chapter after chapter, explaining the Creation, the Incarnation, the Atonement, the nature of the Church, and numerous other points—taking at his starting-point this principle: "The supernatural of the theologian is no other than the product of man's faculty of idealization."

Some of the explanations are absurd, and some would shock all sober-minded readers, and therefore we pass them by in silence.

The nature of the work can be easily seen. The origin of all truth and of all being is in man. The profoundest mysteries of Revelation are the product of his mind. It is no longer true that God spoke through his Prophets and by his Son. The order is reversed, and St. Paul's words should read, "Man has ever spoken through his own imagination."

The theory, when carried out to its logical results, as it is in this work, needs no confutation. But, as a theory, it is identical with a great deal of the teaching which is given in Christian pulpits. The principle that man's wants are supreme, that the Church and the Sacraments, and the whole outward order of religion, are just what we choose to make them, and must be the outgrowth of human needs, and take shape according to human devising, involves logically all the repulsive and absurd things set forth in these pages. But Christians do not perceive it, and thus are led on, step by step, to an idealism which leaves of Christianity nothing but a dream.—New York and Hartford Churchman.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.— . . . The introductory essay by Mr. O. B. Frothingham offers, on the whole, a very fair presentation of the religious world to-day. He thinks that there is not so much danger lurking in Roman Catholicism as some alarmists seem to apprehend. He shows how in ordinary Evangelical denominations the Church is everywhere coming into alliance with the world, on the terms of the world. Of course he has a sting at Unitarianism, which we forgive him, in consideration of the fact that there is some truth in his criticism. In the short space of fifteen pages Mr. Frothingham shows us the religious situation in a clearer and more forcible light than many authors have done in ponderous volumes.

The first essay, by David A. Wasson, on "The Nature of Religion," is marked by all the poetical grace and spirituality of that earnest writer. His definition of religion, as "the sense of relation, of unity, with the infinite whole"—or "the consciousness of universal relation,"—seems to us as good as anything that has been said in defining that which by its very nature must always be partly undefinable. We feel what religion may be, in our highest and best moments, but we cannot always put that feeling into words. Mr. Wasson's arguments concerning the unity of the world and man's relation to it are excellent. There are sentences and whole passages in this essay which remind us of Emerson, so full are they of thought and spiritual power.

"The Unity and Universality of the Religious Idea" is a very helpful paper. Its aim is to show that the ideas of God, Duty, Benevolence, and Immortality are to be found in all of the great religions of the world,—and are not confined, as so many suppose, to Christianity. This Mr. Longfellow proves with a wealth of scholarship and an appreciation that make this discourse an able contribution to that literature which seeks to show the sympathetic relation—not the mere occasional differences—existing between all religions known to men.

Many will turn first to Mr. Abbot's essay on "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion." Like everything this sharp, trenchant thinker writes, it is an able paper, but also, we are sorry to say, like almost everything he has given us, it contains too strong a flavor of bitterness,—a bit of wormwood that is not pleasant to take. His examination of the claims of Christianity, the character and mission of Jesus, is very interesting, though, of course, he is bound to come to the foregone conclusion "that Christianity is based on forgetfulness of liberty; the love of perfect freedom is not in it." Mr. Abbot stands staunchly to his colors; if he were Campbell's "last man," he would go down shouting: The great enemy to progress and civilization is the Christian religion! In opposition to the narrowness of Christianity he offers the breadth and length of Free Religion, whose corner-stone is "the universal soul of man, the common nature of humanity, as the source and origin of the world's religious life." Some of us claim that the Christianity of Christ—not the Christianity of the popular churches—has the same corner-stone in "the universal soul of man" and "the common nature of humanity." But Mr. Abbot can never see this. He cannot "conceal from himself that Christianity is not adapted to the present as it has been to the past, and that a deeper, broader, and brighter faith is to-day silently entering the heart of humanity." He feels the "galling pressure" of Christ's yoke and can wear it no longer.

Mr. Frothingham's learned and brilliant paper seeks to show "The Soul of Protestantism"; i. e., its cardinal idea and principle, and after tracing it through the centuries of history, he arrives at the conclusion that Protestantism is not identical with liberty of thought, and that already many who bear the Protestant name have outgrown it, and "the whole Protestant army will go over at last to the enemy, of course without knowing it, simply because they wear the old badges and carry the old flag." Is there, then, no possibility of enlarging the meaning and significance of a name? Must it mean to-day just what it meant six or eight hundred years ago? Is growth in religious ideas something "very tolerable and not to be endured"?

Mr. Chadwick's essay on "Liberty and the Church in America" discusses in admirable style the relations that should exist between Church and State, and such matters of special interest as the "putting God into the Constitution," Sabbath laws, and the Bible in the public schools. Of course it is easy to imagine beforehand Mr. Chadwick's position on these subjects. He takes the ground of common-sense. As to putting the name of God into the Constitution, he says finely: "We might formally acknowledge God and Christ in the Constitution, and not a man, woman, or child would believe or trust in either any more afterward than before. Nay, some would believe less and trust less, for real sanctities are always jeopardized by insisting upon things as real and important which are not so. From the top of a new Sinai I seem to hear the old commandment thundered with a new meaning and a higher than it had of old, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. It would be taking it in vain to put it into the Constitution, there to be exhibited, like a fly in amber,—a striking curiosity, but very useless, very dead."

We have no space to notice other essays by Samuel Johnson and John Weiss, William J. Potter and Thomas Wentworth Higginson. They discuss subjects of vital religious interest from the radical standpoint, and it is needless to say that people who read them will find much food for thought.

In the seventy pages of extracts from annual reports of the Free Religious Association there is a great deal which is interesting and strong. We are particularly glad to read the words of Mr. Emerson, Dr. Bartol, and Lucretia Mott.—New York Liberal Christian. [The opening paragraph of this notice was missing.]

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—The foremost man of the Free Religious Association seems to be O. B. Frothingham, who writes the introductory paper to this volume, and also another essay, entitled "The Soul of Protestantism." The other writers who here represent the Association are, David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, William J. Potter, Francis E. Abbot, John W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney. Most of these gentlemen will be recognized as whilom Unitarian ministers, who have foresworn the distinctively Christian name, and have planted themselves on the platform of the universal religious sentiment underlying the human history in every age. Mr. Wasson, it may be remembered, however, by some, was for a short time settled as an Orthodox Congregational minister, but very early struck off as an independent preacher, and very soon ceased to be, technically, a preacher at all. John Weiss was the earliest biographer of Theodore Parker.

These essays are a specimen of the way in which this company of advanced, or retrograde, thinkers are accustomed to look at the religious question. Advanced they are wont to style themselves. The religion they announce is spoken of by them as "the religion of the future"; but from a Christian point of view they are retrograde, for they only go back again to the effort which has been made again and again to explain the Christian religion as only the offspring of the general religious sentiment. Mr. Wasson defines religion as "the consciousness of universal relation." Mr. Longfellow gathers from a pretty wide reading many illustrations of the universality of the great religious ideas, which he states to be God, Duty, Benevolence, and Immortality. Mr. Johnson defines religion as "the natural attraction of mind as finite to mind as infinite," and argues that it is freedom. Mr. Weiss is not troubled at the questions which connect religion and science, for he ventures on another definition of religion. It is simply "the recurrence of human nature to the facts of the universe." Mr. Potter examines the various definitions of Christianity. The first is the ordinary Evangelical one, that Christianity is the acknowledgment of Jesus Christ as the Messiah and Savior; the second is the "liberal"—it is the substance of what Jesus taught, "Love to God and love to man"; the third is the sentimental,—it is enthusiasm for the central person, Jesus, as the founder of a new era in humanity; the fourth is a definition which traces Christianity to a religious element in the race, which was bound to develop in some such way as it did in Jesus. By the way, how the word "develop" does elucidate almost every theme! If it were not for that word and "evolve," it is doubtful whether we should be able to think the modern thought at all. Francis Ellingwood Abbot approaches the same subject under the name of the "Genius of Christianity." He considers it to be the grandest and most original trait in Jesus that he attempted to become the Universal Lord of Men by serving them. "There is but one ambition sublimer" than his; i. e., "to serve without reigning. I cannot shut my eyes to the nobler purpose. I cannot forget that Socrates both lived and died to make it real." We have long heard Jesus classed with Socrates, but we do not remember having heard before from the lips of an earnest and candid soul, Socrates put in the first moral rank, and Jesus in the second. But Mr. Abbot is nothing unless he be bold. For he says: "The time has come to see and say that the Christian confession is not a truth. Jesus was not the Christ of God." The italics are Mr. Abbot's own. He says further: "The highest possible exhortation of Christianity is, 'Be like Christ.' . . . But the highest exhortation of Free Religion is, 'Be thyself.'" This is the high-water mark of this volume. We should be glad to see Mr. Abbot set to work to prove the negative proposition mentioned above. If it is time to see and say that Jesus was not the Christ of God, it is surely about time to prove that proposition. If Mr. Abbot thinks "Be thyself" is really a higher exhortation than "Be like Christ," he is welcome to the opinion. If he would show that the practical adoption of the former exhortation is more efficacious than the practical adoption of the latter, his thought would be much more to the purpose. Or if he would show that there is any necessary opposition between being like Christ and being true to one's self, his showing of that opposition would be a real contribution to human thought.

Indeed, the vice of these thinkers is extreme one-sidedness. They are narrow after all their worship of breadth. They look upon Christ as somehow a good and great person, left behind in the march of their and the world's thought. But as we read the Scriptures, all these men's best thoughts were long ago in those pages uttered, and uttered in such a way as to be the engrafted word which is able to save, and actually did save, and continues to save, men's souls.

We are not blind to the excellences of spirit, the earnestness of tone, the grace or the vigor of expression, the truth of reasoning and of philosophy, which are exhibited in these essays; but these are exhibited in connection with so much that is not excellent and is only by assertion true, that we lay down the volume as, on the whole, of little value except as provoking thought, in more than one sense of the word.—The Pacific, July 1, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—It is unnecessary to say that this collection of essays is of the highest order, in the matter both of style and thought. The names of the writers are the guarantee of that. Whatever other sins may be charged against the members of the Free Religious Society, all agree that they know how to write excellent English, and that they never descend to vulgar arts. Every one of these discourses is strong, dignified, and pure in tone, and an earnest spirit runs through them all. A religious spirit, too; for there is no scoffing, and no undertone of doubt about that Great Presence, that Soul of the Universe, that Living God who is the object of highest reverence to the men of all sects and faiths. These essays are anything but "infidel." They do not even suggest more doubt than the discourses which bear the Christian name. They discuss religion, they define religion, and they vary in their definitions; but they all assume the reality of religion,—that it has a genuine object, that it is a real force in the spiritual life and in the outward ways of men.

And they are hopeful, too, as well as believing. Not one has any pessimist wail over the impending doom, or sees despair in decay of creeds, or the increase of scientific scepticism. They see a larger and nobler future, a better time coming, a grander kingdom of God. They have nothing of that refrain of the preacher that all is vanity. They are as Messianic as Judaism in their confident prophecy. No reader will lose heart in their criticism of the things which are and have been, as he has all along the vision of what things ought to be and shall be. Their hope outruns the cooler judgment of common men, who cannot see the universal and spiritual Church so near in time, or that the narrower religions are so far on in their decay, or so close to their transformation. Men as intelligent and as earnest as these writers will pronounce this prophecy of the near death of the Christian religion, even in its limited form of a confession of the Christ, much more in its larger form, too fondly optimistic: there will be a long northern twilight before the rising of the new sun. But in this hopefulness there is no more cheer and inspiration than in the Christian gospel.

The essays, moreover, are but slightly polemic. Their only bugbear seems to be the "Christian" name,—how it ought to be applied, to what it properly belongs. With the essence of Christianity, its inner soul and its practical work, they are in hearty sympathy, and they propose the same ends of the glory of God and the good of man which the Christian pulpits propose. Morally and practically they harmonize with the Evangelical call for a good life upon the earth, and an entrance into the higher life of the soul. It seems hardly worth while to spend so much breath in criticising the name, when the ends are so nearly identical. If the essays taught materialism, taught atheism, taught annihilation of soul at death, taught the grosser epicurean maxim instead of the precept of Jesus, then they might fitly denounce the Christian name as the sign of error, falsehood, and injustice,—might wish to "crush the infamous." But why they should be so zealous in fighting an epithet, which is by its very sound the sign of hope and of promise, as well as of a life which they consent to call pure and divine, bringing near the very Spirit of God, it is not so easy to understand. One of the essays, indeed, seems to reject the type of the Christian life as effeminate, and prefers to Christian humility a stoical "self-respect." But, after all, is not the best self-respect a modest self-estimate? Have not some of these very writers shown how the Stoic and Christian moralities are only different statements of the same idea, different sides of the same shield? And is not philanthropy, which "Free Religion" as much as Christianity commends, a losing of self-regard in the broader service of the race of man?—B., in Boston Christian Register, Dec. 4, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—We are used to everything in these days, and a volume of essays in which Christianity is quite thoroughly eliminated from religion does not startle one; yet, as religious teachings, no more radical statements have been put forth than are contained in these pages. It is a deliberate attempt to challenge the attention of those who wish to know what the believers in "Free Religion" have to say. It is the statement of the conclusions which they have so far reached, and the reason they have for their existence. It is made up from the contributions of those who have taken the lead in recent years in these religious discussions, and is by no means deficient in literary ability or careful writing, but contains few pages with which a Christian can agree, and very many which are graphic illustrations of the vagaries of intelligent men.

Mr. O. B. Frothingham begins with an essay upon "The Religious Outlook." He believes that the theological epoch is drawing near its close, that Christianity is now on its trial, that the truths and facts of science are taking the place of religion, that the evidences of union among Protestant sects are evidences of weakness, and that in time every vestige of theology will be swept away, and reason will be alone and supreme in the domain of truth. He gathers hope for the human race from "the sympathy of religions," and believes that the constructive period of the religion of the future has begun. It is the re-statement of the opinions which, with great diversity of form, the reading public are noticeably familiar, and embodies the substantial teachings of the other essays. Mr. David A. Wasson follows him in a vague essay on "The Nature of Religion." Mr. Samuel Longfellow then gives an interesting chapter upon "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas." Mr. Samuel Johnson contributes a metaphysical paper upon "Freedom in Religion." Mr. John Weiss, who is a brilliant and thoughtful writer, furnishes an article on "Religion and Science," which is well worth reading. Mr. Wm. J. Potter writes upon "Christianity and its Definitions." Mr. Francis E. Abbot has a strong and original, but thoroughly perverse, essay on "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion." Mr. Frothingham contributes "The Soul of Protestantism." Mr. John W. Chadwick discourses upon "Liberty and the Church in America." Mr. T. W. Higginson furnishes an essay on "The Word Philanthropy." Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney concludes the list with "Religion as a Social Force." Then follows a series of extracts from various writers in sympathy with the movement, entitled "Voices from the Free Platform." It is thus the most pronounced statement of the views of the Free Religionists which we have yet had. Such a volume is worth reading, and yet is worthless. It gives the honest views of a large class of people. It is useful to know what people are thinking about, the average thought of the unbeliever. It shows the unrest of the age, the aspirations of those who are unhinged from the Catholic Creeds, the vagaries into which all men fall who abandon Christianity. It reveals very much to the careful student. But for general reading, for those who hope to increase their own knowledge of religious truth, for those who hope to tread the firm ground of a reasonable religious faith, it is the poorest trash imaginable. It is the latest outcome of Unitarianism in its worst form, and teaches what all believing Christians must repudiate.—Unknown.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is a volume of essays and addresses by such men as David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, John Weiss, John W. Chadwick, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Ednah D. Cheney, and others of their Boston school, who, having abandoned Christianity, or at least its dogmatic form, are attempting to build up something that shall serve for a substitute. They are introduced by a paper on the religious outlook by O. B. Frothingham, in which the breaking down of the old creeds is strongly set forth. This extract from it indicates the character of the essays:—

"The chaotic state of opinion on religious questions is simply the result of the general breaking-up of the Christian system. Intelligence, being thrown upon its own resources to find a path over heaps of ruin, looks in every direction for an issue out from the falling city. Spiritualism, materialism, atheism, positivism, sentimentalism of every mode, fanaticism of every phase, mark the efforts that are making to overleap, burrow under, dig through, blast away the piles of ignorance, dogma, tradition, that cumber the ground. They are efforts of the human mind to come to an understanding with things as they are.

"The faith that such an understanding can be reached gains in force every day. The destructive period has about passed by; the constructive period has begun. In science, the greatest men are distinguishing themselves by positive generalizations. In philosophy, the lines are converging towards certain central principles. The outlook of Mr. Herbert Spencer's system is prefigured in John Fiske's Outlines of Cosmic Philosophy,—a remarkable book, which, if it establishes nothing, indicates some of the highways that the future intelligence will tread. Lewes' Problems of Life and Mind, and Strauss' Old Faith and New are contributions to the structure that is rising on the ruins of the old creed.

"To those interested particularly in religious speculation, cheers come from Owen, Müller, Lubbock, Rawlinson, Legge, Muir, Elliot, Tylor, Ellis, Newton, Oppert, Dillman, Weber, and the noble fraternity of scholars who are showing the identities and sounding the unison of faith in all ages of mankind, and are laying the foundations of a religion inclusive of all special faiths, and more intellectual, more spiritual, more uplifting and commanding than any one. The beautiful idea of the sympathy of religion has already become familiar, and not to rational thinkers alone. No less eminent a person than Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, within the solemn walls of Westminster Abbey, has countenanced the noble conception, not in so many words, but in sentences of grave admonitions to Christians, and honorable recognition of the merits of those whom Christians go forth to convert. Up to this time, outside of Christianity the intellect has had the field of religious inquiry mainly to itself; as was fitting, seeing that the need of criticism was the most imperative. For a long time yet the relentless armor must be worn, and the pitiless weapon kept sharp and bare; but sentiment and imagination, recovering from the shock occasioned by the fall of their old idols, are rallying courage to do their part in peopling the new heavens with worshipful ideals, and clothing in robes of glory the august forms which the seraphs at the gate of knowledge allow passage to the upper skies."—San Francisco Post.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is a volume of 424 pages, made up of papers by various authors, with the object of advocating a greater freedom of individual thought in religion. We give the table of contents: Introductory; "The Religious Outlook"; "The Nature of Religion," by David A. Wasson; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas," by Samuel Longfellow; "Freedom in Religion," by Samuel Johnson; "Religion and Science," by John Weiss; "Christianity and its Definitions," by Wm. J. Potter; "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion," by Francis Ellingwood Abbot; "The Soul of Protestantism," by O. B. Frothingham; "Liberty and the Church in America," by John W. Chadwick; "The Word Philanthropy," by Thomas Wentworth Higginson; "Religion as Social Force," by Ednah D. Cheney; "Voices from the Free Platform" (introducing extracts from Ralph Waldo Emerson, Charles H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, C. D. B. Mills, Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, Julia Ward Howe, C. A. Bartol, Wm. C. Gannett, John Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. Bronson Alcott, F. B. Sanborn, Wendell Phillips, Horace Seaver, Lucretia Mott, and others). These authors are vigorous thinkers and writers, and the book will be read by many who cannot accept all that is said. At the present day, there is scarcely a concern of any moment in which religion does not hold a conspicuous rank. It is debated in the highest places; it is the business of empires; it occupies the thoughts of princes and administrators; politicians make account of it; statesmen and demagogues alike take bearings from it. It haunts the scientific mind; literature cannot leave it unrecognized; philosophy finds it mingling in all its problems. Close observers of the times can see no declining interest in religion. The forms the interest takes may be changed, but the interest was never more vital. The thinking man who sincerely asks, What is truth? will find in this volume ideas advanced that are not in sympathy with the religious convictions of the great majority of the people, and not a few will be shocked at the tendency to lessen faith in doctrines rooted and grounded in the popular mind. For instance, the essay by Mr. Chadwick opposes the introduction into the preamble of the Constitution of the words, "Humbly acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all authority and power in civil government, the Lord Jesus Christ as the ruler among the nations, his revealed will as the law of the land, in order to constitute a Christian government." He says it would commit the nation first to a belief in God, then to the lordship, messianic office, and deity of Christ ("his revealed will" implying this), then to the establishment of a Christocracy. But while there is much in the volume contrary to the popular belief, there is much that is valuable and good, and that will incite research to ascertain the foundation upon which our religious faith rests. It is much more important to establish what true religion is, than to build up any favorite theory, from whatever source it may have come, short of the infinite source of all truth.—Salem (Mass.) Register.

FREE RELIGION.—A company of the scholars and thinkers of Boston have founded an organization called the "Free Religious Association," which has for its object the encouragement of inquiry after religious truth. Freedom of discussion and opinion, and fellowship in spirit and purpose, are avowedly its paramount provisions. It is no part of the aim of the Association to direct the spirit of religious inquiry into any particular channel, or to commit the members of the organization to a uniform course of thought and action. Absolute liberty of opinion and expression is, on the contrary, pledged to the individuals joining the fraternity. The first article of its Constitution explicitly declares its objects; viz., "To promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history." By means of lectures, conventions, and publications, the Association brings its discussions of religious problems before the public. The volume before us is among the first fruits of its efforts to find and to disseminate the truth. The book contains a series of essays and addresses that have been spoken on the platform of the Association in different times during the six or seven years of the Society's existence. The more elaborate of the papers—numbering eleven—are entitled as follows: "The Nature of Religion," by David A. Wasson; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas," Samuel Longfellow; "Religion and Science," John Weiss; "Freedom in Religion," Samuel Johnson; "The Word Philanthropy," T. W. Higginson; "The Soul of Protestantism," O. B. Frothingham; "Religion as a Social Force," Ednah D. Cheney; etc., etc.

An extract from the essay by Mr. Longfellow will show the tone and temper of the whole collection:—"Religion is a higher and broader word than Christianity; and so is human. Jewish, Brahman, Buddhist, Parsee, Mohammedan, these, too, are churches of the One Living God, the Father of all. With advancing light, thoughtful men in all of them will come out of what is peculiar and special in each, and so local and temporary, into the broad ground of universal, spiritual religion, which is Piety, Righteousness, Humanity: that belief in God and in man which is the creed of all creeds. . . .

"Look beneath names and words, and feel the life of the invisible, spiritual host of all righteous, true, heroic, saintly souls, made ours, if we are in sympathy with them, not by external organization, but by a spiritual law. Its sacramental words are God, Duty, Love, Immortality. These, written in many tongues upon its banner, have given vigor to more hearts and met more eyes lifted unfaltering in death, than any one church or one religion can count within its pale. This is the Eternal Gospel; this is the true Church Catholic; the Church not of Rome, nor of England; the Church not of Buddha, nor of Moses, nor of Christ; but of God and Man."—Chicago Tribune, June 5, 1875.

Roberts Brothers will publish, this week, two religious books of a widely different character. Or, perhaps, Orthodox believers would think I ought to say that one is an irreligious book, inasmuch as it is made up of contributions from the great lights of freethought. I refer to Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. It is a collection of essays and addresses, edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association. Most of these addresses have, I think, been delivered at Horticultural Hall; and they form one of the most brilliant collections of papers I have seen anywhere. Whether one agrees with them or not—and certainly I do not,—one must admire the wonderful ability with which some of these arch-heretics present their views. Moreover, it is impossible to doubt their sincerity. They tell the truth as they see it,—and feel themselves as much called to its utterance as ever was prophet or seer of old. "The Soul of Protestantism" is O. B. Frothingham's contribution to the work; and it is one of his most brilliant and incisive papers. "The Nature of Religion," by David A. Wasson; "Religion and Science," by John Weiss; and "The Word Philanthropy," by T. W. Higginson, are among the most brilliant of these articles,—where all are able. The best work of the best minds in the Free Religious organization has been given to this book. It would be a very dangerous volume if free thought were dangerous, which I do not believe. That faith seems to me worthless which hides itself from the arrow of another's doubt. The virtue which has never been tempted, the fortress which has never been besieged, the strength which has never been essayed, may all be genuine; but their worth can only be certainly proven in the hour of temptation, of conflict, and of trial. The Christian who would not remain a Christian after reading all the literature of Free Religion might as well be a Pagan in the first place.

If Freedom and Fellowship is the Gospel of the Doubters, the other book I referred to is the expression of a faith against which that Gospel of Doubt has no weapons. It is entitled Through the Year: Thoughts Relating to the Seasons of Nature and the Church. The author is the Rev. Horatio N. Powers, rector of St. John's Church, Chicago. I supposed, from the title, it would be a volume of devotions; but it is, instead, a volume of brief essays on religious themes. It is a book to lie on the dressing-tables of good women, and to be taken up when one is tired; when one feels the weariness of living, and longs to turn to the rest that remaineth for the people of God. It is a helpful book—one which makes you stronger to live, and fitter to die,—a most tolerant and liberal book, too, although the author belongs to a church which is the stronghold of conservatism.—L. C. M., in New York Tribune, May 25, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—It is natural that the sect known as the "Free Religious Association" should seek, like all other sects, to create its own distinctive literature,—its own "body of divinity." Accordingly a committee of the Free Religious Association have edited a collection of essays and addresses, and the Roberts Brothers have published it, under the title Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. The essays are all well written, and are interesting reading. There is much in them to be admired. If they have a cant of their own, it is not of the traditional sort. They give utterance and noble emphasis to certain truths which we all admit. To our view, however, they possess a common, all-pervading fault—an unnatural, unreasonable, exaggerated, and really absurd notion of "liberty," as if the finite creature could be its own supreme teacher and guide. The "freedom" they advocate borders close upon rebellion. The idea of submission to anything like personal authority, even that of God, is most irksome. Mr. Abbot, quoting those words of Jesus, "Come unto me," etc., and referring to "how many aching hearts and wounded spirits have taken upon them the easy yoke of Jesus and found the promised rest! how many more will find repose and peace in the same gentle bondage," adds, very significantly, "If the free spirit could indeed wear a yoke—if it could indeed purchase rest on such terms without abjuring that spiritual independence which is its very life and breath,—then might it wear the yoke of Jesus. Once I rejoiced to wear it; but I can wear it no longer." And in another passage, in the same

Continued on Page 261.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 27.

A. B. Bradford, 25 cents; W. Thompson, $19.17; A. P. Ware, $3.20; Emerson Bentley, $3; F. E. Abbo, $50; E. C. Ingersoll, $7.15; J. C. Smith, $6.25; N. Little, Jr., $3; E. F. Wilder, $1.60; E. J. Leonard, $1.50; G. Lieberknecht, $1.60; J. Wilson, $2; H. Roberts, $1.50; Lewis Scott, $3.20; E. B. Merrill, $7.50; S. B. Noyes, $10.70; E. P. Hassinger, $3.20; Geo. C. Young, 75 cents; Harriet Brothers, $2.25; James Davison, 20 cents; W. E. Darwin, $3.95; A. Williams & Co., $6.52; R. H. Ranney, $80.12; Harold Frederic, $3; J. A. Patterson, 10 cents; Lucretia Mott, $5; G. W. Downe, 20 cents; M. H. L. Cabot, $3.20.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York, $1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia, 1.00
Friends in Boston, 40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H., 2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I., 2.00
A. Schelling, Philadelphia, 1.00
Richard Hackett, Philadelphia, 1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis., 10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore, 1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y., 1.00
Sank City (Wis.) Liberal League, 20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O., 5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa., 1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia, 1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa., 5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N.J., 2.00
Warren Griswold, " 1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va., 1.00
Wm. Slason, Port Hope, Ontario, 1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass., 4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R.I., 2.00
S. R. Honey, " 2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y., 1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind., 1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa, 2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia, 5.00
J. S. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio, .90
O. B. Frothingham, New York, 10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia, 5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia, 1.00
George Langford, " 1.00
Thos. Phillips, " 1.00
Carl Doerflinger, Milwaukee, 1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass., 1.00
A. Friend, New Bedford, Mass., 10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y., 10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y., 20.00
S. R. Koehler, Boston, 2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa, 1.00
H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass., 1.00
H. C. Gray, Palmyra, O., (collection), 5.50
J. Sedgwick, " .50
Through Banner of Light, 15.50
" Boston Investigator, 16.75
" New Age, 5.50
M. Altman, New York City, 20.00
F. A. Green, Boston, 5.00
Friends in Boston, 2.00
J. V. Blake, Boston, 5.00
A. Friend in " 5.00
Geo. W. Park, " 3.00
Chas. W. Wendte, Cincinnati, 5.00
Robert Moore, St. Louis, 10.00
James Eddy, Providence, 5.00
W. Eysenbach, Lima, O., .50
W. L. Foster, East Soughton, Mass., 2.00
Mary G. Thompson, Worcester, Mass., 3.00
John Wise, Philadelphia, 1.00
A. Friend in New Jersey, 10.00
John Gilles, St. Louis, 1.00
Robert Collyer, Chicago, 50.00
"An English Brother" (£5), 27.25
J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa, 1.00
Louis Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y., 2.00
B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass., 2.00
Mrs. Wm. Heine, Pleasant Hill, Mo., 1.00
Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y., 2.00
Thos. H. Matthews, New Bedford, 5.00
S. F. Spangler, Winthrop, Iowa, 5.00
D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis., 1.00
E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill., 1.00
C. M. Dennison, New York, 5.00
Mrs. Orrin Gillet, Parma, Mich., 5.00
M. Jacoby, St. Louis, 2.00
O. W. Heyer, St. Louis, 3.00
Philip Godheart, St. Louis, 2.00
Mrs. Kotany, St. Louis, 1.00
Kohn & Co., St. Louis, 2.00
C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn, 5.00
William Green, Brooklyn, 5.00
Sidney H. Morse, Boston, 100.00
Gilbert Cope, West Chester, Pa., 1.00
F. M. Vaughan, Middleboro, Mass., 1.00
E. B. McKenzie, Charlestown, Mass., 1.00
W. C. Fuller, Williamette, Or., 3.00
D. P. Wilcox, Yankton, Dakota Territory, 1.00
Dr. J. N. Lyman, Columbus, O., 5.00
Daniel G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass., 1.00
Geo. Lewis, Providence, R.I., 1.00
Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass., 1.00
Liberal League, Minneapolis, Minn., 30.00
David Ferguson, Waupun, Wis., 5.00
Matilda Goddard, Boston, 5.00
Banner of Light, Boston, 5.00
William C. Gannett, Boston, 10.00

May 30.....$568.43
CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnsdall, ".....	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whicker, Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davidson, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.....	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.....	2.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston.....	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston.....	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N. Y.....	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.....	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" John Hiat, Winchester, Ind.....	5.00
" 25.	" A. Friend.....	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horach, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston.....	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbaase, La Fayette, N.J.....	2.00
" 3.	" A. Friend in New York City.....	50.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.....	5.00
" 8.	" J. D. Lange, New York City.....	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston.....	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.....	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, ".....	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.....	4.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipher, St. Louis.....	2.00
" 8.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.....	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.....	5.00
" 13.	" C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.....	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa.....	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.....	10.00
" 13.	" G. P. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.").....	8.00
" 17.	" J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia.....	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sulist, Salem, Ohio.....	5.75
" 17.	" J. S. Bonsall, ".....	.90
" 17.	" M. Schiesinger, Albany.....	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York.....	25.00
" 25.	" Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.....	90.00
" 25.	" Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.....	5.00
" 25.	" W. H. Crowell, ".....	5.00
" 25.	" J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.....	1.00
" 25.	" Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.....	2.00
" 25.	" C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee.....	2.00
" 25.	" J. A. Heintzelman, Phila.....	5.00
" 25.	" D. G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.....	1.00
" 25.	" S. R. Koehler, Boston.....	3.00
" 25.	" Geo. M. Murray, Jersey City.....	1.80
" 25.	" H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" C. A. Simpson, Saxonville, ".....	5.00
" 25.	" J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon.....	5.00
" 15.	" B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.....	5.00
" 15.	" "An English Brother" (43).....	27.25
" 15.	" John Gillies, St. Louis.....	1.00
" 15.	" J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa.....	4.00
" 15.	" L. Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.....	5.00
" 15.	" Dr. Max. Landsberg, N. Y.....	5.00
" 15.	" A. Walther, Brooklyn.....	2.00
" 15.	" E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.....	2.00
" 15.	" M. Altman, New York City.....	20.00
" 15.	" R. E. Grimshaw, Minneapolis, Minn.....	5.00
" 15.	" Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.....	3.00
" 15.	" F. P. Hicks, ".....	1.00
" 15.	" Benj. Gorlish, Jr., Bordeaux, France.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. L. Foster, East Stoughton, Mass.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.....	.50
" 15.	" C. H. Phillips, Boston.....	3.00
" 15.	" W. P. Phillips, ".....	1.00
" 15.	" H. S. Williams, ".....	5.00
" 15.	" Mrs. Owen Gillett, Parma, Mich.....	5.00
" 15.	" D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.....	2.00
" 15.	" C. M. Dennison, New York City.....	5.00
" 22.	" James McArthur, Chicago.....	20.00
" 22.	" C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn.....	5.00
" 22.	" Liberal League, Toledo, Iowa.....	10.00
" 22.	" "Boston.....	26.10
" 22.	" Mrs. A. L. Richmond.....	5.00
" 30.	" L. Scott, Waynesburg, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" E. R. McKenzie, Charlestown, Ma.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. K. Walpole, Brookline, Mass.....	1.50
" 30.	" E. B. Moore, Charlestown, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" E. H. Warren, Chelmsford, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" D. Denning, South Bend, Ind.....	1.00
" 30.	" S. C. Mason, Moberly, Mo.....	1.00
" 30.	" H. C. Hanson, Barnesville, Ga.....	.50
" 30.	" A. M. Dent, Weston, West Va.....	1.00
" 30.	" F. M. Vaughan, Middleboro, Mass.....	1.00
" 30.	" M. P. Barber, Pleasantville, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" "Cash," Phoenix, N. Y.....	1.00
" 30.	" G. Cope, West Chester, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" Wm. Dudgeon, New Hartford, N. Y.....	5.00
" 30.	" H. Andriessen, Beaver, Pa.....	2.00
" 30.	" E. A. Spring, Perth Amboy, N. J.....	.50
" 30.	" A. Morrison, Braintree, Mass.....	5.00
" 30.	" G. Lieberknecht, Geneseo, Ill.....	1.00
" 30.	" Sophia B. Carter, Andover, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" "Widow's Mite," Portage City, Wis.....	2.00
" 30.	" H. C. Southworth, Stoughton, Ms.....	1.00
" 30.	" B. Hollowell, Sandy Spring, Md.....	2.00
" 30.	" E. P. Hassinger, Brodhead, Wis.....	5.00
" 30.	" D. B. Hale, Collinsville, Ct.....	1.00
" 30.	" Rev. J. S. Richards, Liberty, Me.....	.10
" 30.	" H. D. Maxson, Amherst College.....	1.00
" 30.	" W. B. Studley, Rockland, Mass.....	5.00
" 30.	" J. W. Marshall, Plattsburgh, Neb.....	2.00
" 30.	" Dr. C. Wesselhoft, Boston.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. A. Greenleaf, Chicopee, Mass.....	.50
" 30.	" L. Goepfer, Union Village, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" W. C. Fuller, Willimantic, Ct.....	5.00
" 30.	" Dr. G. E. Francis, Worcester, Ma.....	1.00
" 30.	" W. W. Baker, Boston.....	5.00
" 30.	" James Parton, Newburyport.....	25.00
" 30.	" Dr. J. D. Thorley, Steel Works, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" H. S. Bacon, Milford, Mass.....	5.00
" 30.	" E. C. Darling, Ipswich, ".....	2.00
" 30.	" "Friend," Chelsea, ".....	1.00
" 30.	" Matilda Goddard, Boston.....	10.00
" 30.	" "Cash," Boston.....	1.00
" 30.	" Dr. W. P. Wesselhoft, Boston.....	2.00
" 30.	" P. A. Chamberlin, Wauseon, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" Albertina von Arnim, Longwood, Mass.....	3.00
" 30.	" D. P. Wilcox, Yankton, Dak. Terr.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. Lohmann & Son, Edwardsville, Ill.....	1.00
" 30.	" J. Blain, St. James, Mo.....	2.00
" 30.	" H. T. Wright, Washington Hts, Ill.....	2.00
" 30.	" P. H. Macgill, Baltimore, Md.....	10.00
" 30.	" C. T. Pratt, Pawtucket, R. I.....	3.00
" 30.	" J. N. Clark, E. Somerville, Mass.....	3.00
" 30.	" T. J. Atwood, Abilene, Wis.....	1.00
" 30.	" L. Prang & Co., Boston.....	10.00

" 30.	" W. S. Cunningham, Vienna, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. F. Paige, Boston.....	2.00
" 30.	" D. E. Mayo, Chelsea, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" Jos. Post, Old Westbury, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" Louise M. Thurston, Lynn, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" J. G. Richardson, Lake City, Minn.....	5.00
" 30.	" G. M. Wood, Washington, D.C.....	1.00
" 30.	" Liberals of Defiance, O.....	17.00
" 30.	" Liberal League, Medina, O.....	25.00
" 30.	" Liberal League, Minneapolis.....	20.00
" 30.	" J. W. Cabot, Boston.....	10.00
" 30.	" D. Ferguson, Waupun, Wis.....	10.00
" 30.	" Mrs. H. Grinnell, New Milford, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" Arethusa Hall, Northampton, Ma.....	2.00
" 30.	" J. Scott, Dighton, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" G. M. Wood, Washington, D. C.....	1.00
" 30.	" Thos. Curtis, St. Louis.....	1.00
" 30.	" Louise M. Thurston, Lynn, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" F. Fradley, Brooklyn.....	2.00
" 30.	" S. R. Smith, West Winfield, Ct.....	5.00
" 30.	" Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Godfrey, Brooklyn.....	10.00
" 30.	" J. G. Richardson, Lake City, Minn.....	5.00

$927.40

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE
CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15.	A. Friend in Boston (paid).....	$100.00
April 28.	Miss Marian Hovey, Boston (paid).....	100.00
April 17.	Wm. H. Sayward, Dorchester (paid) $25	100.00
May 3.	Free Lecture Ass'n, New Haven, " $75	100.00
May 8.	Nath. C. Nash, Boston (paid).....	100.00
May 13.	Samuel L. Hill, Florence, Mass. (paid).....	100.00

$500.00

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 1, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 11, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

FROM the first of June to the fifth or sixth, we shall be absent from Boston in order to attend the meeting of the Index Association at Toledo. Will correspondents please take notice, and excuse delays in meeting their requirements?

MANY EXCELLENT but unavoidably delayed communications are waiting to be published in THE INDEX. With cordial thanks for their favors, we must crave our contributors' patience at this season of unusual demands upon our space as well as upon our time.

THE GATHERING AND ITS CAUSE.

The following was the resolution offered on May 20 in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Baltimore, as published in the New York Tribune of May 22:—

"While it is not the policy or purpose of the Methodist Episcopal Church in any manner to connect the Church with the State, or to bring politics into our religion, yet, in view of the impety, unfaithfulness, and corruption that has come in many instances to prevail in places of public trust; and in view of the fact that the Christian graces have had so little prominence as qualifications for official positions; and being profoundly impressed that all the blessings of civil liberty which we so abundantly enjoy are due directly to the enlightening influence of the Christian religion; therefore,

"Resolved, That we, the delegates to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in conference assembled, at this the dawn of the new century of our freedom, do most earnestly recommend to the members of our Church throughout the country that they endeavor by every just and proper means to place in all the civil offices of our government only such men as are known to possess and maintain a true Christian character and principles."

When such a resolution as the above is offered in a Methodist Conference, it is quite unnecessary to consider any quibbling or hair-splitting as to what constitutes "Christian" character; we all know that, whatever else it includes, it includes also faith in Orthodox doctrine. Of course the proposal to elect only "Christians" to office is made with a plausible disclaimer of any "policy or purpose" to "connect the Church with the State"; of course it is made with a most plausible profession of concern for the public morals. This is the way in which the Church in all ages has disguised its hostility to the equal rights and liberties of non-believers—the very way in which the Roman Catholic Church itself makes its secret and open attacks on the fundamental principles of constitutional freedom. But if the American people are such imbeciles as not to see through these transparent pretences, or such incorrigible slaves as not to resist the daily increasing arrogance and ambition of what Gambetta so well described as "the clerical policy," then they deserve the subjugation in store for them, the total suppression of the religious liberty they now enjoy.

Moreover, the Methodist General Conference and the Presbyterian General Assembly, two of the largest Orthodox bodies in the land, have both passed resolutions condemning an Act of Congress, in transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department; and the Presbyterians are to send a formal protest to Congress against it. The same great bodies have also successfully protested against opening on Sundays the Centennial Exhibition, a semi-national affair for which the whole people have been taxed by State and National appropriations,—to the great infringement of the people's rights. Such instances of open interference with the State by the Church as such are multiplying on every hand. In proportion as the churches become more closely consolidated and more powerful by union, their disposition to interfere with the government increases; and every act of interference not protested against and defeated creates a dangerous breach in the defences of the public freedom. It is in just such ways that all free institutions perish. Not to prevent these usurpations is like permitting a leak in a dam: by-and-by the final rush of the flood sweeps away all before it in common ruin.

Now there are self-supposed liberals who chirrup as cheerfully as grasshoppers under the very beaks of the fowls stooping to swallow them whole, with all their music and molasses in them; and if all their comrades were of the same hopelessly inefficient temperament, the only course left would be to shrug one's shoulders and leave them to their fate. But a new spirit is stirring in the people to-day; a new wind of enthusiasm for liberty is blowing over the land; a new determination to put forever a summary stop to all these misguided or unscrupulous assaults on the safeguards of religious freedom is blazing up visibly in the hearts of the multitude. Letters full of enthusiastic approval of the Congress of Liberals and the National Liberal League come pouring in now by every mail; the movement is unmistakably one of the people; and, despite all sneers and futile opposition, the people will see it through.

For the information of those who mean to protect the great principles of religious liberty and equal religious rights against all such attempts to subvert them either now or hereafter, some of the arrangements already completed by the Centennial Committee should be communicated to the public through these columns. A large number of copies of the following blank form of application for a certificate of membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, after deliberation and approval by the Committee, have just been sent out by mail:—

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS:

PHILADELPHIA, JULY 1 TO JULY 4, 1876.

Approving the general objects for which the CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS was called by the PRELIMINARY CONVENTION held in Philadelphia, September 17, 18, and 19, 1875; namely, "to take active measures for the IMMEDIATE AND ABSOLUTE SECULARIZATION OF THE STATE," and, as a means to this end, "to organize a NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, and promote the organization of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues throughout the country," I hereby declare my wish to be an individual member of the said Congress, and my intention to attend its sessions, provided circumstances shall permit. [Signature and address.]

Whoever desires to be an individual member of the Congress should immediately write to "Francis E. Abbot, Chairman, 1 Tremont Place, Boston," for a copy of this blank form. On returning it signed, a handsome "Certificate of Membership" of the Congress will be forwarded to the signer; and the presentation of this "Certificate" at Philadelphia to the Committee on Credentials will be necessary to entitle individuals who do not go as delegates to the rights and privileges of membership. This provision, the necessity of which will be at once perceived, has been adopted in order to secure a convention of those who sympathize heartily with the fundamental purpose of the gathering, and to avoid the danger of being swamped by a mere crowd of miscellaneous attendants at the public festivities of the Centennial Fourth of July. No one who approves the movement will be excluded; blank forms of application can be signed at the time; but very vexatious delays and great inconvenience will be avoided by prompt application now.

All Liberal Leagues, however, and all liberal societies which desire to join in the Liberal League movement, are each entitled to elect and send five delegates, who should receive credentials to the Centennial Congress of Liberals from their own officers. It is to be hoped that every such organization will take immediate action for the election of delegates, a list of whom should be promptly forwarded by the local Secretary to "Mr. Damon Y. Kilgore, Secretary of the General Centennial Committee, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia." If this is done immediately, he will make arrangements for the accommodation of delegates and members at the lowest obtainable terms. No one who expects to be present should fail to notify him without delay. It is necessary to state here that the expenses of delegates or members cannot be assumed in any case by the Committee; the funds raised will be scrupulously devoted to the general purposes of the Congress, and no one should ask (as several have thoughtlessly done) to be entertained at the expense of those who have generously donated their money for these general purposes alone.

The programme of the proceedings cannot yet be announced in detail; but it may be said that business, and not speech-making, is the grand object of the Congress of Liberals. A very carefully-drawn Constitution of the National Liberal League will be submitted to the Congress for its deliberation and action; officers are to be elected; resolutions proposing important practical measures are to be debated and voted on; in short, the Congress is not to be a mere audience listening to orations and addresses, but a deliberative body organizing for public work and lasting public influence. The Committee have spared no pains to mature wise and efficient plans of action, and will submit them for approval to the independent and vigorous minds of the Congress; if they can be improved, no one will rejoice more than the Committee themselves. Let all the wisdom, the moral earnestness, the personal disinterestedness, and the executive ability of the liberals of America be brought to this most memorable assembly, which, if present indications are to be trusted, will constitute the most important historic event of this historic year. The general public will be astonished to learn what weighty sanction has been already given in advance to this Liberal League movement; but the permanent influence of the Congress must chiefly depend on the mental and moral force of its members, as evinced in the measures they adopt. Only the wisest, the bravest, the best, are wanted there; the windbags and "convention fleas" should stay away. Let no earnest liberal who has at heart the practical embodiment of liberal principles in the permanent institutions of the country absent himself from this gathering at Philadelphia: he is precisely the man that cannot be spared. Shall "all the civil offices of our government" be filled by those whom the churches themselves recognize as "Christians"? That is exactly what the country is tending to, unless the efficient organization of the liberal element can be secured for the simple preservation of religious liberty and the equal religious rights of ALL.

Come, then, fellow-citizens,—all you who are too intelligent to be seduced by silly cries of "peace, peace! when there is no peace,"—and do a work for which your children and your children's children will bless you, so long as liberty is loved and justice prized. Not the idle, not the listless, not the curious, not the timid, not the purposeless, not the selfish, not the jealous, not the mean, not the slavish in spirit,—it is not such we want: but come, all you who can comprehend the vastness of the opportunity, can be thrilled with a great and sublime purpose, can be nerved to meet and to make the inevitable sacrifices it demands. Only come—and America shall rejoice for centuries on centuries that you came!

PROGRESS AT THE WEST.

The two subjoined articles, though not accurate in all particulars, show that the Liberal League movement is growing rapidly in power and influence in the West. The first is from the San Francisco Daily Evening Post of April 15:—

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

This society, recently organized in this city, is a branch of the Liberal League of the United States. It differs widely in its aims and its proposed methods from the "liberal" societies already described. Nearly every large city of the Union has a branch of the Liberal League, there being now about thirty auxiliary societies. Its primary object is not discussion, but the concentration of forces in a practical endeavor to accomplish so-called fundamental reforms. The Liberal League has a thorough organization, a definite platform of principles, and the discussions in its meetings are confined to its own members, excepting occasional addresses given by invitation. The society aims to be "a power in the land," and seeks to secure by all legitimate means the general adoption of those measures which it deems essential to the interests of the Republic, and its debates are most frequently as to the best and most practicable mode of carrying into effect

ITS PRINCIPLES.

The society is based upon the conviction that the safety of Republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the interference of the State in any manner in matters of religion. It declares that certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution and the Declaration of Independence still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the country. It is to the specific object of averting these threatened evils, and conserving the liberties of the land by the complete secularization of the State in accordance with the principles of our organic law, that Liberal Leaguers avowedly consecrate their endeavors. The following is a brief summary of the special reforms which they consider requisite to that end:—

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

The equal taxation of property, including (as in California) church and ecclesiastical property; the non-employment of chaplains in our legislative bodies, the army and navy, and in all prisons, asylums, and all institutions supported by the State; the cessation of all public appropriations for educational or charitable institutions which are under the management of any sect or sects; the exclusion of the Bible and all religious instruction from our public schools; the substitution of simple affirmation, under the penalties of perjury, for the judicial oath in our courts and in all other departments of the government; and the repeal of all Sabbath laws. This is their platform, and they propose to secure practical compliance with its requirements by gathering and circulating information bearing upon the subject; by preparing and forwarding to the State and National Legislatures petitions numerously signed for the specific reforms proposed, and by personal and persistent application to public men who have large influence in the councils of State, but who, in the pressure of other matters, or possibly from an unworthy fear of religious bigots, have failed to give this subject the consideration which they deem its importance demands.

THE COMING STRUGGLE.

The members of the Liberal League acknowledge that their views are radical, and that they expect to meet great opposition from those who are honest in their opinions, as well as from interested parties and selfish schemers. They set forth in their invitations to others to join them that the work they have to do requires bravery, devotion, and willingness to incur present unpopularity; but they assert that they have counted the cost, and that they consider the good to be gained worth any individual sacrifices they may be called upon to endure. They propose to make a straight fight of it; accept no compromises, and count temporary defeat only an incentive to greater exertion.

This Liberal League movement, it is claimed, is favored by some of the best minds of the country, including many men in high official position, and is rapidly growing in numbers and influence. Its special organ is THE INDEX, of Boston, a weekly journal of considerable circulation, having a guaranteed fund of $100,000, and edited by F. E. Abbot, formerly a minister of the radical Unitarian school. The Pacific Coast organs are a monthly, the Pacific Liberal, edited by A. J. Boyer, and the German monthly before referred to. A convention of all the Liberal Leagues of the country will be held at Philadelphia on the first and second days of July next. The President of the San Francisco League is J. L. Hatch; the Secretary, A. J. Boyer; Vice-Presidents, Professor Vandervallen and Mr. Lowenthal; Chairman of the Executive Committee, Dr. Hoadley. The meetings are held each Friday evening, at the hall of the German Freethinkers, 310 O'Farrell Street.

The other article is from the St. Joseph, Missouri, Gazette of May 23:—

HUMAN FREEDOM.

Election of Delegates to the National Liberal League Convention at Philadelphia.

At the regular meeting of the St. Joseph Liberal League, held at their hall on Sunday last, H. W. Kaster and P. V. Wise were elected delegates to attend the National Liberal League Convention, to be held in Philadelphia on the second day of July next.

It will be one of the most important conventions ever held, as the leading minds of freethought and human individuality will form a thorough organization, and propose to act not only on the defensive, as heretofore, against that great engine of oppression, the Church and State, but become aggressive and fight for humanity, and against all restrictive laws, rules, and bondage. The doctrine that one part of mankind are born with saddles on their backs, and the other and smaller number booted and spurred to ride them at will by the grace of God, must be exploded, and the last vestige of it wiped out.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"WHEREAS, For the purpose of commemorating the Centennial anniversary of our national existence, and the heroic struggles of the great master-spirits of the American revolution, and exhibiting to the nations of the earth the results of our industries and our liberal institutions, large sums of the people's money, the Freethinkers, Atheists, Infidels, Jews, and Christians, without regard to creed or nationality, has been voted by the several States, and $1,500,000 by the Federal Government; and

"WHEREAS, After all the necessary arrangements have been made, and such a collection of the works of men and women have been collected together as eye has never before looked upon, the management, at the instigation of the Puritanical, narrow-minded priests, have determined to close the great exhibition on Sundays, thus depriving a large number of people, and especially the working men and women, from attending the exhibition, thus restricting them of their natural, inalienable rights, and entailing a loss of over three millions of dollars; therefore

"Be it resolved, That we regard the arbitrary and illegal closing of the Centennial grounds on Sundays at Philadelphia as a gross outrage upon the common liberties of man and in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and the most absurd and wicked blunder of the nineteenth century."

The meeting then adjourned.

In every town where a dozen liberals of earnestness and activity can be assembled, let them call a meeting, organize a Liberal League, and elect five delegates to the Centennial Congress of Liberals. The more delegates there are, the better. The movement is already fairly started, and we believe it is yet destined to "run like wildfire," as the papers say. The people everywhere are waking up, and will wake faster than ever after the Philadelphia meeting; but that meeting will have all the more influence, if it is composed mainly of delegates chosen for the purpose.

Now is the time for every lover of liberty, every friend of free institutions, every true and enlightened patriot, to "stand up and be counted" on behalf of humanity's most sacred and precious interests. Those who do not wilfully or recklessly misrepresent the Liberal League movement know that it is the most pacific and cosmopolitan movement of the time; for there is no permanent peace without justice, no universal brotherhood without universal liberty. The friends of this bold agitation for EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION are actuated by no spirit of bitterness or hostility to any class of citizens, not even the churches whose ambition is fomenting discord by stubbornly insisting on grievously unjust privileges and advantages; on the contrary, they aim simply to secure the establishment of that universally revered equity which is the only possible guarantee of kindly feeling and mutual helpfulness. It is a conscious or unconscious slander to accuse the Liberal League of fostering partisan narrowness or stirring up aggressive warfare on neighbors at peace; its friends know their own purposes and hearts too well, and will yet prove that the measures they are so earnest to carry constitute the true bulwarks of tranquillity and general good-will. "First pure, then peaceable"—that is the teaching even of the Christian Scriptures; let it read, "first just, then peaceable," and it will become the key-note of the Liberal League movement. But never mind the slanders or the misrepresentations: we who know that what makes for justice makes also for love must press steadily forward, untiring, undismayed, undeterred, till even those who now are clamorous in opposition shall be compelled to say—"These men were not drunk with new wine, but faithfully obeyed the noblest inspirations of humanity."

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The Republican State Conventions which have been held during the week have increased Mr. Blaine's chances for the nomination by giving him nearly or quite one hundred additional delegates to Cincinnati. Some of his enthusiastic friends are already advising him to begin the selection of the members of his future Cabinet. On the other hand, however, many politicians predict that after the first ballot at Cincinnati his followers will rapidly fall away, and that the nomination will be given in the end to either Washburn or Hayes. Grant's appointment of a son of Simon Cameron to the position of Secretary of War—following the transfer of Judge Taft to the Attorney-Generalship—is supposed to have been the result of a political bargain made in the interests of his favorite, Conkling, who will accordingly receive the vote of Pennsylvania after the delegates have been allowed to throw a complimentary vote for Hartranft. Morton's chances have not increased of late, and it cannot be said that Bristow's prospects have greatly improved, although the Independents become daily more decided not to accept of the result at Cincinnati unless a thorough-going reformer be placed in nomination.

Mr. Pierrepont, as Minister to England—although not nearly as good as Mr. Dana,—is, nevertheless, an appointment so much better than those which Grant sometimes makes that it may be accepted with thankfulness, a thankfulness which the unregenerate man may be allowed to increase a little by the reflection that Pierrepont's confirmation puts a stop to any further payment of salary to Mr. Robert C. Schenck. The House Committee on Foreign Affairs has presented a report upon the connection of Schenck with the Emma Mine swindle, and, after a review of the evidence, presents the following resolution, with a unanimous recommendation of its adoption: "That this House condemns the action of General Robert C. Schenck, United States Minister at the Court of St. James, in becoming a director of the Emma Silver Mine Company of London, and his operations in connection with the shares of said company and the vendors thereof, as ill-advised, unfortunate, and incompatible with the duties of his official position." The Nation announces that it will give this week a full history of the connection of Schenck with the Emma Mine, to be followed next week by a similar history with regard to Park. The articles will undoubtedly repay perusal.

The Senate still continues the discussion of the question of jurisdiction with regard to the impeachment case, and has given but little attention to other matters. A bill was passed giving the Paymaster-General of the army the rank of Brigadier-General; and a bill to restore the franking privilege was introduced. Those theorists who believe that the country should be governed by the House of Representatives alone, without being hindered by the Senate and President, might do well to note the fact that the Senate has made no less than one thousand amendments to the Legislative Appropriation Bill since it came from the House, and every one of these amendments, so far, at least, as we have been able to examine them, is a decided improvement upon the original bill. The House refused to concur with the Senate amendments to the bill authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks; passed the Naval Appropriation Bill, with a provision directing the Secretary of the Navy to organize a naval board of five commissioned officers in the navy to determine whether any of the navy-yards can be dispensed with,—a provision the execution of which we trust General Banks will look after, that he may not be obliged "to pour his heart out in tears"; made an appropriation for the payment of claims reported allowed by the Commissioner of Claims; and provided for the payment of the judgments of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims. The discussion of the Tariff Bill was begun by Mr. Morrison, and Mr. Hewitt made a speech on the Schenck case, in which he expressed more decided opinions than those contained in the report of the Committee.

The prospect of Winslow's surrender becomes more favorable. Secretary Fish's letter seems to have made considerable impression in England. The London Times concedes the force of its arguments, and admits that England has herself tried criminals for other offences than those for which they were surrendered. Lawrence—whose case was made a pretext by England for refusing the surrender of Winslow—has pleaded guilty to forgery, the crime for which he was extradited, and will not be tried on the indictments against him for smuggling. This result, which was brought about by the personal efforts of Pierrepont and Taft, removes a stumbling-block, and helps to clear the way for Winslow's coming home.

The Indians have begun the murder of the miners in the Black Hills Reservation, and we are likely to have another miserable Indian war. The Black Hills country undoubtedly belongs to the Indians, and no white men have any right to attempt a settlement in it. It might be possible, on some ground of military policy or necessity, to conjure up some justification for Custer's expedition, but the government cannot be excused for its subsequent tolerance of the inroads of miners. The refusal of the Indians to sell their land furnishes no justification for the occupation of their country. Government in this matter has acted very much as A would act who wished to purchase of B a field for a chicken-yard, and B refused to sell; whereupon A turned his chickens into the field without permission; and B has begun to kill the chickens. As regards the treatment of Indians, we are not sentimentalists; we do not believe in Grant's peace policy, and we should like to see the Indian Bureau transferred to the control of the War Department; but we believe that some attempt to conform to an idea of justice, though as crude as an Indian's, would be better than the distribution of rations and the introduction of missions followed by trespass and robbery.

The Centennial Exhibition has not been opened as yet on Sunday, and, as we write, there is but little likelihood that the Commissioners will change their last resolve. The subject, however, is creating much more excitement than we had anticipated. Immense mass meetings in favor of and in opposition to Sunday-opening have been held in Philadelphia, and the press seems to be almost as evenly divided as are the people of Philadelphia,—the religious papers being generally in favor of keeping the doors closed, and the secular papers desiring to have them opened. In the meantime, while the discussion is going on, liquor-shops and side-shows of every description are open on Sunday, and are doing a much more thriving business than would be possible if the gates of the Exhibition were not closed. It is to be hoped that this significant fact, added to the fact that the Exhibition is not paying its running expenses, may yet open the eyes of some members of the Commission to the fact that a general observance of the Puritan Sabbath is no longer possible in this country; that multitudes of people no longer believe in its sanctity or its usefulness; and that for these people, therefore, art exhibitions and wholesome recreations are infinitely better than dirty side-shows and liquor-shop dissolutions.

The School Board of Boston has undertaken the subject of dress reform. At a recent meeting a committee was appointed to cooperate with the principals of the various public schools in an effort to repress extravagance in dress at school-receptions and commencement-exercises. The resolution for the appointment of the committee was introduced by a lady, and some papers, we observe, already refer to the measure as an illustration of the good which women will do when admitted to public office. With all respect for the mover of the motion, however, we believe that it would be hardly possible for her to advise a more nonsensical crusade than that which she evidently desires to undertake. The motion is in harmony with that false and pernicious sentiment which in the name of democracy, or philanthropy, or religion, endeavors to do away with envy and jealousy by reducing all persons to a dead level. Wealth will make itself manifest in dress, and has as good a right to do so as in houses and vehicles; and the sooner the children of the poor learn that they cannot dress in the same way as the children of the rich, the better it will be for them. We admit the genuine suffering which often attends the learning of the lesson, but the lesson will not be deferred or made more easy by the production of a fictitious equality at a school exhibition, even if all the children of the rich should put on their worst dresses, and all the children of the poor should put on their best dresses. The matter had better be let alone, for it is regulated by laws which are beyond the reach of any school-committee. It might be well, however, for Miss May, and Miss Peabody, and Mr. Hutchins—the members of the committee—to put on an appropriate bib and tucker, and to have their photographs taken and circulated, that parents may have an opportunity to judge of their standard of taste in dress.

The execution of a murderer in Worcester last week was attended by a circumstance so shockingly revolting that the spectators cried out involuntarily, and the sheriff was obliged to order them to withdraw. We trust that this disgusting accident, added to others, which continually occur at executions, may have some effect in convincing our legislators that hanging at best is a thoroughly barbarous method of destroying life; and that if capital punishment be retained some better and more scientific method should be devised. What we desire is the cessation of a life, and not the production of a revolting spectacle, all the details of which are to be spread out in next day's newspaper. A criminal could be executed by means of electricity, or by the use of chloroform, or in any one of half a dozen different ways, with perfect propriety and decency, without pain, and without the possibility of any blunder or failure or the production of a disagreeable scene. The gallows is a bungling contrivance compared with other resources of modern science, and the initiation of a movement for its destruction would not be bad work for some member of our next Legislature.

That the war-cloud hanging over Europe is still very threatening is a fact made evident by the condition of the London stock-market, as well as by the cautious but significant military movements of some of the leading powers. Although Russia is said to believe that Turkey will accept the propositions of the Berlin Conference, a report from Turkey declares that the Sultan will not accept them, but maintains that they would prove an unwarrantable interference with the internal affairs of his Empire. The revolt in Bulgaria, which early in the week appeared very threatening, has been suppressed, and there appears to be a temporary lull in the operations of the insurgents in other provinces.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, May 6, 1876.

I do not know how it may be with you in America, but we in England of the Secular party do not rest content with simply anti-theological work; our duty being, as we see it, the promotion of the greatest happiness of the greatest number, we bring within the scope of our Secularism all social and political reform. Politics are, to us, the means whereby we seek to attain our ends, and we draw no distinction between sacred and profane. If my kindly readers of THE INDEX will remember that, they will not wonder if, in some of these sketches, politics run side by side with theology, and radical progress in the State be chronicled as well as radical progress in the Church. And truly, this week, politics have so outnumbered theology that in spite of "May Meetings" on every side, we have thought of little else. Our new empire is already in distress. It has been in chancery, the lawyers not knowing whether the Sovereign was Queen or Empress in writs which were to take effect beyond seas. It has been in the Herald's Office, and the King-at-Arms says it is to figure on all petitions to the Sovereign. Its proclamation has been laughed at, jeered at, mourned over. Already "Imperialists" is heard as a party name. We Republicans rejoice. This Royal Titles Act has stamped with the approval of Parliament a far-reaching principle for which we have long contended; namely, that Parliament was supreme over the throne itself, and could give or take away the crown at its own pleasure. The principle is now beyond dispute. If Parliament can transform the Kingdom into an Empire, it can equally well transform the Empire into a Republic. The power that makes a Queen an Empress can make an Empress a President, or a simple citizen. The revolution of peace has begun, and not yet awhile will the end come. This is clearly seen now by many monarchists. Mr. Morley, at Bristol, pointed sadly to the fact that "the men who desired organic changes" had stood aloof from all agitation against the new title, for they knew a precedent was being created to which they could point in the future." With the mass of the people the effect has been very salutary. It has made them—while they have remained silent in contemptuous indifference—feel that the title of the sovereign is theirs, to mould as they please; it has taught them how easily the throne may be overturned; with some, it has roused them from habitually to fierce antagonism, and has transformed them into Republicans. I insert the following letter which appears to-day in the North of England Critic, a leading north-country paper, to show Americans how rapidly feeling is spreading, and that they may be prepared to hear of quickly coming changes:—

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE CRITIC AND REVIEW:

"Sir,—Perhaps you would not like to be responsible for all the opinions in my letter; yet I beg you, without assuming any responsibility, to permit me to say what I think of this new title the Queen has begged and obtained.

"I have never had a very exalted opinion of Her Majesty's character since the time I left off reading those goody-goody books published for Sunday reading, which used frequently to make the Queen a subject of sycophantic laudation. Since I gave up those mischievous books and took to reading truth, I have always thought the Queen a very mean and grasping woman; and her recent conduct has confirmed me in that opinion.

"We have been accustomed to think that the days of monarchical tyranny are past; but this new title-affair shows to a demonstration that the old, bad spirit that dwelt in the British Solomon and his unfortunate son, that showed itself so lamentably in George III., still dwells in his descendant Victoria. The spirit, I say, is a bad one: it is the spirit of tyranny, and must be met by the same heroism that formerly restrained its foolish efforts to enslave the nation. The spirit that Victoria has manifested in assuming the title of Empress in the teeth of the nation is the same spirit that cost Charles I. his head, James II. his throne, and George III. the American Colonies.

"Whenever that tyrannical principle has appeared in England terrible calamities have quickly followed. Charles I. ascended the throne in peace, but in a few years he closed his career on the scaffold; his son James acceded in a comparative calm, but was soon compelled to decamp; George III. began his reign with an extensive empire; he closed his long and tyrannical life with a nation well-nigh bankrupt of men and money, and the larger portion of his dominions rent from his empire. The encroachments of the crown have in times past been met with determined opposition; it remains to be seen if Englishmen will submit in the present case.

"I cannot regard the assumption of the new title as anything less than a challenge to England and an insult to India. I expect that both countries will resent the deed. To the people of India, if they have human feelings, the new title must be odious, since it reminds them in such a reckless manner of their forcible subjugation to a foreign rule. The people of England cannot regard the change as anything less than a revolution; and patriots will probable henceforth work for a counter-revolution which shall once and for all sweep the crown away, never to trouble the nation again.

"You, Mr. Editor, may not agree with me; your paper is moderate, and so, I suppose, are you. But it seems to me that since the Queen has so grossly insulted the nation, it is now the duty of every true lover of his country to do his best to render the crown ridiculous and hateful in the sight of the people. I think it my own duty to propagate sedition as the most appropriate reply to the Queen's insulting action. For me, henceforth, loyalty to the throne is gone; for the future I will be loyal only to the people.

ANTI-IMPERIALIST."

Such a letter would have appeared in no "moderate" paper a year—nay, three months—ago. The shameless untruth with which the title has been forced on the nation is also stirring up bitter anger. What can have become of British honor when British statesmen act as ours have lately done? The vote of censure which will be defeated in the House of Commons on Thursday next will be passed by an overwhelming majority in the country. The Critic remarks in an editorial:—

"We hear frequently strong and wholesale denunciations of American corruptions; and they merit denunciation. But let those who would find fault with other nations look at home. A more corrupt government than our own scarcely exists. This new title, for example, has been forced upon the country by the sheer force of falsehood and imposition. The conduct of our present rulers constitutes a national calamity."

Englishmen take a long time to provoke, but, once thoroughly aroused, are apt not to be easily checked. Our monster petition, against any further grants to the Royal Family until Parliament knows how much they have got, lies ready for presentation. It figures as the petition of "Charles Bradlaugh, Annie Besant, Charles Watts, and 102,934 others," and is a gentle little thing of nearly a mile long. It is rolled on a strong mahogany pole, and is decorated with scarlet ribbon, our Republican color. The further grant to be asked for the imperial Prince of Wales is to be of £50,000, and we shall present our petition as against that grant.

The world-ecclesiastical is hard at work; there is a sweet custom among the pious of meeting in solemn convalescence during the month of May, and taking counsel together. London suffers under a plague of parsons, as Egypt under the locusts in days gone by. From the many speeches made at these gatherings I select, as a gem, a few sentences spoken by Canon Miller at the meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society. He stated that a London City Missionary "had spent some days in house to house visitation, and in not one lived there any one who made a profession of religion. What a shocking state of things that displayed! . . . He looked upon the present state of the Education Question with dread. He had no faith in the ethical results, to say nothing of the spiritual results, of teaching religion without teaching religious dogma." Poor Canon Miller! He will soon not only have lost dogmatic teaching, but also religious teaching, out of the schools. Already the religious papers speak with dread of the "coming educational triumph of the Secular party."

Many charges are now being delivered by the Bishops to their clergy, and the most noticeable point in these is the cry they all contain—so far as I have seen them—of the prevalence of infidelity and the growing scepticism of the day. The Bishop of Ripon can only console himself with the hope that it is a sign of the coming chariot-wheels of the Son of Man. Those wheels have been for a long while on the way, but they never seem to get any nearer. Can the Son of Man have lost his way, or mistaken some other planet for our earth?

Mr. Moncure D. Conway writes me that a sharp attack has just been made upon him by Christian bigotry. Mr. Conway, being one of the wicked, has been growing and developing like a green bay tree; in fact, he has opened wide his path, and has "enlarged his borders like hell." In Camden Town, no longer content with a modest little iron chapel, his vaulting ambition has sprung upon the Athenæum, and, instead of overreaching himself, he has the impertinence to fill it on Sunday evenings. One Rev. R. Glover's righteous soul is vexed within itself, and he hath raised up his voice against the Conway abomination of desolation. Mr. Conway writes: "Our crime is, I, that we have enlarged our tent, and left the retirement of the little iron church where Orthodox steam-whistles justified their Sabbath violation, and even made it holy, by interrupting our performances; and, II., in going to the handsome Athenæum, under Glover's very nose, under shadow of his very steeple; and, III., in taking away some of his lambs, inasmuch that one Sunday evening, as I am informed, when the Athenæum was crowded, Glover had only four hearers." No wonder Glover explodes; what clerical soul could bear such trials unmoved? Job himself was better off; he had his three friends, Elihu, and his wife, to say nothing of God. A memorial was presented to the committee of the Athenæum to ask them to withhold the use of the hall; the committee decline to do anything of the kind. In the first place they don't want to, as the hall has been hitherto let to all lecturers without respect of creed; in the second place they couldn't if they wanted to, as the hall has been taken for two years by the crafty Conway. So mightily groweth Rationalism and prevails.

Continued from Page 257.

essay, he says: "The central doctrine of Christianity is for me no longer true. Once I felt the full power of Christian faith; now I cleave to a faith diviner still. If I am in fatal error, and rush madly into the woes denounced against Anti-Christ, even so must it be; but come what may, let me never plunge into the deeper damnation of moral faithlessness, or make my heart the coffin of a murdered truth!" But what if, by his denial of Christ, that should be just what he is doing? The writers represented in this volume are D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney. The long and short of this sort of Free Religionism is simply the apotheosis of egotism. On the supposition that each man was his own creator, and created the rest of the world beside, it would be as reasonable as Christianity now is.—Chicago Advance.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—A Collection of Essays and Addresses; Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1875. pp. 424. 12 mo. $1.50.

This volume of addresses and essays, by different writers, is a good exponent of the strength of the progressive movement called the Free Religious Association. Mr. Frothingham says in the introductory—"that religion still occupies the thoughts of men as a great human concern need not be argued. It may be said to occupy them as it never did in times when it claimed an interest on grounds of its own, wholly separate from other human affairs. The religious question now makes a part of every question. There is scarcely a concern of any moment in which religion does not hold a conspicuous rank. It is debated in the highest places; it is the business of empires; it occupies the thoughts of princes and administrators; politicians make account of it; statesmen and demagogues alike take bearings of it. It haunts the scientific mind; literature cannot leave it unrecognized, philosophy finds it mingling in all its problems. The social questions that vex our age address themselves to it less directly indeed, but no less earnestly, than of old. Those who talk of the declining interest in religion cannot be close observers of the times. The forms the interest takes may have changed, but the interest was never so vital before."

The subjects are, "The Nature of Religion"; "The Unity and Universality of Religious Ideas"; "Freedom in Religion"; "Religion and Science"; "Christianity and its Definitions"; "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion"; "The Soul of Protestantism"; "Liberty and the Church in America"; "The Word Philanthropy"; "Religion as Social Force."

These questions are discussed boldly and thoroughly, and the writers seem to feel that the hour has struck when serious minds should take possession of their lawful domain; when that which stands the test of logic, should be professed by logicians.

The essays are exceedingly inspiring towards vigorous thought, hopefulness, and virtuous action.—Belfast (Me.) Age.

There are several ways of doing a thing. If a person is to be met with whom you differ you may proceed immediately to a squabble, or you may argue with him, or you may try to put yourself in his place, and judge him and his opinions, as far as may be, impartially. The different ways in which the book recently published by the Free Religious Association has been met by various "Evangelical" journals gives the text for a few remarks. The Chicago Advance recognizes its ability, but denounces its "exaggerated and really absurd notion of liberty." The Independent has nothing for it but a sneer, and dismisses it in a few short paragraphs, quoting in a withering manner Mr. Frothingham's statement that the essays "were written by different minds, in different moods, for different occasions," etc., as an indication of their lack of unity. (By the way, we think a little honest and fearless difference of opinion better than an enforced and only semi-honest unanimity.) The Christian Union of June 23 has a long and most admirable review of this book. It is not difficult to detect the hand that wrote it and the heart that inspired it. It was written by Mr. George S. Merriam, who, more than any other, has given to this paper breadth of thought, rare liberality and tolerance and sweetness of tone. He always seeks to conciliate rather than to put at arm's length,—to find a common ground rather than points of dissimilarity. He introduces his review with the expressed desire that he may be "thoroughly just" toward the book. And though he feels obliged to differ from many of the authors' conclusions, yet the whole spirit of his article is so fair and generous that even Mr. Abbot, whom Mr. Merriam feels obliged to criticize somewhat severely, must be gratified by the treatment of his essay. In short, we commend this review to all critics who suppose that the best way to notice a book from whose opinions they differ is to write a few scathing and sneering paragraphs which may show their own acuteness,—or which may not.—New York Liberal Christian, July 3, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—A Collection of Essays and Addresses Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association. Roberts Brothers, Boston, have in the binders' hands, and will soon bring out, a handsome 16mo. of 424 pages, with the above title. Its introduction treats of the "Religious Outlook." Ten papers follow, representing various phases of modern religious thought and discussion, as seen by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, Wm. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney, whose essays make 320 pages. Then follow "Voices from the Free Platform," a compilation of shorter papers and extracts, wherein most of the same writers reappear, in company with Emerson, Alcott, Celia Burleigh, Rabbi Wise, Mrs. Howe, Dr. Bartol, Wm. C. Gannett, F. B. Sanborn, Horace Seaver, et al.,—a fine array of ability, character, and wisdom. These "voices" do not all say the same thing. Each speaks for one. It is not a book which its twenty authors would wish swallowed whole. And especially does Mr. Abbot, in his declaration of war against the ugly horror which his definition makes of Christianity, stand apart—a group by himself,—though he writes here, as ever, with vigor and clearness, and with admirable candor. Through all the sharp criticism of the volume there runs a healthy spirit of affirmation, a horror of shams, and a high strain of faith in God and man, and a hope for better things. The appearance of this book makes an acquaintance of ours quite willing to stand to his record as one who asked the Unitarian Conference to adopt a resolution, not of agreement or fellowship with the Free Religious Association, but recognizing the honorable service it has rendered by its contributions to religious thought. At any rate, it might be fair to read, then judge. Price $2.—Boston Christian Register, May 22, 1875.

We would ask Bishop Gilbert Haven, and all other persons ignorant of the aims, spirit, and character of the Free Religious movement, to peruse the volume called Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, just published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. It is a collection of essays and addresses, edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association, and comprises "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. Frothingham; "The Nature of Religion," by D. A. Wasson; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas," by S. Longfellow; "Freedom in Religion," by S. Johnson; "Religion and Science," by J. Weiss; "Christianity and its Definitions," by W. J. Potter; "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion," by F. E. Abbot; "The Soul of Protestantism," by O. B. Frothingham; "Liberty and the Church in America," by J. W. Chadwick; "The Word Philanthropy," by T. W. Higginson; "Religion as a Social Force," by E. D. Cheney; with "Voices from the Free Platform" by a multitude of honest and upright thinkers—the whole filled with a reverent and inquiring spirit that promises the best good of the human family. The volume may be termed a protest against dogmatism in matters of speculative thought. The writers are men of character and brains, and they are only suggestive of the wide strata of independent thinking which now veins the entire ecclesiastical world. It is a book for divinity students, as well as for those who have established their positions, and must do much to mould the thought and teachings of those who hereafter are to wield the influence of the pulpit. To all who desire to know the real purpose of the Free Religionists nothing can come more to their wish than this volume.—Boston Commonwealth.

FREE RELIGION.—The essays and addresses comprised in the volume entitled Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, are contributed by members of the Free Religious Association by a committee of which it is edited. The introductory entitled "The Religious Outlook" gives the key-note to the views of the more advanced wing of the Association, and in the initials O. B. F. attached to it we recognize the signature of one of the ablest of its members. In this paper the theological epoch is pronounced near its close, and the disposition to discuss religion in its political relation and the establishment of the scientific method are cited as characteristics of the new era. The decline of the spiritual as well as the temporal power of the Romish Church is insisted on, and the weakness of Protestantism is also maintained, and these results are affirmed, rather too positively it seems to us, to be traced to the alleged breaking-up of the Christian system. The various essays in the volume, by such men as Wasson, Weiss, Longfellow, Abbot, Higginson, and Johnson, are marked by boldness of thought and cogency of reasoning, and however we may feel disposed to dissent from some of their conclusions, it is impossible not to recognize the sincerity and earnestness with which they are reached. There is something more than mere negation in these essays; they reveal a positive belief in God and humanity; and although Christians may feel constrained to dissent from their speculations, they will admit their elevation of sentiment and thought.—Boston Globe.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—The title-page of this neatly gotten-up volume is a sign that therein may be found ideas, some fresh, some very old and very good, all radical in the best meaning of that word. The essays embraced within its covers are written by John Weiss, Samuel Longfellow, Ednah D. Cheney, T. W. Higginson, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, David A. Wasson, Samuel Johnson, William J. Potter, and Francis E. Abbot. They cover a wide range, are pregnant with thought, and advance the latest views entertained by the Free Religionists. Whatever opinion may be held of the theories of these men and women none who know them will doubt their sincerity or their love of truth. The essays, too, are of interest as studies in style.

The purpose of the book is set forth in the following extract from the preface, written by the Rev. O. B. Frothingham:—

"This volume of essays printed under the auspices of the Free Religious Association, written by different minds, in different moods, for different occasions, working without the least reference to each other, and associated here by no other bond than that of a common feeling of intellectual need, a common persuasion of their personal responsibility to meet it as they can, and a united conviction that sooner or later it will be met triumphantly,—is thrown out as their contribution towards the religion of the future."—Portland (Me.) Press.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association, Boston, Roberts Brothers. The introduction to this volume, written by O. B. Frothingham, assumes that there is, in our time, a great decline of interest in theological dogmas, and an increase of interest in religion; and this volume, he says, which comes from different minds, acting at different times, and without concert, is given to the public "as their contribution to the religion of the future." We suspect, however, that he really means what he and they dream of as the religious dogmas of the future, for pure religion itself is always the same. The book contains essays or addresses by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, William J. Potter, Francis E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney. To these is added a collection of extracts in the same strain, which is entitled: "Voices from the Free Platform." Those who desire to understand the drift of thought among the "Free Religionists," represented by the men we have named, should read this book carefully. There are differences among them, but their general tendency is the same. The papers here printed are finely written, and whatever is peculiar to the writers, in thought or feeling, gets full and free expression. For sale by Grout & Putnam.—Worcester (Mass.) Spy.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION is the appropriate title of a Collection of Essays and Addresses by some of the most able and brilliant thinkers of the Free Religious school (if such an expression is allowable). The purpose of the volume is to give an answer to the often-asked question, "What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?" The opening paper treats of the "Religious Outlook." Ten papers follow, representing various phases of modern religious thought and discussion, as seen by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, Wm. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney, whose essays make 320 pages. Then follow "Voices from the Free Platform," a compilation of shorter papers and extracts, wherein most of the same writers reappear in company with Emerson, Alcott, Celia Burleigh, Rabbi Wise, Mrs. Howe, Dr. Bartol, Wm. C. Gannett, F. B. Sanborn, Horace Seaver, and others,—an array of talent and character not often found in a single volume. Those persons, whatever their theological bias, who aim to keep themselves familiar with all phases of the religious thought of the day will find the volume invaluable, and every reader will find something to help and uplift him in the spirit of faith in God and man which runs through its pages.—Vermont Phoenix, Brattleboro.

Continued on Next Page.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—The character of this book is shadowed forth in its introduction. We are there told that "Christianity is on trial," and that science is its judge. That its great cardinal doctrines have been explained away, and that those who do not believe in it are "the most intelligent portion of the human race." Further on we have a picture of society not flattering to the community from which the writer comes. The Christian system is divorced, he tells us, from popular life. The influence of religion on the practical concerns of men is scarcely perceptible, etc. He should leave the Hub and move West. If society in Boston is as he describes it the West is better. His picture may be overdrawn, but possibly its outline is accurate. The book before us will help to fill up the canvas, for if any teaching tends to bring about chaos in society it is of that class which crops out here and there in this introduction. We are inclined to the thought that possibly the writer does not know what Christianity is. He looks for something unusual, grand, godlike, which shall "confront the world with a majesty undaunted by insult and a sweetness unruffled by neglect." With some such ideal he goes searching the world, while "pure religion and undefiled before God" is on every side of him. A little Bible-study would not hurt him.—Cincinnati Herald and Presbyter.

The Free Religious Association of Boston has edited a collection of essays and addresses just published by Roberts Brothers, entitled Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. Here are some of the names of the writers: D. A. Wasson, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, T. W. Higginson, and others of that following. It is heretical enough when one of them alone writes, but this combination of the ungodly makes a pack of heresy that would cause the hair of every orthodox reader to stand on end in horror and dismay. The writing is brilliant, the thoughts are vigorous and aggressive, the style is bold, but it is meat for strong men, and the babes of the word had best let it alone. As a counterpoise for so dangerous and so Pagan a book, the same publishers have printed Through the Year, a volume showing as devout and gentle a spirit of unaffected Christianity as we have seen for a long time. It is written by one whose aim is to help others to live purely and truly, according to the noblest standards of Christian faith, rather than to suggest doubts and difficulties of belief. It is marked by a most tolerant, liberal, and catholic spirit. Its author is Rev. H. N. Powers, rector of St. John's Church, Chicago. John P. Morton & Co. have both volumes for sale.—Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal, May 30, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—Boston: Roberts Brothers. The Free Religious Association introduce discourses by Messrs. Wasson, Weiss, Longfellow, Frothingham, Higginson, Abbot, and others, with a statement that Christianity is itself on trial before Science; is discredited in dogma, thinned and hesitant, and repudiated by millions of the most intelligent. So far as the mere literary performance is concerned, few volumes of sermons from any sect of all against which it is directed show equal knowledge and ability. Science, philosophy, history, and the choicest belles-lettres erudition, are manifest in a remarkable degree. The zeal against declared error is diverted from personal rancor and that odium theologicum that has been the bane of religious argument always and everywhere. The conclusion is plainly held by all of its advocates to be an enlargement of human freedom and happiness that must lead to greater activity in practical life and enjoyment in social, and that is the summary of every good conceived by any creed. It would not perhaps be difficult to point to expressions by one of the contributors that oppose those of others; and yet the whole current is uniform, and there is a singular agreement in reason as in inference, considering the numbers who speak.—Philadelphia North American.

On the principle that it is always wise and prudent to study your enemy's weapons and plan of attack, we could advise many to look into Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, who would not feel attracted to such a book for other reasons. It is a collection of essays by leading Free Religionists, edited and published by a Committee of the Free Religious Association, and so sent out, it is reasonable to infer, as a virtual confession of the radical faith. If Evangelical men are not quite so much afraid of the radicals, perhaps, as they were a year or two ago, there is just as much occasion to know their ground, and it is right to know it from their own teaching. The ten or more essays thus collected certainly afford stimulating reading. If there is little reverence for revealed religion, there is a great deal for some of those ends toward which revealed religion is striving. Those who are well established in the truth may derive much benefit from hearing what Mr. Frothingham has to say about "The Soul of Protestantism"; or Mrs. Cheney on "Religion as Social Force"; or Mr. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion." Among the other contributors are Francis E. Abbot, T. W. Higginson, and John Weiss.—Boston Congregationalist.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION is the title given to essays and addresses by members of the Free Religious Association, published by Messrs. Roberts Brothers. It contains an introductory essay on "The Religious Outlook," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham, who appears to have been its editor. Among the subjects discussed in it are "The Nature of Religion," by D. A. Wasson; "Freedom in Religion," by Samuel Johnson; "Religion and Science," by John Weiss; "The Soul of Protestantism," by O. B.

Frothingham; "Liberty and the Church in America," by John W. Chadwick; "The Word Philanthropy," by Thomas W. Higginson; and other papers are furnished by Samuel Longfellow, William J. Potter, Francis E. Abbot, and Ednah D. Cheney. At the close of the volume are briefer extracts entitled "Voices from the Free Religious Platform," to which, in addition to the above-named writers, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Celia Burleigh, Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, Julia Ward Howe, C. A. Bartol, Wm. C. Gannett, Lucy Stone, A. Bronson Alcott, F. B. Sanborn, Wendell Phillips, Lucretia Mott, and others contribute. The intellectual power of the book we suppose no one will be likely to question.—Boston Gazette.

People want to know, the Free Religious Association thinks, what its principles are, and so it has published in a book entitled Freedom and Fellowship in Religion (Roberts Brothers) ten essays and speeches by some of its members, of whom Messrs. Higginson, Frothingham, Abbot, and Potter may be mentioned. Mr. Frothingham furnishes the Preface, in which he declares the existence of fatal premonitions of failure in the Roman Catholic, the Protestant Episcopal, the Unitarian, and other churches, and predicts a glorious future for his own band. The essays, in subject and treatment, are tiresomely like their predecessors for the eight or ten years of the Association's existence. They will in their collected form unsettle the faith of a few, perhaps; will point a needed moral in an orthodox sermon now and then; and will show to the public what some members of the unbelievers' caravansary happen to believe today. Perhaps they cannot better be described than in President Frothingham's own words, which declare them to be "written by different minds, in different moods, for different occasions, working without the least reference to one another."—New York Independent, June 3, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—A Collection of Essays and Addresses. Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association, Boston. Roberts Brothers. 1875. $1.50. pp. 424.—The book contains essays by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, John Weiss, T. W. Higginson, and others, on the topics which interest people who are so "advanced" as to have gotten out of sight of the rest of us. O. B. Frothingham writes an introduction which very well sets forth the snarl he has gotten his own thinking into, and demonstrates the lofty qualities of his egotism. For instance: "The chaotic state of opinion [in O. B. F.] on religious questions is simply the result of the general breaking up of the Christian system." It is wonderful how complacently two or three bright men, with a thousand or so of fools for followers, can assume that the tortures of their restless personal vanity are the sighs of the human race. Several of these essays assume that Christianity is not breaking up, and the one by Mr. Higginson has nothing in the world to do with the title of the book. It is simply a scholarly sketch of the history of the word philanthropy.—New York Methodist.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This volume contains ten essays or addresses by members of the Free Religious Association, with an introductory chapter upon "The Religious Outlook," and "Voices from the Free Platform." The writers are Messrs. Frothingham, Wasson, Potter, Weiss, Abbot, Longfellow, Johnson, Chadwick, Higginson, and Mrs. Cheney. They clearly indicate the meaning of the Free Religious Association, which invites the freest inquiry and the largest discussion of religious problems. The topics discussed are: "The Nature of Religion"; "Freedom in Religion"; "Religion and Science"; "Christianity and its Definitions"; "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion"; and upon these themes the writers are outspoken, and leave small doubt as to their opinions. They all look for the disappearance of Christianity, and the prevalence of a higher faith; Free Religion, a higher faith, says Mr. Abbot, "which has no history, save the history of the human spirit, striving to work out its destiny in freedom. It has no list of doctrines to teach, no church to extend, no rites to perform, no Bible to expound, no Christ to obey."—New Bedford Mercury.

A Committee of the Free Religious Association has collected a volume of essays and addresses by leading rationalists, which are published by Roberts Brothers, of Boston, with the title Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. Among the authors of the papers appear D. A. Wasson, John Weiss, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah Dean Cheney. The articles consist either in bitter assaults on the various forms of Christian belief, or glorifications of the vague religion of the good, the beautiful, and the true, which the writers propose to substitute for Christianity. It is conceivable that Christianity may give place to general unbelief, but it is not conceivable that any considerable part of humanity will ever find rest or satisfaction in the moonshine of rationalistic religion. The history of the world shows no precedent of such a thing in all the mutations of human opinion which it describes. There is some excellent rhetorizing in these addresses, and the propositions advanced elude criticism by their vagueness. Whitney & Adams have the book.—Springfield (Mass.) Daily Union, May 20, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is the title of a collection of essays and addresses, printed under the auspices of the Free Religious Association, and which best introduces itself to the reader as "written by different minds, in different moods, for different occasions, working without the least reference to one another, and associated here by no other bond than that of a common feeling of intellectual need, a common persuasion of their personal responsibility to meet it as they can and a united conviction that sooner or later it will be met adequately and triumphantly,—and thrown out as their contribution to the religion of the future."

To those who are fond of, or sympathize with, the religious opinions or speculations of Emerson, Frothingham, Higginson, Abbot, and other well-known radicals; the volume will be found congenial and, we doubt not, pleasant reading, giving as it does their views on the important subjects which they have been discussing on the platform and through the press. Published by Roberts Brothers, Boston, and for sale in Dover by J. M. Gatehouse.—Dover (N. H.) Enquirer.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This volume of essays, written by different minds in different moods, for different occasions, working without the least reference to one another, and associated here by no other bond than that of a common feeling of intellectual need, is intended by its publishers to lay the foundation of a religion inclusive of all special faiths, but more intellectual, more uplifting and commanding than any one. The present chaotic state of opinion on religious questions—we are told—is simply the result of the general breaking-up of the Christian system. Intelligence being thrown upon its own resources to find a path over heaps of ruin looks in every direction for an issue out from this general chaos. Spiritualism, materialism, atheism, positivism, sentimentalism of every mode, fanaticism of every phase, mark the efforts that are making to clear the piles of dogma, tradition, and ignorance that cumber the ground on which the "Free Religious Association" proposes to build the Church of the Future.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—The introduction to the half score of papers composing this volume is written by the well-known O. B. Frothingham, and the key-note he strikes is that Christianity as a special form of the religious faith of mankind has outlived its best days,—that the time has come to lay the foundations of the religion universal, all-embracing and rational, of the future. Carrying out this thought, David A. Wasson contributes an essay on "The Nature of Religion"; Samuel Longfellow, brother of the poet, writes of "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas"; Samuel Johnson writes of "Freedom of Religion"; John Weiss of "Religion and Science"; and other papers follow by William J. Potter, Francis E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney. The volume as a whole admirably, and in a most attractive form, represents the latest developments of Free Religious thought among the advanced Unitarians of Boston.—Buffalo Courier.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This volume comes from the Boston school of theologians and rationalists. It embraces a series of papers from some of their ablest thinkers, presenting various phases of their religious philosophy. Whether we call it religious philosophy or philosophical religion, we should accord full recognition to its large element of human philosophy. The introductory paper on "The Religious Outlook" is by Rev. O. B. Frothingham; and among the other essays are "The Nature of Religion," by David A. Wasson; "Religion and Science," by John Weiss; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas," by Samuel Longfellow; "The Soul of Protestantism," by O. B. Frothingham; "The Word Philanthropy," by Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and a half dozen others. The shining intellectuality of these essays is sufficiently indicated by their authors' names. Their views are presented with a vigor and acumen which makes them attractive. For sale by Durkee & Jenkins.—Journal (city unknown).

The Chicago Advance, while admitting that the essays included under the title of Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, edited by the Free Religious Association, are "all well written," and have "much in them to be admired," giving "utterance and noble emphasis to certain truths which we all admit," yet comes to the conclusion that "they possess a common, all-pervading fault,—an unnatural, unreasonable, exaggerated and really absurd notion of liberty." It further adds this somewhat harsh and we think uncalled for criticism: "The long and short of this sort of Free Religionism is simply the apotheosis of Egotism." The Advance writer is unfortunately unable to put himself in the place of any of these Radical essayists. We should say they were no more egotistical than the majority of Evangelical Christians who fancy that there has been for them some special and miraculous interposition, and that they, out of a whole world of sinners, have been deemed worthy to be saved.—New York Liberal Christian, June 26, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is a collection of essays and addresses by a number of distinguished writers on the subject of freedom in religion, embracing the names of Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, O. B. Frothingham, and a number of other well-known literati. The title indicates at once the nature of the papers, although it may convey the impression that will not be borne out by a thorough reading of the book. While the views expressed by the different essayists may not find ready acceptance among the more orthodox, there is a large and rapidly growing class which seizes with eagerness upon anything looking towards religious unification, and which promises to end the uncharitable feeling that sometimes exists between different sects. To this class Freedom and Fellowship in Religion will prove highly acceptable, because it embodies the views of some of the most advanced thinkers of the day on the interesting question in a concise and well-expressed form.—Washington (D.C.) Chronicle.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—The title above explains the character of the book, and the following is a list of the essays, with the names of the authors: Introductory, "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. Frothingham; "The Nature of Religion," by David A. Wasson; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas," by Samuel Longfellow; "Freedom in Religion," by Samuel Johnson; "Religion and Science," by John Weiss; "Christianity and its Demands," by William J. Potter; "The Genius of Christianity and Free Religion," by Francis Ellingwood Abbot; "The Soul of Protestantism," by O. B. Frothingham; "Liberty and the Church in America," by John W. Chadwick; "The Word Philanthropy," by Thomas Wentworth Higginson; "Religion as a Social Force," by Ednah D. Cheney; and about seventy pages filled principally with short extracts from the speeches of outspoken Free Religionists. For sale in Waterville, by J. F. Percival & Co.—Waterville (Me.) Mail.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION (Roberts Brothers) is a collection of bright essays by the Free Religionists of the Boston school of theology. It concedes the intense excitement now prevailing on religion, and seeks to absorb this sentiment into its own tiny being. As well might a sponge on the Fundy coast think it was absorbing the waters that rush up that bay. This religious tide is infinitely vaster than all such negatives and anti-faiths. True freedom, true fellowship, and true religion are not found except in the Gospel. These brilliant talks prove it. They are the best of their sort—Weiss, Frothingham, Emerson, and such—clean, cold, dead and comely as a well-embalmed corpse.

"Yet not for all unfaith can see Would I those churchless thinkers be."

"Oh, for a touch of Christ!" one cries out, as he reads these handsome pages. Read, and hasten to Christ.—Boston Zion's Herald.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—In these eleven essays and addresses, and an appended chapter entitled "Voices from the Free Platform," we have a pretty clear exposition of what the Free Religious Association do not believe; and, so far as their negations will allow, an abstract of what they agree to. The authors are Wasson, Weiss, Potter, Johnson, O. B. Frothingham, Samuel Longfellow, Col. Higginson, Chadwick, Cheney and F. E. Abbot, all of whom are representatives of the Boston Radical Club and Free Religionists. Their main object is to show how little religion is necessary to become "very religious" after their kind; and to prove that Christianity and especially Protestantism have had their day. It is difficult to ascertain from these oracles what good beyond mere philanthropy there is in any kind of religion that men now believe.—New York Christian Intelligencer.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is a volume of 424 pages, made up of papers by various authors, with the object of advocating a greater freedom of individual thought in religion. These authors are such people as David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, Wm. J. Potter, Francis Ellingwood Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Charles H. Malcolm, Celia Burleigh, C. D. B. Mills, Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, Julia Ward Howe, C. A. Bartol, Wm. O. Gannett, Lucy Stone, A. Bronson Alcott, F. B. Sanborn, Wendell Phillips, Horace Seaver, Lucretia Mott, and others. These authors are vigorous thinkers and writers, and the book will be read by many who cannot accept all that is said.—Portsmouth (N. H.) Journal.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This volume comprises a collection of essays and addresses, edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association. The spirit of the volume may be learned from the following sentences: "Christianity is now on trial at the bar behind which it had sat for a thousand years; and the Judge on the bench is the scientific spirit it had so often remanded to the dungeon or consigned to the flames. Its dogma is discredited in high places of thought. Of its great cardinal doctrines, some have been explained till they have scarcely more than a name to live; others have been in their dogmatic sense repudiated. Millions still profess them, but millions do not; and the millions who do not are the most intelligent portion of the human race."—Toronto paper (unknown).

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION is the title of a "Collection of Essays and Addresses" edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association. An introductory paper on "The Religious Outlook" is by Mr. Frothingham. There are essays on "The Nature of Religion," by D. A. Wasson; "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas," by Samuel Longfellow; "The Word Philanthropy," by T. W. Higginson, with other contributions from John Weiss, John W. Chadwick, and Ednah D. Cheney. At the end of the volume there is a chapter of "Voices from a Free Platform," which includes selections from the writings of Emerson, Weiss, Frothingham, Wendell Phillips, F. B. Sanborn, Dr. Bartol, and others. Roberts Brothers, Boston, Publishers.—New York Evening Post.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association, Boston. Roberts Brothers (Dawson Brothers.) $1.50.

This is a series of essays by modern Unitarians and freethinkers glorifying "Free Religion in contradistinction to Christianity." Among the names of the authors we notice those of Longfellow, Weiss, Frothingham, Higginson, Emerson, Alcott, and Phillips. Various shades of belief and turns of philosophical thought are of course represented. Some speak reverently, others profanely, as they try to justify themselves for rejecting "Christ and him crucified," and all join in elevating human reason high above revelation.—Montreal (Canada) Daily Witness, July 28, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP is the title of a book containing a collection of essays by several well-known leaders of what is known as the "Free Religious Movement," and published under the auspices of the Free Religious Association. It is scarcely necessary in this community to name the gentlemen who furnish these essays. We have a suspicion, but we are not certain, that some of them have been delivered here on Sunday afternoons as lectures. At all events, the culture and literary ability of the prominent apostles of Free Religion are conceded, and a volume of them is sure of readers beyond the circle of those who sympathize with their views as to the constitution of the Church.—Boston Daily Advertiser, May 22, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION is the title of a collection of essays and addresses edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association, and if anybody is curious to see what progress has been made in reconstructing religion by the freethinkers, so as to accommodate it to the revelations and demands of science, they will find in this book all that David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, John Weiss, William J. Potter, O. B. Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Ednah D. Cheney, and other religious reformers of the advanced school—that is to say all that the theistic naturalists—have to tell them on the subject, which after all is not much.—St. Paul (Minn.), Pioneer-Press, June 27, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—The title of the miscellany at the close of the volume, "Voices from the Free Platform," would have been perhaps a more appropriate title. The ablest thinkers of the liberal church are here represented; David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, John Weiss, O. B. Frothingham, John W. Chadwick, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and others. Such subjects as freedom in religion, the genius of Christianity, the soul of Protestantism, the nature of religion, are discussed with boldness and vigor. The miscellany consists of brief extracts from the principal liberal writers on various topics. Troy: H. B. Nims & Co.—Troy Daily Times, May 27, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This series of essays is contributed by such writers as O. B. Frothingham, John Weiss, Colonel Higginson, Ednah D. Cheney, Samuel Johnson, and others. The essays are devoted to a laudation of natural religion as opposed to all other forms of religious life. The divinity of Christ is denied, although he is admitted to have been a good man. The book abounds in many high-spun phrases, which, however, when analyzed, seem to mean nothing. The human mind is placed above revelation, and an intellectual system of religion is found which, in high-sounding phrases, looks well on paper, but which seems to possess no practical basis.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION is a collection of essays and addresses edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association, and published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. The longer articles are by David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, John Weiss, William J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney, all prominent leaders of liberal Christianity. There are several shorter selections included in the volume, the whole making a book of about 425 pages. It will form an acceptable addition to the literature of Free Religion, containing as it does many of the best thoughts of leaders in the faith. Coggeshall has it.—Lowell Courier.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—A collection of ten essays read at different times before the Free Religious Association of Boston by the Rev. O. B. Frothingham, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, Wm. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and E. D. Cheney. There is little in common between the writers except that they agree in denouncing dogmatic theology and advocating rationalism, or as they prefer to call it, "Free Religion." The essays are on different subjects and in very different styles, but all are ably written and evidently by men of deep conviction.—Detroit Post.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—Twelve essays, including one chapter of extracts from platform speeches, by Rev. O. B. Frothingham, David A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, Wm. J. Potter, Francis E. Abbot, John W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Ednah D. Cheney. That the essays are able will be admitted by all readers; that they are advanced views of religion as compared with the orthodox standard will also be conceded. To our mind much that is good and true in them is mixed plentifully with that which is neither good nor true.—Providence Press.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is a series of essays by modern Unitarians and Free-thinkers glorifying "Free Religion in contradistinction to Christianity." Among the names of the authors we notice those of Longfellow, Weiss, Frothingham, Higginson, Emerson, Alcott, and Phillips. Various shades of belief and turns of philosophical thought are of course represented. Some speak reverently, others profanely, as they try to justify themselves for rejecting "Christ and him crucified," and all join in elevating human reason high above revelation.—Montreal Witness.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—This is a book full of deep thought, earnest strivings for the real truth, and the best method of finding and keeping it. It contains essays upon vital subjects, written by some of the soundest men in our country. It is a book to be studied, though with a firm faith, and considered carefully and well. There is in it a vein of deep earnestness and strength which demands care and attention.—Montpelier (Vt.) Argus and Patriot.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.—Published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. This is a collection of essays and addresses on religious topics, edited by a committee of the Free Religious Association of Boston. It contains articles by Wasson, Samuel Johnson, Samuel Longfellow, John Weiss, and others equally well known as Free Religionists.—St. Louis Globe and Democrat.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP is the title of a volume of essays just published by Roberts Brothers, in the interest of the Free Religious Association. It has an introductory essay by O. B. Frothingham, setting forth the purposes of that body. Other contributors are Potter, Weiss, Higginson, Abbot, Gannett, and Mrs. Cheney.—Liberal Worker, Sharon (Wis.), June 2, 1875.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP is the title of a collection of articles by prominent religious radicals, such as John Weiss, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney. The leading essay is by O. B. Frothingham. Roberts Brothers publish it.—New York Golden Age, May 8, 1875.

In a Californian Eden, by Joaquin Miller, and Freedom and Fellowship, by T. W. Higginson, are in the press of Roberts Brothers.—New York Nation, May 20, 1875.

SABBA'-DAY HOUSES IN 1776.—An important and interesting adjunct of the meeting-house, in some parts of the country, was the "Sabba'-day house." Comfort, being carefully shut out of the meeting-house itself, was only thus rudely provided for in such subordinate structures. The Sabba'-day house was a family affair, generally comprising but a single apartment, perhaps fifteen feet square, with windows and a fire-place. It was very plainly and sparsely furnished. Chairs for the old people and benches for the children stood round the walls, and a table in the centre might hold the Bible and a few religious books and pamphlets; while at one side shelves contained dishes for cooking and eating. Sometimes the Sabba'-day house was mounted above a shed within which the horse could be sheltered. A group of such cabins standing about the meeting-house added not a little to the picturesqueness of the spot, and their use conducted greatly to the convenience and comfort of Sabbath worship, especially in winter. The family able to keep a Sabba'-day house drove directly thither on Sabbath mornings, warmed themselves up by a hot fire without, and quite likely by a hot drink within; and here spent the intermission, with further wholesome regard for the wants of the inner man. The better class of these Sabba'-day houses were whitewashed, some of them were double, and to the truth of history it must be said that between Sabbaths they occasionally furnished the wild young men of the parish with secure haunts for unseemly carousals.—Edward Abbott's "Revolutionary Times".

FUNERALS IN 1776.—Funerals touched weddings at the point of feasting, and were often very expensive, showy, and pompous occasions. In some parts of the country, especially among the Dutch of Long Island and New York, it was the custom for a young man to lay by his earnings after coming of age, until a sufficient sum had accumulated to provide for him a "respectable" funeral when he should come to die. Oftentimes the young burgher would reserve a half of the portion of wine which he had liberally laid in for his marriage, to be used at the funeral of himself or his wife. Special invitations were sent out for funerals as for parties. The clergymen, pall-bearers, and physicians attending, were provided with scarfs and gloves, and sometimes each with a mourning ring; while the feast which followed the interment at the house of the relatives of the deceased, elaborate with cold roast meats, wines, liquors, and pipes, was not unfrequently an occasion of coarse excesses, sometimes descending into hilarious and noisy demonstrations. A "respectable" funeral of this description might cost perhaps a thousand dollars; while the funeral of the first wife of Hon. Stephen Van Rensselaer is said to have cost not less than twenty thousand dollars.—Edward Abbott's "Revolutionary Times".

A LITTLE five-year-old Wisconsin boy was heard saying to his little brother: "I know what Amen means. It means 'you musn't touch it.' Mamma told me so." Which was his childish but literal interpretation of "so let it be."

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom. Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gift edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

DR. EDWARD E. DENNIS-

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

—AT—

ERINSTEIN, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

NUMBER LIMITED TO THIRTY.

T H E

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3 50.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. K. Cooper... 25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Beber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPH-

ER AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

T H E

INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPE. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE'S Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)...$1.50

CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION.....1.00

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS.....1.00

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND

OTHER DISCOURSES.....1.00

LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER.....3.00

THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM

IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp.,

with steel portrait of the author)... 2.50

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and head-quarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC REEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
E. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1876.

WHOLE No. 337.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE Old Catholics cannot agree on the question of the celibacy of the priesthood.

HENRY A. SOLOMON, of Brooklyn, was recently arrested for embezzling funds in the office of the Registrar of Appeals. The Tribune says: "He has always borne a good reputation, was looked upon as an exemplary and pious young man, and was one of the ushers and ticket-takers at Moody and Sankey's services in the Brooklyn Rink."

ONE SUBSCRIBER thus wrote lately to another: "I am glad to see THE INDEX speaking so plainly of the farce in Stewart's case. Wise as he was in piling up wealth, how foolish in disposing of it! . . . In regard to the Centennial Fair, how will the directors justify themselves in permitting the sale of intoxicating drinks, while they are so pious regarding the Sabbath?"

FRANCE is now brought face to face with the "clerical question." "The question of Church and State," says the Parisian correspondent of the New York Tribune, "is, as we all know, opened, and must be in some measure solved within the next few months." It has been precipitated by the proposal to "inquire" into the election of M. de Mun, the "Champion of the Syllabus."

THE MANCHESTER, N. H., Daily Union of April 10 says editorially: "We do not regard the common English Bible as in any sense a 'sectarian' book, nor the reading of it in schools as 'sectarian' religious instruction." That is precisely the construction which will be put on Mr. Blaine's school amendment to the Constitution, if it should be passed. Look out for that slippery little serpent of a word! Its bite is death to a common understanding on this subject.

THE "ORDINANCE OF 1787" is now asserted to contain a clause which justifies Bible-reading in the public schools: "Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." Mr. C. C. Bonney, in the Chicago Tribune, argues that "religion" must bear its common-law meaning, and therefore fairly includes the Bible as the basis of religious knowledge. Pretexts for perpetuating an injustice are never wanting.

THE BOSTON Journal says: "The religious papers frequently indulge in flings at each other, which amusement secular papers are obliged to avoid lest it should be imputed to the natural propensity of unregenerate man. One of our dignified religious papers this week accuses another of having 'strained at a gnat,' and then makes an admission justifying the assertion we have just made. It says that 'charity is not the prevailing sin of even modern religious newspapers, and is not becoming so prevalent as to attract special attention.'"

WE FIND this amusing suggestion quoted in the New York Sun: "Warren Chase proposes that 'the 60,000 clergymen of the United States meet in Philadelphia this Centennial year, and decide by vote, as the old councils did, just what is the word of God, what it means, and which doctrine is true and which false; full reports of the debates and votes to be published. Also, that until these questions are settled, the people build no more churches, employ no more preachers, and pay no more pew rent, as they may be sustaining error by doing so, and it ought to be known what the truth is."

WHAT A WORLD of meaning there is in such an incident as this, and how hard it is already to feel the full force of it, now that the monstrous system of slavery has been a dozen years in its grave! "At the unveiling of the Lincoln Statue in Washington, on the 14th of April, there stood on the platform, by the side of General Logan, and near the President of the United States, Louis Clarke, alias 'George Harris,' who saw the negro Uncle Tom whipped to death by Tom Canaday, of Garrett County, Kentucky. Immediately afterward he crossed the Ohio on the ice, and gave the particulars to Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, upon which she wrote the story of Uncle Tom's Cabin."

AT THE General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Baltimore, Hon. Wm. Lawrence, of Ohio, said on May 5: "Under the peace policy wars have ceased and the condition of the Indians greatly improved; but it is proposed by the dominant party in the House of Representatives to abandon this policy and give the Christianization and civilization of the Indians to army lieutenants. The dominant party in Congress was able to carry the bill through, and cared very little for Christianity or anything else. The bill will fail in the Senate, because it has some regard for Christianity. The President, who, though not a Methodist, has a Methodist wife, had inaugurated the peace policy." The temptation to introduce Christianity into politics would be absolutely irresistible, if all Orthodox Protestants were combined in one organization, and the above straw is chiefly of consequence in showing the drift of the current.

THE FUNERAL of Baron de Palm in New York, conducted by the Theosophical Society, was rather a grotesque occasion, to judge from the newspaper reports. It seemed to be a strange jumble of cabalism, spiritualism, and Egyptian symbolism, and one could imagine a more tasteful ritual, if ritual there must be. But in the presence of death all elaborate display is a painful mockery. A quiet gathering of friends to take a tender farewell of the dead and to evince a delicate sympathy for the bereaved, with a simple hymn and a few sentences read from some immortal scripture that speaks from the heart of humanity to the heart of lonely sorrow, is better than any idle parade. Ceremonies are a mere substitute for feeling, not an expression of it; and there is a ghastly hollowness in a funeral without feeling. Birth, marriage, death—these are the natural sacraments of human life, full of beauty tempered with awe; how can their inherent sanctity be deepened by priestly forms?

MR. CONWAY thus points out one of the cheerful signs of the future: "The Unitarian denomination in this country has been completely revolutionized, and that by the shade of the great Bostonian, Theodore Parker. The Council of the denomination voted, by a solid majority, that Parker's works should be published along with those of Channing and others out of the funds of the Association. Then followed a tremendous storm. A meeting was called to reverse the action of the Council, and the result of a very crowded meeting was to reveal the astounding fact that a large majority of the Unitarian preachers of this country are disbelievers in supernaturalism. Theodore Parker, dying at Florence, whispered that there were two Parkers—'One is here dying in Italy, the other I have planted in Boston. He will stay there, and finish my work.' The prophecy is but half fulfilled. Parker has not stayed in Boston, but his soul has been marching on here in London with a vigor which his warmest friends could hardly have prophesied."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Kasey, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BELLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Krukowski.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUSTIN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 MAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 OLEANSFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünling, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Graves, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSTOWN, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.
 DARIEN, WIS.—Crosby Carleton, President; Daniel Rodman, Secretary.
 SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—J. L. Hatch, President; A. J. Boyer, Secretary.

The Catholic Peril in America.

REPUBLISHED FROM THE "LONDON FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW,"
OF MARCH, 1876.*

BY FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

When Hobbes described the Papacy as "the ghost of the old Roman Empire sitting crowned upon the grave thereof," he fell short of the truth. The principle of the old Roman Empire was the political unity of mankind represented by a single man in whom vested the absolute temporal power and imperial dignity of the State; and this principle was only an adumbration of the principle of the Papacy, which is the political and religious unity of mankind represented by a single man in whom vests the absolute temporal and spiritual sovereignty of God himself. The ancient Imperialism extinguished the nationalities of the orbis terrarum in the supreme majesty and authority of one universal State, of which the Emperor was the visible incarnation; but it was powerless to effect a corresponding extinction of the religions of these nationalities, inasmuch as the highest religious idea of Rome was expressed in the Pantheon, where all these religions met on an avowed equality.

Polytheism had no religious unity with which to supplement and complete the political unity of the Empire; yet, in proportion as the latter was perfected, in the same proportion the consciousness of the absence of the former was intensified. The existence of this consciousness manifested itself in the tendency to apotheosize the Emperors; but the divus imperator was too obvious a travesty of the Divine Authority, and the attempt proved abortive.

WHY CHRISTIANITY CONQUERED PAGANISM.

I am surprised that Gibbon, with all his penetration, should have failed to discern the presence of this blind groping after a religious unity capable of putting a soul, as it were, into the enormous but purely mechanical political union effected by the Roman Empire, or to enumerate this dumb craving of the Pagan heart as one of the most powerful causes of the triumph of Christianity. To the genius of Paul, who stripped the Jewish Messiahship of its narrow provincialism, converted it into a cosmopolitan idea by including the Gentiles under the gospel's call, and presented the Christ as the spiritual Emperor invested by God with the imperial purple of Heaven, the "Church Catholic" owes its birth. When thus universalized, the victory of Christianity over the Roman Empire was a foregone conclusion; it vanquished Paganism because in reality it expressed, far better than Paganism, the secret aspiration of the Pagan soul for a universal Imperialism which should be religious as well as political,—because, in short, it was more Roman than Rome itself. The religions of the conquered peoples followed in the wake of their perished nationalities; and Christianity "mounted the throne of the Cæsars" because it was indispensable to the evolution of Roman Imperialism itself.

*The introductory portion as far as the sub-heading, "ROME IN AMERICA," and also a passage bracketed under the sub-heading, "THE ELEMENTS OF CATHOLIC POWER," were omitted in this article as published by the Fortnightly Review, and are here supplied from the manuscript sheets kindly returned by the editor.

Instead of being the "ghost" of the Roman Empire, the Roman Catholic Church is rather a living transformation of it, stripped indeed of the power to administer the world's temporalities directly, yet arrogating the right to administer them by fusing in one the temporal and spiritual sovereignties, and asserting her own absolute supremacy in the sphere of "faith and morals,"—which, as Mr. Gladstone has so eloquently shown, is practically identical with the entire sphere of human life. Founding her throne on the absolute, universal, and imperial authority of the Christ, originally conferred by God and delegated to the Pope as the "Petrus Filius Dei," the Church abates not a jot of the claim to unlimited political dominion made by ancient Rome in the Emperor's person, but superadds to this the claim to unlimited spiritual dominion whose origin is lost in the antiquity of the Hebrew theocracy. The essential idea of the old Roman Empire—the political unity of mankind on the basis of administrative absolutism—not only survives to-day in the Roman Catholic Church, but is exalted and expanded into the idea of a religious unity of mankind which is to consist in their universal submission in all things, whether pertaining to their political, social, or individual life, to the autocratic personal government of the Pope. This is the Papal Imperialism, the perpetuation, intensification, and expansion of the ancient Roman Imperialism, which now confronts all the nationalities of the globe with the Vatican Decrees of 1870, and haughtily challenges the supreme allegiance of every human soul. It is the principle of personal authority affirmed in its most absolute form, carried out to its remotest logical consequences, and (so far from being a mere harmless abstraction) set forth in determined opposition to the progress of civilization in the concrete shape of the most powerful hierarchy of the world. And this Papal Imperialism wields weapons against which no political or military defences are adequate.

THE NEW PAPAL IMPERIALISM.

When, at the advent of Victor Emanuel, the temporal power of the Papacy was extinguished in the establishment of the Italian nationality, it quitted the petty prison of the Papal States only to assume, like the genie set free from the fisherman's casket, a new and more formidable shape. As a small territorial prince, the Pope could not escape from constraint, humiliation, and supervision; he was subject to the restrictions of international law; he stood on a level with other sovereigns, though one of the feeblest of them all, and could not without a certain absurdity advance his unique pretensions to supremacy over them. The limits of his territory constituted a practical limit to his temporal power; and his claim of temporal power seemed visionary even to faithful Catholics across these narrow boundaries. In fact, the territorial insignificance of the Papal dominions was in some respects a serious disadvantage to the Pope's pretensions as a temporal sovereign, by circumscribing the pious imagination on which his empire really rests; whereas the abolition of his local government over an inconsiderable district sets this imagination free to idealize his temporal sovereignty as consisting rather in a Divinely ordained supremacy above all sovereigns than in the absolute mastery of a few square miles. If he is no longer a local prince at home, he is also no longer a foreign prince anywhere, but in each country appears now to his followers as the supreme authority of the land. This changed aspect of the Papal claims is fraught with consequences of great peril to the internal peace of every nation and to the permanence of its domestic institutions. So long as the Pope was habitually imagined by Catholics as a temporal sovereign in Italy alone, and as merely a spiritual sovereign in their own native country, his power to excite civil commotion was comparatively restricted; but when, as must result from the Vatican Decrees and the cessation of the Pope's Italian rule, he comes to be habitually imagined by Catholics as the supreme temporal sovereign of their own country, it is difficult to set limits to his power for mischief. The peace of the land must depend on the moderation of the priesthood in meddling with its political affairs, and their forbearance to instigate opposition to the civil power. In proportion to their control over the consciences of their flocks, must be their ability to array the Catholic population against the government; and it is anything but alarmism to consider the safeguards of public tranquillity under such circumstances as feeble indeed.

Who can wonder that, in the presence of pretensions so limitless as those of the revived Papal Imperialism, so menacing to individual and national independence, yet so utterly beyond the reach of effective resistance, the governments of the civilized world are involved in great perplexity? They are confronted with claims to allegiance superior to their own both in nature and in degree; they cannot exercise their own natural sovereignty without coming at once into collision with the Church,—an impertium in imperio, as it is often called, but an impertium of an order so totally unlike its own as to be inaccessible and invulnerable. Bishop Bourget, for instance, can be compelled to permit the interment of Joseph Guibord in a particular lot of ground in a "consecrated" cemetery; but all the power of the United Kingdom cannot prevent him from cursing the spot and thereby defeating absolutely the mandate of the Privy Council. If Guibord is rightfully entitled to interment in "consecrated" ground, in no possible manner can the Queen's government protect this right; it is utterly baffled and set at naught by an unarmed priest, behind whom looms up the throne of the Vicar of the Son of God.

THE STRUGGLE FOR POWER.

In the last analysis, the Catholic question is reduced to this: shall the Pope govern all mankind absolutely in the interest of the Church, or shall mankind govern themselves in their own interest under the name of the State? It is nothing but a struggle for power,—power on the one hand to enslave, and power on the other hand to be free. It is the old, the eternal battle for human liberty; and the doubt, the danger, the enormous difficulty of the case all proceed from the fact that the root of the slavery against which the world contends lies deep out of sight in the recesses of the human mind. Its victims, protesting that the Church alone has the truth, and that the truth alone "makes free," are unconscious of their slavery; and unconscious slavery is the most dangerous and the most melancholy, because the most clearly irremediable, of all. The State, like Macbeth, finds no physician that can "minister to a mind diseased." Its foe is really ignorance and superstition, generalised by priestly astuteness; its savior, and its only possible savior, is science utilized in universal education. In the final outcome, the struggle for power must terminate in favor of the contestant which has the most of truth, whether it be the Church with its theology or the State with its science; but in proportion to the magnitude of the contest must be the delay of the ultimate victory. The present battle is between the civil or secular State, as a purely human institution organized by purely human means for purely human ends, and the theocratical Papal Imperialism, as a supernatural or divine institution founded for God's glory and the glory of such as comply with its own terms of salvation. Each claims the supreme allegiance of the citizen, as against the other; and all apparent balancing or compromise of these conflicting claims is the stultification of one or both.

THE CHURCH AND THE MODERN STATE.

It has been urged that this rivalry between the Catholic Church and the modern State is entirely a theoretical one, which can never produce any actual collision or disturbance in the transaction of affairs; that the Roman Papacy, being disestablished even in Italy as a temporal power, can never again enter into actual antagonism with any State, since the State is everywhere a temporal power alone; that the spheres of the temporal and spiritual powers are so utterly dissimilar, that the abstract claim of the Pope to supreme allegiance might be allowed without any detriment to the practical interests of mankind. This view of the case is singularly superficial. The Papacy, it is true, has ceased to be one of the great family of temporal sovereignties; but this fact, as I have shown, adds to its power for evil. It is no longer on the same level with the rest, and now, in a new and formidable manner, exalts itself as superior to them all. The obligations of international law have ceased to exist for it; in fact, the Great Powers can no longer hold it to account in any way. The Vatican Decrees have put the Pope above all the nations of the earth, and invested him with the right to constitute and ordain what international law he pleases. The extinction of the Pope's temporal sovereignty in his own petty domains has therefore really proved his election to an imperial throne above all temporal sovereignties, and permitted him in every country to speak with imperial authority on its domestic concerns. Nor is this by any means a merely abstract danger. The Jesuits know what they are about. When they have once thoroughly indoctrinated the people of a country with the belief that their supreme allegiance is due to the Pope, not to the State, the argument will be very short in reaching the conclusion that the State must in all its action obey the Pope,—that, if it disobey him, it assumes the position of a rebel against lawful authority. This is precisely the relative position in which the Roman Papacy desires everywhere to place the State; for it is one which would legitimate unlimited interference in the internal administration of the latter, secure complete control of the legislature, and practically abolish all civil and political independence. In no other way than this could the dream of an ecclesiastical absolutism, shaping all things to its own ends, be possibly accomplished under modern conditions. Not by any form of foreign conquest, but solely by this slow and silent substitution in men's hearts of supreme allegiance to the Pope for supreme allegiance to the nation, does Rome expect to establish her universal empire. Her point once gained, all legislation will be conformed to the requirements of Church interests; no Catholic legislator will ever venture to dispute the dictation of his ecclesiastical superiors, until he is prepared to abandon Catholicism. What such legislation brings, let history tell.

"ALARMISM."

Such is the nature of the peril to which modern civilization is everywhere exposed by the profound strategy and daring ambition of the Papacy. Nothing could be more unwise than to underrate it. The flippant cry of "alarmism" does little credit to the intelligence of those who indulge in it. The optimists who apprehend no real danger from the machinations of the Papal hierarchy, and who account for all warnings on the subject by private fears, will do more justice to the views of those who see in Vaticanism the chief reactionary influence of modern politics, if they dismiss the notion that the root of the latter opinion is an excess of timidity, a deficiency of cool-headedness, or an unrestrained inclination to "sensationalism." The question is one of wide and patient observation, of deliberate reflection, of careful generalization from the teachings of history, of sagacious inference from signs of the times, of imaginative power to take position at the centre of an alien system of thought, and to study its practical tendencies in the light of the logical concatenation of its ideas. One would be more deeply impressed with the wisdom of the rose-colored philosophy, if those who held it were not so apt to betray their own incompetence as observers by imputing to fear what is due to the study of cause and effect, to the noting of important but overlooked facts, and to a general conviction that power is never permitted to slip from the grasp of any organization without a desperate effort to retain and increase it. This latter principle throws no little light on the recent history of the Roman Catholic Church, which fully comprehends the inevitable effect of the diffusion of knowledge on its own corporate destinies, and has been fairly brought to bay by the astonishing progress of modern science. Rome must reconquer the world or vanish from its surface: nobody knows that better than she. Her case is one for heroic treatment, and she submits to it in the form of Vaticanism. But none the less full of peril to the as yet partially grown liberties of mankind is her tremendous effort to quench with their blood the ring of fire by which she finds that they have surrounded her. It is well to remember that the best preparation for meeting danger undauntedly at last is to comprehend it thoroughly at first, to measure its full dimensions, and to familiarize the mind with what brings to the over-sanguine the surprise, panic, and demoralization of a sudden emergency. The civilized world would have little to fear from Rome, were it not for its own self-complacency, preoccupation, and insouciance. But while it sleeps, like Gulliver, in imagined security, a multitude of petty enemies are attempting to bind it hand and foot to the earth with innumerable tiny cords. So long as ignorance and superstition are better organized, more active, and (must it be added?) more unselfishly devoted to their own ends than are knowledge and enlightenment to their nobler ends, the danger of at least temporary success will remain great. Events like the revocation of the Edict of Nantes are full of instruction still.

ROME IN ENGLAND.

The peril to the internal harmony of States which has thus far been dwelt upon, as resulting from the claim of the Pope to the supreme allegiance of the citizen, is a general one, affecting all countries which contain a mixed Catholic and non-Catholic population; for this claim binds all Catholic consciences to obey the bishops and priests, as the sole authorized interpreters of the Pope's will to the laity, in all their political action. Even in England, the Pall Mall Budget groans out the confession of national failure in dealing with Rome in such terms as these:—

"It might have been reasonably supposed that the grant of absolute equality would have turned the Roman Catholics into citizens of the State like any others, and that the special creed of Ireland would no more affect the interests and policy of the empire than the special creed of Scotland. But they [Englishmen] find that a religion with world-wide affinities is not as the faith of a limited community, and that they have given an enormous advantage to a system of aggressive spiritual legislation of which the basis is the denial, and the object the suppression, of most things which Englishmen believe and prize. We may be quite alive to the coarseness of the measures by which German statesmen endeavor to cope with this difficulty; but there is not one Englishman in ten who now thinks that we have successfully or finally dealt with it by leaving it to solve itself."

ROME IN AMERICA.

How the renewed aggressiveness of the Papal Imperialism is to affect the future of the United States, is a question of vital concern to their citizens; and it is of this country that I am to speak. Hitherto the clergy of the Catholic Church have foreborne to raise the question of jurisdiction in any open manner here; they are wisely biding their time, being content for the present with the fact of rapid and enormous growth in numbers, wealth, and power. This masterly inactivity has deceived, and still deceives, great multitudes of educated Americans, who feel the natural aversion which culture always tends to create against "agitation" of all sorts, and who flatter themselves, like the cheerful antediluvians said to have been warned by Noah of the coming Deluge, that "there is not going to be much of a shower." They rely too much on the general influences of civilization and political freedom as antidotes for Catholic fanaticism; they credulously or indolently accept the smooth professions of American Catholic orators, who are very glib in the use of popular catchwords, but who are easily understood by any one competent to rate at its actual value the "freedom," "education," and so forth, offered by the Roman Church.

STATISTICS.

It is my duty to give such statistical information respecting the Catholic Church in the United States as I have been able to collect. It is no easy matter to obtain full and trustworthy religious statistics of any kind; there are too many motives for exaggeration or understatement in sectarian reports, and the United States census reports are exceedingly meagre. Nevertheless, the following facts, taken from the census reports of 1850, 1860, and 1870, are as trustworthy as they are important.

First may be considered the growth in wealth of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, as compared with that of the whole country, and of the leading Protestant denominations.

In 1850 the total property valuation of the United States, according to the census report of that year, was $7,135,780,228; in 1860 it was $16,159,016,088; in 1870 it was $30,068,518,507. That is to say, the aggregate wealth of the country increased about 125 per cent. from 1850 to 1860, and about 86 per cent. from 1860 to 1870.

The total property valuation of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States in 1850 was $9,256,758; in 1860 it was $26,774,119; in 1870 it was $40,985,565. That is to say, the aggregate wealth of the Catholic Church increased about 189 per cent. from 1850 to 1860, and about 128 per cent. from 1860 to 1870.

While, therefore, in the first of these two decades, the wealth of the whole country gained 125 per cent., the wealth of the Catholic Church gained 189 per cent.; and while, in the second decade, the wealth of the whole country gained 86 per cent., the wealth of the Catholic Church gained 128 per cent. Whatever causes may have contributed to this significant result, it is certain that among the chief of them must be reckoned exemption from just taxation, extraordinary shrewdness of financial management, and fraudulent collusion with dishonest politicians.

Further, the relative growth of Protestantism and Catholicism in point of wealth must by no means be overlooked. In 1850, when the Catholics had $9,256,758 of church property, the Baptists had $11,030,855; the Episcopalians, $11,375,010; the Methodists, $14,822,870; the Presbyterians, $14,543,789. In 1870, when the Catholics had $40,985,566, the Baptists had $39,229,221; the Episcopalians, $36,514,449; the Methodists, $69,854,121; the Presbyterians, $47,828,732. Thus the Catholics had in 1870 already distanced all their Protestant competitors with the single exception of the Methodists, and they will soon distance the latter, too (if they have not already done so), provided the past is a satisfactory index of the future. For, while in the twenty years from 1850 to 1870 the Methodists, whose astonishing growth is the standing boast of the Evangelical Protestants of this country, made a gain of 371 per cent. in the value of their church property, the Catholics made in the same twenty years a corresponding gain of 558 per cent. At this rate the Roman Catholic Church will have outstripped, at no remote day, the Methodists and all the other Protestant sects combined, in the race for wealth.

No satisfactory information, however, is furnished by the census reports respecting the growth either of the Catholic Church or of the Protestant sects in point of numbers, for they give in each case only the "church accommodations" or "sittings" which by no means indicate the number of worshippers. The total number of sittings, Catholic and Protestant together, was only 21,665,062 in 1870, when the total population of the United States was 38,558,371; that is, considering the actual size of church congregations, fully one-half of the whole population, and in all probability much more, seldom or never go to church at all. In most Protestant churches in this country a great many seats are usually unoccupied, and the number of sittings is largely in excess of the numbers of the congregations. In most Catholic churches, however, the reverse is true, the seats being usually all taken and the aisles often filled, while the same seat is usually occupied by several different persons in the three or four different congregations which fill the church on Sunday at successive services. So far, however, as the number of sittings alone is concerned, significant results may be easily deduced from the following table constructed upon the data of the census:—

No. of Sittings.	1850.	1860.	1870.
Protestant.....	13,567,062	17,724,314	19,674,548
Catholic.....	687,923	1,434,437	1,990,514
Total.....	14,254,985	19,158,751	21,665,062

A little calculation, based on these figures, will show that, during the decade 1850-1860, there was an increase of 30 per cent. for the Protestants and 110 per cent. for the Catholics; and that, in the decade 1860-1870, there was an increase of 11 per cent. for the Protestants and nearly 42 per cent. for the Catholics. Notwithstanding the absolute diminution of these rates of increase in the second decade, the relative superiority of the Catholics remained about the same.

The number of church buildings owned by the Catholics in 1850 was 1,222; in 1860, 2,550; in 1870, 3,806. The total number of their ecclesiastical, charitable, and educational organizations in 1870 was 4,127. This is all the information of importance which I have been able to derive from the census reports.

In the silence of the census as to the absolute number of Roman Catholics in this country, all estimates are to be received with caution. Gibson's Ecclesiastical Almanac for 1869 states the increase of Protestants (in the loose sense of that word) to have been from 21,000,000 to 27,000,000 between the years 1850 and 1868, and that of Catholics from 2,500,000 to 5,000,000; in the former case an increase of 20 per cent. in nine years, and in the latter case an increase of 100 per cent. in the same period. At this rate of increase the number of Catholics in the United States at present cannot be far from 9,000,000, and by the end of the century will exceed that of the total non-Catholic population. Certain it is that the Catholics have been boasting for many years that they will elect their own President in the year 1900. The third revised edition of Professor Schem's Statistics of the World for 1875 estimates the number of our Catholic population as 6,000,000. The American Annual Cyclopaedia for 1875 estimates it as more than 6,000,000, and states that the Roman Catholic Church in the United States has 1 cardinal, 8 archbishops, 54 bishops, 4,873 priests, 4,731 churches, 1,902 chapels, 68 colleges, and 511 academies.

How the Catholics themselves arrive at an estimate of their own numbers in the United States, and how plausible a ground it gives to their confident anticipation of eventual supremacy, appears from the statements of the New York Catholic World, the leading periodical of the Church published in America. The Catholic rule is to allow an average of 2,000 people (men, women, and children) to each parish priest,—a rule which is claimed to be proved correct by experience. Allowing 4,500 to be the number of such priests, the Catholic population would be 9,000,000, and I am inclined to consider this a pretty good guess, in the absence of exact census returns. This is the remarkable account of the progress of the Church. In 1776 the Catholics numbered about 25,000; in 1789 they were 30,000, in a population of about 3,000,000, or one one-hundredth of the whole; in 1808 they were 100,000, in a population of 6,500,000, or one sixty-fifth of the whole; in 1830 they were 450,000, in a total of 13,000,000, or one twenty-ninth of the whole; in 1840 they were 980,000, in a total of 17,070,000, or one eighteenth of the whole; in 1860 they were 2,150,000, in a total of 23,191,000, or one eleventh of the whole; in 1880 they were 4,400,000, in a total of 31,000,000, or one seventh of the whole, in 1870 they were 8,500,000, in a total of some 40,000,000, or over a fifth of the whole. For a period of forty years—from 1830 to 1870—Catholics thus more than doubled their number every decade, while the general population increased at the rate of about 35 per cent. The explanation of this wonderful fact is to be found in the vast immigration from Ireland and other Catholic countries,—Ireland alone sending to these shores over 2,000,000 of emigrants from 1830 to 1870. These statements give the Catholic view of the subject,—my authority being the Catholic World, as epitomized by Father Stack in Harper's Weekly for July 3, 1875.

Notwithstanding this wonderful growth of the Roman Church in numbers, as compared with that of the general population and the various Protestant sects, the Catholics themselves, while pointing exultingly to the rapid progress of their Church, at the same time deplore a great and constant defection of Catholic-born children from the faith of their parents. In a letter written in 1836 to the Central Council for the Propagation of the Faith at Lyons, Bishop England, of Charleston, South Carolina, communicated the following statements relative to the condition of the Church in the United States:—

"I have long been under the impression that not only in Europe, but even in the United States, very delusive fancies have been entertained of the progress of the Catholic Church in our Union, and even many mistakes as to the means most conducive to its propagation. I have no doubt upon my mind that within fifty years millions have been lost to the Catholic Church in the United States. . . . Nothing can be more plain than that, instead of an increase of the members naturally belonging to the Catholic Church in the United States, there has been actually a serious loss. . . . I do not mean to say that the number of Catholics is in this day less than it was fifty years ago, nor as small as it was five years since; but I do assert that the loss of members to the Catholic Church has been exceedingly great, when we take into account the Catholic population at the time of the American Revolution, the acquisition of territory previously occupied by Catholics, the arrivals of Catholic emigrants, and the conversions to the Catholic religion." Estimating the number of Catholics in the United States at that time (1830) as 1,200,000, the Bishop goes through some calculations, and adds:

"If I say, upon the foregoing data, that we ought, if there were no loss, to have five millions of Catholics, and that we have less than a million and a quarter, there must be a loss of three millions and three quarters; and the persons so lost are found amongst the various sects to the amount of thrice the number of the Catholic population of the whole country."

In the same strain the New York Irish World of July 25, 1874, published a very long and elaborate article to prove that 18,000,000 of Catholics have thus been lost to the Church. It says:—

"What ought to be the Catholic population of the United States to-day? To this we answer that the natural product of Catholic immigration to this country, from its first settlement to this day, without counting in one solitary convert, ought to be 28,000,000. The Catholic population is, in fact, but 10,000,000. Ecclesiastical statisticians put the figures all the way from 5,000,000 to 8,000,000. Hardly any of them go above the latter figure. We are convinced, however, there are 10,000,000 who were baptized Catholics. But even at this there are 18,000,000 lost to the Church; that is, there are 18,000,000 more of the population of the United States who, either by immediate birth or by right of descent from first settlers, ought to be professed Catholics, but who are now to be found in the ranks of Protestantism or Nothingarianism."

It is not necessary to accept the figures of the Irish World as even approximately accurate; in fact, they are deserving of little consideration, when we find that, out of the total white population of 3,172,461 in the original thirteen colonies at the close of the Revolutionary War, 1,903,200 are claimed as "Celtic (Irish, Scotch, Welsh, French, etc.)." Nevertheless, amazing as has been the growth of the Catholic Church in this country, there cannot be the least doubt that its present membership would be very much larger than it is, had its rate of increase not been constantly diminished by a steady stream of deserters from the rising generations. Bishop England and the Irish World make no mistake in emphasizing this fact as of supreme importance to the future destiny of the Church. It is a fact which the Irish World labors to account for by "Ireland's subjection to England"; but the prelates, priests, and intelligent laity of the Church perfectly comprehend the true cause of it. They know that the great defection of Catholic children from the Catholic faith is caused by their constant contact with decatholicizing influences in a predominantly non-Catholic community,—an "evil" which they are powerless to prevent; they know that these influences necessarily act upon the children with greater or less effect in the free public schools; they know that, unless they can succeed in isolating the children of Catholics from the children of non-Catholics, and subjecting them to exclusively Catholic influences in their tender and impressive years, the hold of the Church upon their obedience must and does grow very feeble, and is soon lost in a great many cases; they know that the general effect of our public school system, though no effort at proselytism is permitted, is to quicken the intellect of the children so far as to render them indocile under a régime of authoritative faith. They have therefore adopted the fixed policy of aiming at the total destruction of our public school system, at least as now conducted. Those who wish to read an elaborate, able, and fanatical condensation of the Catholic view of this question will find it in Public School Education, a duodecimo volume of over four hundred pages, written by the Rev. Michael Müller, and published by D. & J. Sadlier, of New York. The policy of the American bishops in this matter is simply the practical application and vigorous enforcement of the principles of the Encyclical and Syllabus; and there is no possibility of its being changed till these manifestoes are recalled.

ATTACK ON THE SCHOOLS.

The attack began with complaints of the use of the Protestant Bible, read "without note or comment," in the schools. There is inherent justice in this complaint, and I must concede that, in protesting against taxation for the support of evangelical or semi-evangelical schools, the Catholics command the sympathy of all who believe in secular instruction alone in State schools. But they do not stop there; they really want, not that the Bible should be excluded, but that it should be supplemented by Catholic interpreters and Catholic surroundings; they will be satisfied with nothing short of putting the whole school system under the practical control of the Catholic clergy, or of partitioning out the school funds among the various denominations, or of excusing the Catholic laity from all taxation for school purposes. What they have set their faces against is State education in any shape; Protestant schools are bad enough, but secular or "godless" schools are, in their eyes, still worse. But the whole fabric of our educational, nay, of our national, system rests on the clear right of the State to educate its voters, in sheer self-defence against internal dissolution through illiteracy and its universally concomitant crime and pauperism. Wherever universal suffrage prevails universal education must also prevail, as the indispensable means of securing that universal intelligence without which no free commonwealth is possible; in fact, the principle of "compulsory" (or, better, guaranteed) education, is more and more evidently needed to attain the desired object.

In Cincinnati, during the winter of 1869-1870, the action of the Board of Education in explicitly prohibiting Bible-reading in the schools of that city led to long litigation, and ultimately, in December, 1872, to the sanction of their action by the Supreme Court of Ohio. In this case (a full and interesting report of which can be obtained from Robert Clarke & Co., of Cincinnati), the Catholics were more or less implicated. I quote from the argument of George R. Sage, Esq., before the Superior Court:—

"From the year 1829 to the year 1842, the Bible, without note or comment, was read in the schools, no one objecting. There were then no Catholic parochial schools. The Bishop of the Catholic Church—he who is now Archbishop—was for some time a member of the Board of Examiners, and active in support of the schools. In 1842 the first intimation of an objection was made. It was not to the reading of the Bible, but that Catholic children were required to read the 'Protestant Bible and Testament.' The Board promptly and unanimously conceded everything suggested by the objection. From that time until the year 1852, no further objection was made. The Bible was read, and the schools prospered. In 1852 the next move was made. Almost simultaneously a similar movement in the interest of the Catholic Church was made throughout the country. It is said that this was in accordance with the action of a secret conclave of the authorities of that Church held in the city of Baltimore. Whether such was the fact is not material. A Catholic member of the Board, in the interest of the Catholic Church, presented a series of resolutions, admitting the necessity of reading the Bible in the schools, and authorizing the introduction of the translation approved by the Catholics, and that approved by the Jews, and their use by those preferring them. The Board, upon assurance that its action would be satisfactory, enacted a rule granting all that the resolutions called for. The next year the Catholic parochial schools were established, and the whole power of the Catholic Church was arrayed against the public schools. The Board, in its annual report for that year, announced that they were 'constrained to infer that no union of action or system is intended or desired by the assailants of the public schools upon any terms but such as are incompatible with the principles and usages which thus far have sustained the free schools of this country.'"

It is not easy, in reading this record of the tortuous policy pursued by the Church, to be satisfied with the degree of good faith which it manifested. Its demands to-day are inconsistent with public schools of any kind which are practically uncontrolled by itself, as is evident from Archbishop Purcell's communication to the Cincinnati Board, on Sept. 18, 1869: "The entire government of public schools in which Catholic youth are educated cannot be given over to the civil power. We, as Catholics, cannot approve of that system of education for youth which is apart from instruction in the Catholic faith and the teaching of the Church. If the School Board can offer anything in conformity with these principles, as has been done in England, France, Canada, Prussia, and other countries, where the rights of conscience in the matter of education have been fully recognized, I am prepared to give it respectful consideration.—JOHN B. PURCELL, Archbishop of Cincinnati."

Not to multiply quotations unnecessarily, I will only add the following remarkably bold and explicit passage from the Lenten Pastoral of Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, in 1873:—

"At present [note the implication of this at present] we have nothing to hope from the State. Yet we must not therefore cease to insist upon our rights, and, if needs be, at the polls demand them. Were Catholics alive and united on the school question—were they to demand from every man who asks their vote a pledge that he would vote for our just share of the school fund,—legislators would learn to respect the Catholic vote, and give us our just rights. . . . But in the meantime what are we to do? Fold our arms and sit idle? Let our children grow up in ignorance, and so be beaten in the race of life? Send them to the public schools, where not only their faith will be endangered, but their virtues exposed? No, a hundred times no! We must build Catholic schools everywhere, and at whatever cost support and lift them up till they are equal to the best. It is our solemn injunction and most positive command that every church in the diocese have its schools. Where a congregation cannot at once build both church and school, let them build the school-house and wait for the church. There is little danger of the old losing their faith, but there is every danger that the young will. On the school question there can be and there must be no division. Either we are Catholics or we are not. If we are Catholics, we must leave after us a Catholic youth. And experience has clearly proved this cannot be done, unless the children are early taught and daily taught that they are Catholics. We must not sleep while our enemies are working. Nor must we forget that the public schools are organized and managed for and in the interests of Protestantism. We solemnly charge and most positively require every Catholic in the diocese to support and send his children to a Catholic school. When good Catholic schools exist, and where it may be honestly said a child will get a fair common-school education, if parents either through contempt for the priest, or disregard for the laws of the Church, or for trifling and insufficient reasons, refuse to send their children to a Catholic school, then in such cases, but in such cases only, we authorize confessors to refuse the sacraments to such parents as thus despise the laws of the Church, and disobey the command of both priest and bishop."

This Lenten Pastoral of Bishop Gilmour, which excited a great commotion in Ohio, and contributed not a little to the remarkable agitation of the school question in the subsequent political campaign of 1875 in that State, was vigorously replied to at the time by the Rev. T. B. Forbush, a Unitarian clergyman of Cleveland, whose lectures and addresses rendered important service in securing the defeat of the Catholic-Democratic coalition of the last season.

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

[For THE INDEX.]

PLATFORM OF THE "RADICAL DEMOCRACY."

TRANSLATED FROM KARL HEINZEN'S "PIONIER" OF MAY 10, 1876.

BY PROFESSOR ALEXANDER LOOS.

The North American republic, on entering upon the second century of its existence, is as little entitled to be proud of its present condition as it has any cause to look into the future without alarm.

It boasts of the best Constitution, and has under it fostered the greatest political corruption and confusion. It possesses the richest material resources, sufficient to secure to all its citizens a comfortable subsistence, but they serve to make the rich richer rather than to alleviate the wants of the needy. It makes the united activity of State and Church subservient to establishing the rule of religion, and under this rule the country is filled with hypocrisy, fraud, and violence.

Can the way which leads to a change of these conditions lie in the same direction as that which led to their origin? Can the principles, the parties, the institutions which have prevailed thus far, secure the desired reform? A thorough reform of permanent duration can be hoped only from a decisive appeal to the undeniable dictates of reason, to the natural rights of man, and to the fundamental principles of a truly republican life.

Under the impulse of this conviction the German Radicals and their associations intend to hold a convention at Philadelphia on the 28th of June, for the purpose of coming to a full understanding as to the principles which can guide them in their united efforts for bringing about a reform, and which they will endeavor, in union with their sympathizing American fellow-citizens, to assert, according as occasion and necessity may require in the federal policy as well as in that of the several States and in municipal life, by means of organized agitation, the formation of a party, and of legislation.

Not in superstitious belief or in authority, which the thoughtless masses are wont to consider as their guiding stars, but in the revolutions of reason and free science alone are the sources of that knowledge to be found which fathoms and establishes truth, right, and humanity,—the only tenable foundations of all human development and social institutions. All existing institutions which deviate from these principles lead necessarily to deplorable conditions and call for reform. Upon these foundations all aspirations for progress and reform must be based; they underlie also the Declaration of Independence proclaimed one hundred years ago, which acknowledges the equal right of all men to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as also the preamble to the Constitution of this republic, which pronounces as its aims the establishment of justice and the promotion of the general welfare.

These solemn declarations, engraven as it were upon the entrance-gate to this republic as its leading principles, with which all humane thinkers and true republicans agree, must no longer remain words without meaning and empty phrases, if the republic is to escape from the dangers threatening its very existence, but must be made a truth and a reality in all departments of civil life. For this end the Radicals invite the coöperation of all citizens of this republic who sympathize with them, in carrying out the principles and demands contained in the subjoined platform. Although these principles and demands cannot be carried out and asserted simultaneously and all at once, yet a rational and provident conception of the political and social development requires their comprehensive statement, in order to facilitate a timely and all-sided consideration and discussion of the principal needs of reform.

PLATFORM.

A.—Political Questions.

People, Nation, and Union form one political idea and one inseparable totality, with which no separate right of single States or other political divisions must be in contradiction. "State-sovereignty" would not signify anything but the reserved disintegration of this totality, secessions and civil war.

The unity of the people, as well as the realization of the democratic idea, is possible only on condition of the full equality of all citizens. Still less than color, nationality, or property, can the difference of sex constitute any difference of human rights.

The sovereignty of the people is inalienable, and can as little be transferred to its legislative representatives as to its executive officers. As everything must be done for the people, so it must also be done by the people. For this reason the latter has to secure the constant and direct dependence and responsibility of those to whom it entrusts the care for its interests. For this end it must reserve for itself the right to remove them at any time from their places of trust, and call them to account in case of dereliction of duty. At the same time the validity of all laws passed by its legislators must be made dependent upon their subsequent approval on the part of the people.

Complicated representation and artificial division of powers, borrowed from the political institutions of the Old World, are dangerous obstructions in the path of true democracy, and promotive of reactionary tendencies. The people need for legislation and the administration of the State only one chamber of responsible and revocable agents, whose legislative resolutions are carried out by an executive or administrative commission chosen by them from among the whole people, and directly responsible to them. The Senate as well as the Presidency, both of which are only copies of monarchical institutions, are to be abolished as incompatible with a truly democratic republic. The Presidency, especially, is the principal source of all official and party corruption. The right of the single States to make laws or regulations in contradiction to the spirit of the Federal Constitution, especially such as involve the freedom of the press, matters of religion, and the right of free assembly, is to be entirely abolished.

Likewise the differences of rights and laws existing in the several States are to be removed by the introduction, on the part of the Union, of uniform regulations of all essential points.

The electors are to be endowed with the right of electing candidates also from outside of their electoral district.

B.—Social and Economical Questions.

Modern political economy, like any other department of political and social life, is under the control of public justice.

A republic based upon humane and ethical principles has to reject the pretensions of the Manchester freebooters not less decidedly than the barbarous theories of the Malthusians. Nor can its destiny be confined to keeping in motion the mechanisms of political activity, and to act the part of a protective police between freely contending interests and passions. It rather has the positive task of securing to all its citizens as much as possible the benefits of civilization, consisting in their mental development, the free play of their faculties, and the material requirements for a truly human existence, and cannot leave the attainment of this end to blind accident, or to the contest between the weak and the strong. While favoring the Utopian theories of communism as little as artificial antagonisms of classes, it is to aim at filling the chasm which lies between abundance and misery; it is not to interfere with the industrial life of the nation by controlling or creative measures, but to aim at becoming a mediator of justice for all by protecting the weak, restricting the strong, and equalizing the interests of all.

As means to this end are to be considered:—Protection of labor against the unjust pretensions of capital; restriction of the profits of capital for the purpose of securing to labor its fair compensation; and promotion of labor associations. Further reduction of the maximum of working time.

Prohibition of overworking children in manufactories.

Cessation of all further land-grants and sales to individuals or corporations. The public lands must remain the inalienable property of the people, and be entrusted only to actual settlers under precautionary conditions, and in consideration of a reasonable tax. Support of indigent colonists from public funds under condition of their reimbursing the State. Repurchasing of all public lands which are not brought under cultivation up to a certain time, at the original purchase price.

Gratuitous instruction for every one in all educational institutions supported by the State or the community.

Progressive income-tax and hereditary-tax, with exemption from taxation of a minimum requisite for the support of a family.

Abolition of all monopolies.

Gratuitous dispensation of justice for the poor.

In international commerce, nearest possible approach to free trade. Articles of luxury to be the principal objects of taxation.

Exclusive right of the Federal government to issue paper money, and its legal equalization with specie.

C.—Religious Questions.

Religious belief or unbelief is a matter of the mental and moral needs of each individual, corresponding to his or her individual culture and intellect. It must be left to mental development, as mediated by free instruction and discussion through word and pen. According to its whole nature, it is exempt from all authoritative influence or control. The State, therefore, must interfere with its domain and development neither by prohibition nor command, and has to abstain from all laws, institutions, and regulations which are subservient to belief or unbelief, or lay any restraint upon its citizens regarding them. All such laws, institutions, and regulations are infringements upon the personal rights and the liberty of conscience of the citizens, differing in their belief and manner of thought, and are as tyrannical as they are contrary to reason, while at the same time directly antagonistic to the spirit of the Constitution, and are therefore as soon as possible to be prohibited by a special Amendment to the Constitution. To these infringements belong especially the following:—

Introduction of the Bible into the public schools, which ought to be replaced by instruction in the rights and duties of men in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence.

The enforced observance of Sunday.

The exemption of church-property from taxation. The appointment of chaplains for Congress, the legislatures, the army and navy, the prisons, and other institutions supported by public taxes.

The appointment of religious festivals and fast-days by the President and the State Governors.

The judicial oath upon the Bible.

The standard of Christianity as applied to the appointment of candidates for public offices or to the official estimation of individual morality.

The support of religious tendencies or institutions from public means or through public manifestations.

The only right in religious matters invested in the State is that of self-defence by the institution of proceedings against religious organizations which form a State within the State, and which by their tendency and power endanger liberty, especially against those which obey the dictates of a foreign authority.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

NON-RESISTANCE AGAIN.

It is a marvel that the combined evils of the world, all the baleful agencies—despotism, persecution, the complex and cunning modes of torture, grievous injustice, constant and inexorable oppression,—should have failed to perform their sole office, that of rooting out the pestilent spirit of non-resistance. It is not to be excused by terror; that is plain.

Evil was launched into society to strengthen good; good relaxes, succumbs, and evil has the field. Amid the shout of victory that ascends can be perceived the faint huzzas of the vanquished. Error was intended to force the truth to become manifest. At the first bravado, truth prevaricates and apologizes, even explains away its substance in order to mollify its formidable accuser. Why is not the truth formidable? It ought to be. It has all the might and the power. Why is not goodness impregnable? Rely upon it, that is not goodness which yields.

Non-resistance indicates the absence of mental or moral vigor, a sleepy conscience, benumbed activities. Non-resistance in the face of great exigencies is criminal. It boasts of its peaceful tendencies; why? it is the cause of all the wars on record! War is impossible, unless a long period of non-resistance has prepared the way for it. Nipping things in the bud would spare nations and individuals the barbarous last resort.

I witness on all hands the dilapidation that weakness has wrought; that is the great destroyer. History has but the one phenomenon to show,—human abjectness. One monarch, and a kingdom of subjects; one Church holding with a grasp of iron the whole group of civilized nations; the dominant few invariably controlling the passive many; and these sorrow-laden, afflicted multitudes rend the air with their complaints and sighs of misery.

We have but just passed through a disgraceful civil war, brought about by the direct and potent instrumentality of those who were willing to be slaves, and those honest, peace-loving folk willing to see them slaves. There is a great hue and cry about woman's rights; the sex is borne down, they say, with its weight of woe, dependence, moral degradation. Men are accused of subjecting them to all this. Oh, no! woman's voluntary submission induced it. They have always had the inveterate habit of putting up with men, the peculiar type of men, too, which the suffragists are so fond of describing. To touch up their portraits a trifle—that is, to make out all men fac-similes of Nero and Henry VIII.—I say that even then, with their consummate sagacity and cruelty, they would be overcome by the first woman who did not mean to be ruled or interfered with.

Non-resistance has hurried us into our present plight. Its silence and shame-facedness; its lying, obeisances to that which it did not believe in and inwardly despised; its smiles and benevolence and perverted virtues of all sorts, have made us entirely subservient, socially and publicly, to theological dominion. In twenty-five years more free speech in regard to religion will be attended with as much risk as was free speech in regard to abolition twenty-five years ago; in fact, liberal views are now expressed with extreme caution, the penalty being social ostracism.

How could the encroachments which threaten to culminate in the infusion of two-thirds of the Trinity into the Constitution have been possible, except through the remissness of all the liberal-minded, loyal, republican people in the country,—those who, inclining to rational views, support the churches; those who, sifting the Scriptures, glean for their own spiritual nurture what may be termed the Christian portion of Christianity, and yet listen patiently Sunday after Sunday to sermons of crude dogma; those who believe in everything wholesome and necessary, and yet hold that it is neither wholesome nor necessary to disseminate their opinions; those who deem truth the most dangerous of all things, and keep it about them as bottled poison; those who are forever talking about quiet processes, and imperceptible advances, and growth (as if growth had not formed mountains and forests and cataracts, and the dazzling sun, and the invincible human being,—all that is material, tangible, solid, all organized and fitted for use)! A continual effort to grow without palpable result indicates blight; invisibility is the worst of signs. If liberals cannot be found, if they do nothing, are indistinguishable from the mass, dispense with their natural characteristics, the conclusion is that they do not exist, and it would distress them terribly to be obliged to prove the contrary. To stand out in a strong light; to be themselves; to organize; to proclaim not their principles, but principles; to say emphatically, proudly, on every occasion, "I know," when they do know, withholding nothing of the truth,—is the course the mere proposal of which now calls down such a storm of opposition. It is "aggressive," "coercive"; it is an invasion of other people's rights; it is the pursuance of the same methods we condemn in Orthodoxy; it is "narrow," "unspiritual." "We are content to be," say these modest lovers of obscurity and inaction; "self-assertion is unnecessary." Ah, if they were!

Those cast-off virtues that ecclesiasticism found ill-adapted to its purpose, patience, forbearance, mildness, and the like, are more vicious than vice, and the men or women who cannot, or will not, stand for the right, always facilitate wrong and provide it with incentives. Those whom we have always supposed to be the enlightened, moral, saving element in the community, the benefactors and promoters of civilization, have through their tolerance, their numerous concessions, their stillness, their systematic falling back when presumptuous ignorance advanced, plunged the whole American nation into the present trouble. Let them unite and repair the damage inadvertently done the government by its delinquent friends! Secularization means nothing more nor less than this.

The call to organize is primarily a test. If no "National Liberal League" be formed, it will be because there are no liberals this side of the water; we shall know that the old Revolutionary stock has become extinct. There are but two alternatives open to the professed liberals of the United States: either to render the obedience due to their principles and their fellow-thinkers, or to continue to fill the ranks of the enemies of free thought and free institutions. National integrity demands of us unequivocal language and straightforward conduct. Let us have the courage to say, if it be true,—"We deem the severance of Church and State one hundred years ago a mistake; we have permitted them to reunite; we approve of having our former free government merged into an ecclesiastical establishment; the republic founded on the rights of conscience is no more. Requiescat in pace!" Or else,—"We are of the same mind as the founders of the republic; our principles must and shall be maintained. We are a force,—a large, determined force; we will multiply evidences: numbers, wealth and resources, system, material power, increase, unity!"

MARIE A. BROWN.

JOURNALISM IN 1776.—There were no daily newspapers in the time of the Revolution. Of some fifty papers which were born, and lived, or died, between 1748 and 1783, all were weeklies or semi-weeklies. There were forty-three such in existence at the end of the war. They were poor affairs, viewed in the light of the journalism of to-day; but, measured by their times, displayed considerable enterprise, and exerted an immense influence. It was their characteristic that they aimed not so much to print the news of the locality in which they were published as to bring to that locality news from distant parts of the country and of the world. In fact, the newspapers of the Revolution had comparatively little to do with news of any kind. The gathering of it had not been reduced to a system. The publisher was his own editor and reporter. There were no telegraph tolls to pay; and, had there been, there would have been no money with which to have paid them. News travelled to the paper by private conveyance. It was two months coming from Great Britain, and six months from Constantinople. That useful and widely-known individual, "a gentleman of undoubted veracity," lived, however, in the country at that time, and rendered valuable services. The papers were filled with political sayings, satires, and lampoons. By many of them the largest liberty of discussion was allowed; and there were noticeable tendencies to the freest sort of speculation. Of journalism in the modern sense of the term, elaborated, enterprising, competitive, lavish in outlay, and presenting a field for the highest attainments and most carefully acquired professional skill, there was absolutely nothing. And yet we must accord to the journals of the Revolution, small, irregular, struggling sheets that they were, the credit of a generally heroic spirit, and a very noble achievement in shaping the patriotic temper of the times.—Edward Abbott's "Revolutionary Times."

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 3.

S. C. Johnson, $3; Joseph Post, $3; H. W. Johnson, $9.65; L. Lowenthal, $3.20; Mrs. M. S. Wetmore, 20 cents; John N. Lyman, $13.20; Free Religious Association, $62.50; G. H. Bixby, $3; R. B. Esty, $3.20; R. W. Taylor, 25 cents; C. M. Ettinger, 25 cents; F. W. Brown, $3.20; J. D. Lange, $3.20; Marian McG. Noyes, $3.20; M. A. Blanchard, $3.20; L. K. Webb, 10 cents; F. R. Mergler, 50 cents; J. Fisher, 50 cents; J. M. Hawkes, $5.05; W. E. Coleman, $1.60; Wm. D. Platt, 50 cents; Dr. Erich, $3; J. E. Carter, $1.60; D. S. Grandin, 75 cents; Wesley Best, $6; A. B. Tuttle, $3.20; J. Guilwits, $3; W. F. Heiker, $7.65; C. D. B. Mills, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.00
A. Schelling, Philadelphia	1.00
Richard Hackatt, Philadelphia	1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Port Jervis, N.Y.	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold, "	1.00
M. Bamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Stilson, Port Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	2.00
S. R. Honey, "	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. B. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio	.90
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia	5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia	1.00
George Langford, "	1.00
Thos. Phillips, "	1.00
Carl Doeringer, Milwaukee	1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass.	1.00
A. Friend, New Bedford, Mass.	10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y.	10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y.	20.00
S. E. Kochler, Boston	2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa	1.00
H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	1.00
H. C. Gray, Painesville, O., (collection)	5.50
J. Sedgebeer, "	.50
Through Banner of Light	15.00
" Boston Investigator	16.75
" New Age	5.50
M. Altman, New York City	20.00
F. A. Green, Boston	5.00
Friends in Boston	2.00
J. V. Blake, Boston	5.00
A. Friend in "	5.00
Geo. W. Park, "	3.00
Chas. W. Wendte, Cincinnati	5.00
Robert Moore, St. Louis	10.00
James Eddy, Providence	5.00
W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.	.50
W. L. Foster, East Soughton, Mass.	2.00
Mary G. Thompson, Worcester, Mass.	3.00
John Wise, Philadelphia	1.00
A. Friend in New Jersey	10.00
John Gillies, St. Louis	1.00
Robert Collyer, Chicago	50.00
"An English Brother" ($5)	27.25
J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa	1.00
Louis Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.	2.00
B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. Wm. Heine, Pleasant Hill, Mo.	1.00
Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.	2.00
Thos. H. Matthews, New Bedford	5.00
S. F. Spangler, Winthrop, Iowa	5.00
D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.	1.00
E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.	1.00
C. M. Dennison, New York	5.00
Mrs. Orrin Gillet, Parma, Mich.	5.00
M. Jacoby, St. Louis	2.00
O. W. Heyer, St. Louis	3.00
Philip Godheart, St. Louis	2.00
Mrs. Kotany, St. Louis	1.00
Kohn & Co., St. Louis	2.00
C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn	5.00
William Green, Brooklyn	5.00
Sidney H. Morse, Boston	100.00
Gilbert Cope, West Chester, Pa.	1.00
F. M. Vaughan, Middleboro, Mass.	1.00
E. R. McKenzie, Charlestown, Mass.	1.00
W. C. Fuller, Willimantic, Ct.	3.00
D. P. Wilcox, Yankton, Dakota Territory	1.00
Dr. J. N. Lyman, Columbus, O.	5.00
Daniel G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.	1.00
Geo. Lewis, Providence, R. I.	1.00
Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	1.00
Liberal League, Minneapolis, Minn.	30.00
David Ferguson, Waupun, Wis.	5.00
Matilda Goddard, Boston	5.00
Banner of Light , Boston	5.00
William C. Gannett, Boston	10.00

May 30.....$598.43

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnardall, ".....	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whicher, Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davidson, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.....	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.....	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston.....	5.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston.....	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N. Y.....	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.....	10.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" John Hiat, Winchester, Ind.....	5.00
" 25.	" A. Friend.....	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horach, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston.....	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.....	2.00
" 3.	" A. Friend in New York City.....	60.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.....	5.00
" 8.	" J. D. Lange, New York City.....	5.00
" 8.	" Jane P. Titcomb, Boston.....	2.00
" 8.	" Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.....	5.00
" 8.	" B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.....	10.00
" 8.	" Warren Griswold, ".....	5.00
" 8.	" C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.....	4.00
" 8.	" F. E. Nipper, St. Louis.....	2.00
" 8.	" K. Hoegh, La Crosse, Wis.....	3.00
" 10.	" H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.....	5.00
" 13.	" C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.....	3.00
" 13.	" Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.....	1.00
" 13.	" Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa.....	2.50
" 13.	" Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.....	10.00
" 13.	" G. P. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.").....	8.00
" 17.	" J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia.....	5.00
" 17.	" J. W. Sullot, Salem, Ohio.....	5.75
" 17.	" J. S. Bonsall, ".....	.90
" 17.	" M. Schlesinger, Albany.....	5.00
" 17.	" O. B. Frothingham, New York.....	25.00
" 25.	" Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.....	90.00
" 25.	" Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.....	5.00
" 25.	" W. H. Crowell, ".....	5.00
" 25.	" J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.....	1.00
" 25.	" Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.....	2.00
" 25.	" C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee.....	2.00
" 25.	" J. A. Reintzelman, Phila.....	5.00
" 25.	" D. G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.....	1.00
May 1.	" S. R. Koehler, Boston.....	3.00
" 1.	" Geo. M. Murray, Jersey City.....	1.80
" 1.	" H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.....	5.00
" 1.	" C. A. Shumson, Saxonville, ".....	5.00
" 1.	" J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon.....	5.00
" 15.	" B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.....	5.00
" 15.	" "An English Brother" (£5).....	27.25
" 15.	" John Gillies, St. Louis.....	1.00
" 15.	" J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa.....	4.00
" 15.	" L. Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.....	5.00
" 15.	" Dr. Max. Landsberg, N. Y.....	5.00
" 15.	" A. Walther, Brooklyn.....	2.00
" 15.	" E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.....	2.00
" 15.	" M. Altman, New York City.....	20.00
" 15.	" R. E. Grimshaw, Minneapolis, Minn.....	5.00
" 15.	" Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.....	3.00
" 15.	" F. P. Hicks, ".....	1.00
" 15.	" Benj. Gerrish, Jr., Bordeaux, France.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. L. Foster, East Stoughton, Mass.....	5.00
" 15.	" W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.....	.50
" 15.	" C. H. Phillips, Boston.....	8.00
" 15.	" W. P. Phillips, ".....	1.00
" 15.	" H. S. Williams, ".....	5.00
" 15.	" Mrs. Owen Gillett, Parma, Mich.....	5.00
" 15.	" D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.....	2.00
" 22.	" C. M. Dennison, New York City.....	5.00
" 22.	" James McArthur, Chicago.....	20.00
" 22.	" C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn.....	5.00
" 22.	" Liberal League, Toledo, Iowa.....	10.00
" 22.	" "Boston.....	26.10
" 22.	" Mrs. A. L. Richmond.....	5.00
" 30.	" L. Scott, Waynesburgh, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" E. R. McKenzie, Charlestown, Ma.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. K. Whipple, Brookline, Mass.....	1.00
" 30.	" E. B. Moore, Charlestown, Mass.....	1.50
" 30.	" E. H. Warren, Chelmsford, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" D. Deming, South Bend, Ind.....	1.00
" 30.	" S. C. Mason, Moberly, Mo.....	1.00
" 30.	" H. C. Hanson, Barnesville, Ga.....	.50
" 30.	" A. M. Dent, Weston, West Va.....	1.00
" 30.	" F. M. Vaughan, Middleboro, Mass.....	1.00
" 30.	" M. P. Barber, Pleasantville, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" "Cash," Phoenix, N. Y.....	1.00
" 30.	" G. Cope, West Chester, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" Wm. Dudgeon, New Hartford, N. Y.....	5.00
" 30.	" H. Andriessen, Beaver, Pa.....	2.00
" 30.	" E. A. Spring, Perth Amboy, N. J.....	.50
" 30.	" A. Morrison, Braintree, Mass.....	5.00
" 30.	" G. Lieberknecht, Geneseo, Ill.....	1.00
" 30.	" Sophia B. Carter, Andover, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" "Widow's Mite," Portage City, Wis.....	2.00
" 30.	" H. C. Southworth, Stoughton, Ma.....	1.00
" 30.	" B. Hallowell, Sandy Spring, Md.....	2.00
" 30.	" E. P. Hassinger, Brodhead, Wis.....	1.00
" 30.	" D. B. Hale, Collierville, Ct.....	5.00
" 30.	" Rev. J. S. Richards, Liberty, Mo.....	.10
" 30.	" H. D. Maxson, Amherst College.....	1.00
" 30.	" W. B. Studley, Rockland, Mass.....	5.00
" 30.	" J. W. Marshall, Plattsmouth, Neb.....	2.00
" 30.	" Dr. C. Wesselsboeft, Boston.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. A. Greenleaf, Chicopee, Mass.....	.50
" 30.	" L. Goepfer, Union Village, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" W. C. Fuller, Willimantic, Ct.....	5.00
" 30.	" Dr. G. E. Francis, Worcester, Ma.....	1.00
" 30.	" W. W. Baker, Boston.....	5.00
" 30.	" James Parton, Newburyport.....	25.00
" 30.	" Dr. J. D. Thorley, Steel Works, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" H. S. Bacon, Milford, Mass.....	5.00
" 30.	" E. C. Darling, Ipswich, ".....	2.00
" 30.	" "Friend," Chelsea, ".....	1.00
" 30.	" Matilda Goddard, Boston.....	10.00
" 30.	" "Cash," Boston.....	1.00
" 30.	" Dr. W. P. Wesselsboeft, Boston.....	2.00
" 30.	" P. A. Chamberlin, Wauseon, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" Albertina von Arnim, Longwood, Mass.....	3.00
" 30.	" D. P. Wilcox, Yankton, Dak. Terr.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. Lohmann & Son, Edwardsville, Ill.....	1.00
" 30.	" J. Blain, St. James, Mo.....	2.00
" 30.	" H. T. Wright, Washington Hts. Ill.....	2.00
" 30.	" P. H. Macgill, Baltimore, Md.....	10.00
" 30.	" C. T. Pratt, Pawtucket, R. I.....	3.00
" 30.	" J. N. Clark, E. Somerville, Mass.....	3.00
" 30.	" T. J. Atwood, Albion, Wis.....	1.00
" 30.	" L. Prang & Co., Boston.....	10.00

" 30.	" W. S. Cunningham, Vienna, O.....	1.00
" 30.	" C. F. Paige, Boston.....	2.00
" 30.	" D. E. Mayo, Chelsea, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" Jos. Post, Old Westbury, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" Louise M. Thurston, Lynn, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" J. G. Richardson, Lake City, Minn.....	5.00
" 30.	" G. M. Wood, Washington, D.C.....	1.00
" 30.	" Liberals of Defiance, O.....	17.00
" 30.	" Liberal League, Medina, O.....	25.00
" 30.	" Liberal League, Minneapolis.....	20.00
" 30.	" J. W. Cabot, Boston.....	10.00
" 30.	" D. Ferguson, Waupun, Wis.....	10.00
" 30.	" Mrs. H. Grinnell, New Milford, Pa.....	1.00
" 30.	" Arethusa Hall, Northampton, Ms.....	2.00
" 30.	" J. Scott, Dighton, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" G. M. Wood, Washington, D. C.....	1.00
" 30.	" Thos. Curtis, St. Louis.....	1.00
" 30.	" Louise M. Thurston, Lynn, Mass.....	2.00
" 30.	" F. Fradley, Brooklyn.....	2.00
" 30.	" S. R. Smith, West Winfield, Ct.....	5.00
" 30.	" Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Godfrey, Brooklyn.....	10.00
" 30.	" J. G. Richardson, Lake City, Minn.....	5.00

$927.40

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

THE "THOUSAND DOLLAR FUND":

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS OF $100 EACH FOR THE
CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

April 15.	A Friend in Boston (paid).....	$100.00
April 28.	Miss Marian Hovey, Boston (paid).....	100.00
April 17.	Wm. H. Sayward, Dorchester (paid) $25 }.....	100.00
May 3.	Free Lecture Ass'n, New Haven, " } $75 }.....	100.00
May 8.	Nath. C. Nash, Boston (paid).....	100.00
May 13.	Samuel L. Hill, Florence, Mass. (paid).....	100.00

$500.00

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, in trust.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 8, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX
ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.
TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FARM, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.ACKNOWLEDGMENTS of contributions to the funds for the Congress of Liberals and the Paine bust, received during the week, are necessarily postponed to next week's issue of THE INDEX on account of our recent absence in Ohio.WITH THE full consent of Mr. John Morley, the editor, we begin this week the republication of our article in the March number of the London Fortnightly Review, on "The Catholic Peril in America."
It will be completed in our next issue. The Eclectic magazine has already reprinted it, but probably it will be new to the majority of our readers.

THE DIVIDING LINE.

This argument is adduced by the Brooklyn Catholic Review of May 16:—"When the State steps in to arbitrarily set aside that Providential law, it does so on the plea that it is so vitally interested in the intelligence of its citizens that it is entitled to take effectual means to prevent them from growing up in ignorance. But see without this assumption leads. The morality of its citizens is far more essential to the State, and the only effectual basis for morals is the Christian religion. Therefore, the State would be yet more bound to provide that all youth should be taught Christianity, and hence to support an established Church."The words we have italicized constitute the dividing line between the two theories of ecclesiastical and secular government."The only effectual basis for morals is the Christian religion."Whoever believes that proposition is committed to a premise which, if he is a good reasoner, will render him a deadly foe to the United States Constitution.
Grant it, and what follows? That no civil State can sustain itself except on the foundation of the Christian religion; that the Christian religion cannot sus-tain itself except on the foundation of the Christian Church; therefore, that no civil State can sustain itself except on the foundation of the Christian Church. In other words, the State cannot without self-destruction separate itself from the Church, but on the contrary must depend absolutely upon it.
That doctrine would overthrow totally the United States Constitution.Every honest Catholic who accepts the Syllabus would at once admit this; for the Syllabus denounces it as a damnable error to hold that—"In case of conflict between the laws of the two powers [Church and State], civil law takes the precedence; in conflictu legum utriusque potestatis, jus civile prevalet." That solemn declaration of the infallible Pope destroys absolutely the principle on which the United States Constitution rests. The Catholic Church, therefore, is really an organized treason against the government of the republic; and if it should ever proceed to overtacts, it would have to be put down like the Southern Confederacy.Evangelical Protestants, however, would demur at the proposition that the Christian religion cannot sustain itself except on the foundation of the Christian Church. They would claim that Christ, not the Church, is the foundation of the Christian religion;
they would claim that Christ in the believer's soul, converting him from sin to righteousness, is the source of a truly moral life; they would claim that the civil State, therefore, resting on Christian morality, rests on Christ in the believer's soul, not on the Christian Church. Hence they hold that the United States government is founded on Christianity, but not on the Christian Church; and on no other ground can they defend the Sunday laws, the Bible in the schools, and so forth. Their claim runs inevitably, if carried out, into the demand for a Christian Amendment of the Constitution, but this they do not all see yet. They are at present content to maintain that "the only effectual basis for morals is the Christian religion," and that Christ in the believer's soul, not the Church as an organization, is the true basis of this "Christian government."A little reflection shows how shallow is their view of their own position. Without the organized Church, the "preached word" of the Christian pulpit, the "means of grace," and so forth, they know perfectly well that Christ could never reveal himself to the believer's soul. That is why they sustain foreign missions at such great cost, and send their ordained missionaries to the heathen. There would be no Christianity, no Christ in the believer's soul, no
"effectual basis for morals" at all, were it not for the Christian Church; and the foreign mission system is proof positive that they perfectly comprehend this fact. Very well, then; the Christian morality without which the civil State cannot exist is, by their own theory and practice, impossible without the Christian Church; and so it appears that the State must be founded on the Church in fact, whether one adopts the Catholic or the Evangelical Protestant theory.Whoever believes, then, that "the only effectual basis for morals is the Christian religion" holds to a principle which denies point-blank the fundamental principle of the United States Constitution: namely, the total separation of the State from the Christian Church and the Christian religion. Remember the Treaty with Tripoli (repeatedly quoted in THE IN-DEX) which was signed by George Washington, and which expressly declares that "the United States government is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion." But the United States government is founded on the principles of justice, honesty, freedom, equal rights, and so forth, which are morals;
and therefore the United States Constitution is founded on natural morality, and not on Christian morality. The dividing line between those who would more or less conjoin Church and State, and those who would totally separate them, can be found nowhere, in the last analysis, save in the proposition that "the only effectual basis for morals is the Christian religion." Both parties believe equally in the necessity of good morals; but the one party finds no true morality save in the Christian religion, while the other party finds it in the universal nature of things, above all in the fundamental laws of human nature itself.Fortunately for freedom and the most precious interests of mankind, the United States Constitution which makes us a nation was framed wholly on the latter or secular view. But there is no public danger more subtle or more grave than the danger that the great, organized, powerful Christian party in politics, which everywhere takes the other or ecclesiastical view, may yet attempt to mutilate the Constitution in the imagined interest of "morals." If the people need instruction in any one thing more than in another, it is instruction in the true nature and grounds of morality; yet no one who holds that "the only effectual basis of morals is the Christian religion" is competent to give it, and no other can gain the public ear. Even the majority of liberals still cleave verbally to this utterly false proposition, and, by shrinking from the necessary plain speech, fall altogether to clear away the misconceptions which cluster so thickly about this momentous subject. Morality should be universally recognized as independent of all religions, as constituting a part of that "Nature" which is the true object of science, and as only obscured by theological pretensions. By no other conception than this can the United States Constitution be understood, or its immeasurable greatness appreciated; and if this true conception is ever forced to give way to the claim that "the only effectual basis for morals is the Christian religion," the result will be destruction alike to real morality and to all religious liberty.

The "only effectual basis for morals" is the great fact of HUMAN SOCIETY, with its necessarily implied rights and duties; and this basis is just as certain, just as fixed, just as indestructible, whether man is immortal or not, whether God is a mere myth of the imagination or the noblest discovery of the reason, whether religion is the artful invention of priests for the enslavement of mankind or the great, eternal striving of human nature to realize its own divine ideal. The real sanctions, motives, hopes, fears, rewards, punishments, temptations, inspirations, and so forth, which move the vast majority of men in their daily conduct, are all implied and contained in the ever-present fact of human society; theology can add nothing to them, and take nothing from them; and the Church renders herself a vulgar charlatan and quack, when she thrusts herself forward as the "only effectual basis for morals." She no more sustains the vast weight of human society and morality than Atlas sustained the world on his mythical shoulders. In truth, Christianity is only one of the multifarious and transient forms which Conscience, ever changing yet eternally the same, has assumed from age to age in adapting itself to the successive stages of gradually developing human intelligence. When Christianity was a babe in the manger, Conscience was the "Ancient of Days"; human morality dates back to the birth of the first distinctively human consciousness, and was the parent, not the child, of the Church. Because human society is the same substantial fact, no matter what religions or churches come and go, the United States Constitution recognizes it alone, with its inherent laws of right and wrong, as the great foundation of civil government; and no religion can claim to be the "only effectual basis for morals" without striking a treasonable blow at the very roots of all our national prosperity and greatness. Morality is secular, not theological—natural, not ecclesiastical or Christian; and so long as the Constitution stands unshattered by mad fanaticism and unbetrays by priestly ambition, just so long will morality be safe from murder by its "only effectual basis."

A TEST FOR SUFFRAGE WANTED.

Carlyle is reported as saying that he had no faith in a government which allows Judas and Jesus the same right of suffrage; and this smart epigrammatic saying, made more striking by "alliteration's artful aid," will probably weigh more with many minds than serious arguments.

But will Mr. Carlyle or some of his followers please tell us what test the chief rulers of Jerusalem could have applied that would have given Jesus a vote and kept Judas disfranchised? A property qualification would have been quite ineffectual, for there is no proof that Jesus ever earned or owned any money; while Judas was evidently shrewd in getting it in ways not entirely forsaken by politicians yet.

Jesus was not a householder, for "the Son of Man had not where to lay his head." That he was a taxpayer is doubtful; for certainly the resource he relied upon in looking for a penny in the fish's mouth was a very uncertain one, and it is not even asserted that Peter found the penny there.

There is some reason to believe that Jesus could read, it is true; but there is nothing to show that Judas could not, and his being appointed to carry the bag rather implies that he was "forward in his arithmetic."

If a man is to be judged by the company he keeps, the reputation of Jesus was none of the best; for he was a friend of publicans and sinners. He was far from being respectable, but was accused of being a wine-bibber, a pestilent fellow, a stirrer-up of strife, and other naughty things.

The entry into Jerusalem must have looked like a very insane, fanatical proceeding to the better class at Jerusalem, and his claims to miracle-working undoubtedly stamped him as a lunatic or an impostor in the minds of the scribes learned in the law.

What restriction or test would have enabled any legal tribunal to recognize the noblest man of the age in the victim crucified between two thieves? If the Jesuses have their characters stamped upon their foreheads, and all men could read the inscription, and if the Judases showed a cloven foot which no one could mistake, the law might distinguish between them; but it is not so. There may be the possibilities of a Jesus or a Judas in every child, and only in the actual deed can either character be recognized. "Only God," says Lessing, "knows us as we are, and not by our deeds." Actual crime, therefore, may be restrained or punished by society, but differences in intelligence or virtue cannot be classified into a ground of privilege. No law could have excluded Benedict Arnold from office before his treason was known; none knew that the ignorant slave Robert Small had the soul of a hero under his black skin, till he showed it by his deeds.

Universal suffrage is based upon the faith in human nature,—that good is a stronger power in it than evil, and that the surest way to bring all the good into action is to give it free play and full responsibility. Evil is just as powerful in the dark as in the light; a mob of ignorant men with the pike and the torch are just as dangerous as with the ballot. It is the ignorance we must abolish, for we cannot destroy the men.

In the present reactionary distrust of universal suffrage, I see the greatest danger of our institutions. In trying to escape from it, many of our best minds are wasting energies that should be given to making it safe, by deepening the moral convictions of the people, restoring confidence between different classes, and extending intelligence and education among all.

E. D. C.

SECULAR UNITY.

No. XIV.

The Secular party are going to see if they have a little of that sense which they constantly recommend to others. They are going to promote liberal action on liberal grounds among the freethought liberals of England. For some years an annual conference has been held of the National Secular Society, of which Mr. Bradlaugh is this year President. The conference for 1876 will meet at Leeds early in June. On the invitation of the President I purpose attending it, as will many friends of mine, leaders of secular opinion in various towns. At present Secular Societies in this country are taken to be of two kinds, bearing two banners. The object which interests us is, to see whether they might not be ranged under one standard.

The earlier Secular Societies, for which I am mainly responsible, accept the universe and the order of the universe as they find them,—those being facts not to be changed or accounted for. Into the origin of the universe they do not, as a party, inquire, nor exact any agreement of opinion concerning it from members. Into theories of supernatural revelation they do not officially look, nor stipulate that members shall look; nor do they require that members—if they do look—shall look this way or that. They concern themselves with the duties of this life (a form of piety very much needed), and they separate positive principles from speculative questions.

The other class of Secular Societies, of which Mr. Bradlaugh is President, are best known as Free-thought Societies; and busy themselves chiefly with theological questions, and debate them considerably, debate them "some," as Americans sometimes say. The public imagine them to hold that the Secular is, in some way, synonymous with the atheistic; or in some way to imply or include it. This has never been laid down officially in any document of the society, nor is atheism exacted as a condition of membership in any society. However, as it is not disowned, an ambiguity of position remains which it is desirable to remove if it can be honestly done. Some speakers have said that Secularism is a sort of half-way house to atheism. The same foolish thing, we know, the Catholics said of Protestantism. If it be true that Secularism means atheism, or necessarily conducts to it, I am for saying so. For myself I would take no part in trepanning anyone even into Paradise. Whoever goes any way that I advise, will go with his eyes open.

It will, however, appear that Secularism is a distinctive thing—as distinct from atheism as the Iliad is from the Logarithm.—If I proceed with my story of our projected unity.

We live, as you know, in a disreputable, not to say deplorable, age, when hoary faiths are put to the question in this country, and so respectable a party as Satan is refused legal recognition in the Church. Therefore any change we can effect will be regarded with approval as our proper contribution to the ecclesiastical innovations of the times. But our capacity to promote useful changes—which mean progress—depends upon unity of action among ourselves.

In a new movement, like that of Secularism, which teaches not merely the "right," but the necessity of individuality in thought, and the duty of acting upon intelligent conviction (I say purposely intelligent conviction, for there is too much stupid conviction already acted upon), there will be diversity of opinion.

Among persons so advised, unity can be based only on agreements already subsisting. Unity now cannot be founded on any new invention in ideas, because years would be required to explain it and get it accepted. No! we must look among convictions established for a basis of unity. The history of free-thinkers for two centuries shows plainly what the points are upon which unity can be had to-day. There has been and is now agreement among them as follows:—

1. In promoting the good of this life for others as well as ourselves, and in the duty of doing it.
2. In attempting improvement mainly by material means, and of neither reproaching the gods nor bewailing our destiny, until these means have been tried.
3. In increasing the motives to morality, by taking what care can be taken, that truth, honesty, industry, and temperance shall be associated with honor and advantage in this life; and in fulfilling the obligations of these principles as though they were a religion.

These propositions neither involve atheism, nor connote it, nor require it to carry them out. Neither is atheism disparaged or condemned. It is simply left alone as another question altogether, as is the cognate question of futurity. The principles are "Secular" because their proof and scope lie in this world. If these are accepted as marks of membership by any society, that association is Secular. Other questions might be raised on the platforms of the society, but only on the individual responsibility of those who put them forward. The society will only be answerable for its official and corporate principles, and individual members will no longer, as now, be able at will or caprice to make other persons who may detest his views answerable for them in public opinion. The concise and mighty motto of Comte was—"Order and Progress." There must be order, in order that there may be progress: but it must be order which admits of progress. That is the order which I advise should be established in Secular Societies.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

ESSEX STREET, Temple Bar, London.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The Committee which has been investigating the connection of Mr. Blaine with the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad has discovered evidence which decidedly contradicts some statements contained in the personal explanation which Mr. Blaine gave recently in the House of Representatives. According to the testimony of Messrs. Adams, Fisher, and Mulligan—testimony supported by Mr. Blaine's letters, or by memoranda in his handwriting,—Mr. Blaine has had a great deal to do with the stocks and bonds of various railroads, "controlling interests" in them, etc., at a time when these roads were before Congress for legislation. In order to get at the particulars of Mr. Blaine's railroad operations, the Committee summoned a Mr. Mulligan, of Boston, formerly clerk of Mr. Warren Fisher, with which latter gentleman Mr. Blaine has done considerable business during the past twenty years. Besides acting as clerk for Mr. Fisher, Mr. Mulligan is also one of the trustees of the will of Mr. Fisher's father, and has always had an intimate knowledge of, in fact has managed, the son's business. With the express sanction and assistance of Mr. Fisher, Mr. Mulligan took with him to Washington a number of letters addressed to Fisher by Blaine. Immediately upon Mulligan's arrival at Washington he was sent for by Blaine, but believing that an interview under the circumstances would not be in accordance with propriety, he declined to go; whereupon Blaine came to Mulligan, at the latter's hotel, and requested permission to read the letters. Permission was at first refused, but, upon Blaine's promise to return them, they were handed to him. Blaine read the letters and then refused to return them. This astonishing and dishonorable conduct was reported to the Committee, the following morning, by Mulligan, whose testimony was confirmed by Fisher and Atkins, who were witnesses of a portion of the transaction, and by Mr. Blaine himself who admitted the essential truth of Mulligan's statement.

The outcome of this affair, so far as the Committee's investigation is concerned, we cannot surmise, and, in fact, this has now become a matter of secondary importance. As we write, Mr. Blaine, by advice of his counsel—Jere. Black and Matt Carpenter,—declines to surrender the letters to Mr. Mulligan or to the Committee. As regards Mr. Blaine, however, it is already proven (1) that his explanation in the House of Representatives was neither candid nor true; (2) that he acted as stock-broker, at least, if no worse, under very suspicious circumstances, and in connection with railroads with which he should have had nothing to do; (3) that he endeavored to tamper with a witness who he supposed intended to testify to his disadvantage; and (4) that, according to his own admission, he has been guilty of an extremely dishonorable act,—a compound of falsehood and robbery.

We have met with no attempt to justify Mr.

Blaine's conduct in retaining possession of the letters, with the exception of a passage in the Boston Traveller, which affirms that Mr. Blaine retained possession of the letters "as any other man would have done under the circumstances." If this statement be true, we think it is about time for a new deluge and a new race. Even from the evolutionist's point of view, it should not require many geologic ages to develop from an intelligent monkey a race of beings some of whom at least might be expected to exhibit a keener sense of honor than that which the Traveller now permits to any member of the human race.

The effect of the week's revelations upon the Cincinnati Convention will be revolutionary. Blaine's nomination is now out of the question; and even if it were still possible, political expediency would forbid, as his election would be an impossibility,—a fact which his most zealous friends must now admit. But as a plurality of the delegates to the convention were chosen for the purpose of nominating Blaine, their probable course now becomes a matter of deep interest. The Blaine delegates, should they remain united, could probably determine the nomination of any one of the prominent candidates remaining; but it is not at all likely that they will remain united, unless, as is possible, Blaine himself should formally withdraw from the contest, and advise them to vote for some specified candidate. This advice a large portion of them would be likely to follow, unless, as is again possible, something should occur to destroy the influence which Blaine still retains. All in all, the matter of Presidential nomination is now in an interesting state of uncertainty. The queen of the Republican chess-board has been unexpectedly captured; and although several pawns are pushed towards the queen's place, it is impossible to predict which one will get there, or by what combinations. As regards the Democratic nomination, Mr. Tilden's prospects of late steadily improve.

Last week's rumors with reference to Speaker Kerr have taken a distinct and very unpleasant form. A man by the name of Green testifies before the Committee that he received, in 1866, through Mr. Kerr's influence, an appointment in the regular army, and although a Republican and a resident of New York, he received the appointment by Democratic recommendation and as though he resided in Indiana. Green declares that for this appointment he paid Harney, an assistant doorkeeper of the House, the sum of $450, which sum, Harney affirms, was passed over to Mr. Kerr. Mr. Kerr denies that he received the money, but has declined thus far to give any satisfactory explanation of his peculiar appointment of Green. All attempts to break down the testimony of Green and Harney have failed, and the matter rests at present upon Harney's affirmation and Kerr's denial, (with the circumstantial evidence (in the absence of other explanation) in Harney's favor.

The question of jurisdiction in the Impeachment case is at length disposed of, the Senate having decided that it can try Belknap notwithstanding his resignation. It is quite possible, however, that the trial may be deferred for some time. The Senate also decided, by a vote of 24 to 20, to return nearly $800,000 of the Japanese Indemnity Fund; directed the President to appoint five commissioners to visit the Sioux Indians and to negotiate with them, if possible, a treaty for the surrender of the Black Hills to the United States; granted a small pension to the widow of the late Admiral Winslow; passed a bill providing for the sale of the lands of the Otoe and Missouri Indians in Kansas and Nebraska; and debated at length and made numerous amendments to the Legislative Appropriation Bill. The House, after debate and amendments, passed the Army Bill; and a bill providing for the sale of the Osage lands in Kansas to actual settlers. The tariff question came up, but its consideration was deferred. Morey, a republican Representative from Louisiana was unseated, and William B. Spencer, a Democrat, was put in his place.

Senator Morton, it is reported, procured last week the discharge of a clerk from the Treasury Department because the clerk, who had been appointed from Indiana, was not in favor of the nomination of Mr. Morton, at Cincinnati. For our present purpose we need not ask whether this report be true or not. We mention it only to call attention to what we understand to be an existing rule at Washington; namely, that a clerk can be dismissed from any department, upon the recommendation of the Senator from his own State, without the filing of any charges against him. The absurdity of this rule, from a business point of view, is apparent. Its equivalent would be to allow a manufacturer or customer to dismiss a clerk from a retail store, in the business of which the manufacturer or customer had no interest whatever save a desire to sell or a wish to purchase goods. The making and recalling of appointments by Congressmen—an assumption of power which custom is rapidly confirming—is at the bottom of the worst evils of our civil service. We need a President with courage enough to declare that Congressmen shall not make appointments to office, and having made the declaration, to stand by it with downright dogged or donkey stubbornness until its rightfulness is universally recognized.

It is pleasant to find one's prophecies coming true, even when these have been the warnings of Cassandra. When the "Silver Bill" was debated in Congress, we ventured to suggest that any attempt made at present to substitute silver change for fractional currency would be likely to cause more mischief than benefit; that it could only succeed with difficulty, and that in the event of a rise in the market-price of silver our small change would run away from us as surely as water runs down hill. The experiment has now been in progress for several weeks, during which time small change has remained steadily at a premium of from one to three per cent.; the larger silver coins are bought up by brokers as soon as they are issued, and are sent away to places where the premium upon them pays a profit upon their price and the cost of transportation; and some of the smaller coins remain only because the present value of silver is lower than has ever before been known. Some day our brilliant legislators will find out that the laws of political economy cannot be humbugged by Act of Congress, and that specie payment means solid gold and not silver sham.

The peculiar period of time known in Boston as Anniversary Week, seems to hold its own in point of attractiveness, and the various meetings held improve in character as they become less sensational. There is far less extravagance and sentimentalism manifested than in former years. One old "war-horse," who yet snuffs the memory of anti-slavery days, managed to get off, during a speech before the Woman's Suffrage Association, the amusing declarations that "there wasn't a boy in America who wasn't educated to steal"; "there wasn't an official in the Commonwealth who hadn't a stolen coat on his back"; and "the disfranchisement of woman was a sin, and the disfranchiser of woman was a sinner"; but, as a rule, this kind of nonsense and the various forms of rudomontade were not very plentiful. There can be no question but that religious, reform, and philanthropic meetings do a great deal of good. At least they furnish excellent escape-valves for a large amount of enthusiasm, which, under pressure, might become fanatical.

Nine students of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis have been dismissed from the academy upon the charge of stealing. Several of them were members of the highest class, had been in the institution nearly four years, and were nearly ready to begin active service. From newspaper reports we infer that the young men were guilty of a discreditable boyish trick, and were deserving of severe punishment; but that they intended to steal is, under the circumstances, a preposterous conclusion, and to punish them by a dismissal which entails a change of prospects and purposes for life seems to us, at this distance, to be unnecessary, and unjust. We should be glad to receive further information with regard to the unfortunate affair.

Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer, of New York, have succeeded in running a special train of cars from New York to San Francisco in 83 hours and 24 minutes, a rate of speed which, if it could be continued, would take them around the world in less than 35 days. At one time, in Pennsylvania, the train ran 44 miles without any stop. The most rapid rate attained was, we believe, 62 miles in an hour, or, at another time, 70 miles in 75 minutes. One result of this successful attempt is likely to be a general increase of speed of through trains upon all main roads.

All other news from Europe continues secondary in importance to that received from Turkey. The deposition of the Sultan Abdul-Aziz (since followed by his death by suicide) and the elevation to the throne of his nephew, Murad, seemed at first to present an opportunity for the settlement of existing difficulties, especially as the new Sultan was understood to be in favor of what may be termed constitutional reform. But the insurgents have taken advantage of the Sultan's deposition to increase their warlike preparations and to push their demands for independence. According to one report, Servia, Roumania, Montenegro, and Greece have entered into an offensive and defensive alliance, and although this report has been contradicted, we know that Greece is making warlike preparations, Servia has refused to pay tribute, on the ground that the new Sultan was illegally enthroned, Roumania, Bosnia, and Bulgaria are in a condition of partial insurrection, and Murad is resolved to fight rather than to allow European intervention. To crown all, England is reported to have decided in favor of preserving the integrity of Turkey, a phrase which is supposed to mean that England will assist Turkey in case other nations interfere.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, May 10, 1876.

Meeting after meeting is still the order of the world-ecclesiastical. Christians of every shape and form are gathering together, counting up gains and losses, and preparing for the coming year. Among other societies, that entitled the "British and Foreign Bible Society" has had its annual conference, has rejoiced over the number of Bibles and Testaments circulated, and over the many thousands of pounds which have poured into its exchequer. A serious thought is "borne in upon my mind" in connection with this wholesale scattering of Bibles. Two revision committees are now sitting, one on the Old Testament, the other on the New. They are amending mistranslations, correcting errors, making the infallible word less fallible, and the perfect truth less full of imperfections. Such a work would not have been commenced, had there not been grave reason for it; such a shock would not have been permitted to shake the easy credulity of Christians, unless it had been the only way of avoiding a more dangerous earthquake. To alter the Bible, to change the well-known phrases, to overthrow the old memories connected with it, was too serious a risk to be undertaken without the pressure of necessity. Now the work is still incomplete, and, if the opinion of Dr. Tischendorf be correct, it is necessary "to entirely reconstruct the whole text of the New Testament." What pleasant news for the subscribers to Bible societies! They have been scattering broadcast all over the world Testaments so incorrect that they need the whole text to be entirely reconstructed! Then they have not been taking the message of salvation to the heathen; they have been preaching "another gospel," which if any shall preach, "let him be accursed." Had not good Christians better button up their pockets until they are quite sure they have got the right thing, and that there is not a future Dr. Tischendorf lurking in some monastery, ready to spring upon them the mine of a newly-discovered manuscript older than the Sinaitic and more reliable than the precious parchment fragments which lay hid in the Mount Sinai waste-paper basket, "watched over by an invisible eye"? It is sad to reflect how much deadly spiritual harm the Bible Society has done during the past year, by persuading the ingenious savage that they have given him the word of God, when after all they have only deceived him into a treacherous sleep from which he will, we fear, only be awakened by the trumpet-blast of a new version.

For our further comfort, Dr. Angus, one of the revisers, tells us that there are 100,000 different readings in the various manuscripts of the New Testament; 100,000 different readings, and only one right? Alas, poor humanity! 99,999 holes into which thou mayest slip and lose thy soul, and only one spot of firm ground whereon thou mayest safely rest. Truly the ways of the Lord are marvellous, and his footsteps are not known.

The Congregational Union of England and Wales has also met to sing praises unto the Lord. They gathered in the City Temple, the place of worship whence was sent across the Atlantic the congratulatory message to the notorious pastor of Plymouth Church. The chairman was charged with the duty of delivering the annual address, and he selected as his subject, "Within the Fold." Some of his observations were curious, not to say impertinent: "Doubts and denials, which a short time ago were uttered with bated breath, were now blantly proclaimed. They partook of the outspoken character of the times, and they could not afford to ignore them. But they need fear nothing. From some indications which presented themselves, it would seem as if they might safely leave the potsherds of the earth to strive among themselves for mutual overthrow." And who are the "potsherds," pray, Mr. Dissenting Priest? Only such foolish and degraded people as Tyndall, Huxley, Clifford, Owen, and men of that stamp. Humility is scarcely one of the virtues of the Rev. Thomas Aveling, D.D. He proceeds disdainfully: "Like Cadmus, the men of letters and philosophy were sowing dragon's teeth, from which would spring an armed host." (It would perhaps be hypercritical to suggest to the learned D.D. that it was not Cadmus who sowed the teeth, but Jason, the enemy of Cadmus.) "At first they might think that they would be destroyed. But, as was seen in the fable, an invisible hand would throw a stone into the midst of them, and make them contend with one another, till but few remained, and these would assist in building the city of God, while his Church looked calmly on till the undertaking was accomplished, and then the cry there would be heard, 'This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.'" The metaphor seems rather "mixed." The men of letters are sowing the dragon's teeth; from the dragon's teeth spring an armed host; these fall out and fight each other; but, according to the story, Jason, who sows the teeth, remains triumphant, while the dragon's-teeth warriors slay each other. The moral, then, is that the men of letters will remain triumphant, while whatever is signified by the dragon's teeth will destroy itself though endeavoring to destroy them. The learned doctor should study his classics a little more accurately before drawing upon them for illustrations; like Balaam, he has essayed to curse the Israel of science, and, behold, he hath blessed them altogether, and hath prophesied in a parable of their ultimate triumph.

It seems, however, that the dragon's teeth, or Jason, or Cadmus, or somebody else, is to be opposed. "To some it might appear madness for men to attack that which they—the ministers—knew to be impregnable fortresses, and they might feel disposed to think that they might safely be left to their own undoing. But there was a method in their madness, and therefore they must be resisted, and with an intelligent ministry they had nothing to fear." An intelligent ministry combating methodically mad potsherds is a beautiful thought! There is only one disadvantage about an intelligent ministry. The most intelligent members of it have a bad habit of slipping into infidelity, and joining the ranks of the potsherds.

Dr. Aveling does not appear to be quite easy in his mind as to Messrs. Moody and Sankey. He says he approves of revivals, but nevertheless he gives a sly kick to "the evangelists." "The healthiest condition of a church" is when it is "not exhibiting a morbid craving for this or that delicious spiritual food, but, led to green pastures, to find them so satisfying that it had no desire to stray elsewhere (to big revival-meetings), or to have some shepherd from other places [Moody, bien entendu] to lead it to more stimulative, but perhaps more artificially-produced, food [oh, fie, Dr. Aveling, to speak thus of the simple and childlike Moody], that might not be found to be so truly nourishing." Carried away by professional jealousy, Dr. Aveling continues: "I fear there is sometimes a propensity to attach undue importance to the coming of evangelists to labor among our churches, looking for the advent of proposed revival-lets as if that were almost essential to the awakening of renewed life. Now, though no one will be more ready than we are to honor such excellent men as were recently among us, or to avow a respect for their piety, simplicity, and disinterestedness of aim, yet are we to believe that the work of revival could not have gone on without them? that apart from their presence and teaching there would have been no success? that they were the sole avant couriers of the spirit of God? and that no one else might presume to look for and obtain the Divine influence which is necessary to awaken people? In plain words: "Is not an Aveling as good as a Moody?" It must be pleasant for Mr. Moody to see the kindly Christian feelings his "big success" has caused in the bosoms of his brethren. Would some reader of THE INDEX kindly mail him a marked copy of his brother's loving remarks? But let him be consoled. For l'imitation c'est la flatterie la plus sincère, and Dr. Aveling thinks that perhaps, if they try to be as illiterate and boorish as Moody, they may share his success. "We may be certain that God will come to us, if we, too, be single-minded [narrow-minded?]; be content even to be thought illiterate, unscientific, if we can only succeed in obtaining a hearing for our message. Be satisfied with the simple presentation of the truth as it is in Jesus." In fact, be as clumsy, as awkward, as uneducated as a Moody, and then, perhaps, God will grant you crowded houses and hysterical audiences. We wish the congregations joy of their new style of preachers; but Dr. Aveling seems to have forgotten all about his "Intelligent ministry" who were to cope with the men of science.

A strange sermon has been preached, one of a course to be delivered at the request of the Christian Evidence Society, by a Rev. F. J. Jayne, M. A., tutor of Keble College, Oxford, on the text: "We walk by faith and not by sight." The preacher appears to have fallen in love with the famous saying: "I believe because it is impossible." "We were invited," he said, "to confront the darkest and most overwhelming of all mysteries,—the existence of physical and, still more, of moral evil, in a world made by an all-good and almighty Creator." No attempt at solution of the problem appears, according to the report before us, to have been attempted by the preacher. He simply stated that "it became easier to believe that we could not know the whole on this side of the grave, than it would be to accept any hypothesis which would claim to solve the mystery." So it is "easier" to shut the eyes and guess at a good God, than to peer steadily into the darkness and try to see. "We believed some dogmas because they were irrational, and though that fact set the teeth of fanaticism on edge, it had a fascination for us." But that is just the sort of declaration which pleases fanaticism. Only a fanatic could accept anything so utterly monstrous. What is the use of reason, if unreason is to be accepted as divine? Surely, this is the very Nemesis of faith. "We must return to the old grandly illogical position that, though evil was above, beneath, around, within us, yet God was at once all-good and almighty." The position is certainly "illogical," but does that make it "grand"? According to this dangerous doctrine, the more irrational the creed the more likely to be true. Then why not believe in a dozen gods, in dragons, in unicorns, in flying fiery serpents? Why not worship stones, lizards, monkeys, images? It would be "grandly illogical" to do all this, and thoroughly "irrational": no argument can serve against it, as the confessedly irrational cannot be touched by argument. And this from the Christian Evidence Society! Mr. Jayne concludes that "no one had discovered peace by discussing the problem of evil, but tens of thousands had found blessing in contending against it." That is, of course, no answer to the problem, but to fight against evil is sound practical advice, and as Mr. Jayne is manifestly not suited to metaphysics, had he not better confine himself for the future to showing people how to destroy evil, instead of talking about its origin?

As an English Secularist, permit me, Mr. Editor, to send, through THE INDEX, a word of congratulation to the Secularists in New York City. "Jenny June" writes me that a "Hall of Science" has just been opened in that town "at 141 East 8th Street, by Mr. G. L. Henderson, a man of some means," and that he has been joined in the effort by a gentleman "once a Po-tivist, and by far the most able man we had," and by another clever thinker. She speaks of these as "solid, excellent, earnest men." Thus the venture opens under favorable auspices. Here in England, our "Hall of Science" in London flourishes and grows ever stronger, and is becoming more and more recognized as a power to be reckoned with; it is a centre of radical political, as well as radical religious, thought, and as a London daily said sadly, "The Hall of Science can always furnish the nucleus of a formidable political demonstration." Why should not the New York Hall of Science prove the centre whence should flow a purifying current of political action? Right politics are the secret of a nation's happiness, and what but the happiness of the nation is the aim of the secularist?

ON A SULTRY Sunday morning the pastor's little girl, of nearly three summers, became wearied at the length of the sermon, and in a low tone of voice, but very earnestly, said, to the great amusement of those who sat near: "Come, papa; that's enough. Let's go home."

I LIKE THE sentiment of the poor woman who, coming from a wretched garret in an inland manufacturing town for the first time to the sea-shore, gazing at the ocean, said "she was glad for once in her life to see something which there was enough of."—Emerson.

Communications.

PHILADELPHIA LETTER.

PHILADELPHIA, May, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Not the least impressive among the many objects of interest at the Centennial Exhibition is the scene presented within Machinery Hall. There is this vast building, filled with machinery of every variety imaginable, from its adaptation to the finest work entering into the exact mechanism of a watch, to its applicability for effecting the most ponderous results, and all so complicated, yet acting with the utmost precision, as if instinct with intelligence. In the midst of all stands the omnipotent, giant engine, which at a touch sends life and action into its entire little universe of wonderfully-organized subjects, inertly waiting for the quickening impulse which its concentrated force can give. The impression produced is one of wonder and admiration at what the eye beholds, mingled with a sense of awe and reverence in contemplation of the invisible powers of Nature, by whose agency all this is wrought.

Emerson says, "We see God face to face every hour." This is usually understood to apply to the works of Nature, in contradistinction to the works of man. But, thus surrounded by the achievements of man, I was penetrated with the thought that God was there, the prime inspirer of it all; that, in the process of carrying out the grand designs of the universe, the Divine Architect, by a chosen method of evolution, by long and slow processes, at length brought matter to that nice degree of refinement which fitted it to serve, in the brain of man, as a medium of his own intelligence, and that thus, through man's agency, the Divine could evolve those products which could not be attained by the comparatively crude forces of Nature, and which, though usually ascribed to the wit and cunning of man, are really but manifestations of the Divine idea.

In a different way is the presence of Divine intelligence, as manifested through man, suggested by the innumerable products of skill—the contributions from all nations,—to be seen in the Main Hall of the Exhibition. Vain would it be to attempt a specification of interesting objects comprised in this seeming infinity of devices. To say nothing of the physical fatigue of traversing these many long avenues, stretching from end to end of the building, together with the frequent cross-alles from side to side, the eye soon becomes weary of seeing, and the mind too much bewildered to take in and retain a just impression of the multitudinous and widely diverse objects presented. To do justice to this grand Exhibition, one needs to take up his abode in the city for months, and study at leisure, from day to day, its separate portions. In this way the purposes of foreign travel might be largely accomplished. Still, much satisfaction may be obtained from spending only a day or two upon the grounds, and thus getting a general knowledge and impression of the whole.

The material advantages arising from the introduction of the arts and productions of one country to the knowledge of another are, of course, very great; but more important than these is the gain to humanity from bringing the diverse elements of it into familiar intercourse and acquaintance. It cannot but suggest to the different nations and races, that they are members of one great common family; that the interests of one are the interests of all; and that a narrow, selfish policy cannot but be suicidal to the highest good and prosperity of any one who should adopt it. And so, to the philanthropist and to the man possessing the spirit of a true, universal religion, this Congress of Nations, with the results of their civilization, cannot but encourage hope and stimulate effort in laboring for the elevation of humanity to a higher plane of freedom, justice, and righteousness—in short, to all that constitutes religion in its highest sense—than the world has ever yet known. A. H.

THE GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

NEW YORK, May 8, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—The sentiment of the working people is undoubtedly in favor of having the Centennial Exhibition open on Sunday. They feel the need of recreation as well as rest on that day; and the idea that they, as a class, are to be deprived of the benefits of the national exhibition, because of the mistaken zeal of Christians, is not pleasant to contemplate. Even thus early do we hear expressions showing plainly that the poor think the Centennial is to be managed so as to exclude them, in order that the rich may enjoy the Exhibition more exclusively; and so, at the beginning, the grand possibility of making it a place where all might mingle in harmony is thrown away. Whether we favor opening the Exhibition on Sunday or not, and whether our reasons are "Christian" or not, the fact remains, that Sunday is the people's day,—a day when the rank and file would turn out en masse to honor the nation's Centennial by their presence.

The zealous Christians in the Commission say No to this; and what else could we expect from those whose conception of the Ruler of this universe is developed from long years of slavery to creeds which reason and science have long since proved foolish?

Now more clearly apparent than ever is the necessity for the meeting of the Congress of Liberals; and I hope every earnest man and woman who has heard of that proposed meeting will, by word and presence and money, assist in making that meeting a grand success. The list of money received for this purpose grows, but not fast enough to prove that we are in earnest.

There are many who have not responded who can and should; and surely another appeal would arouse them to the propriety of backing up their principles by something more substantial than words. Words do some good, as evinced by the article from a country paper sent you yesterday, which was suggested by a postal addressed to the editor asking him "to speak for many an earnest word against closing the Centennial on Sunday."

But now we should all earnestly help to make our Liberal Congress a grand meeting, protesting in solemn tones against religious slavery.

Yours truly,

"A."

A BAPTIST'S FREEDOM.

MR. EDITOR:—

Do you know of any kind of religious freedom equal to this?

At one of the revival meetings held here a year ago, the Baptist minister of this place rose and said:—

"I am a free man. There is no ecclesiastical power on earth that has a feather's weight of authority over me. I think as I please; I act as I please; I believe what I please; and I please to think, and act, and believe as my Bible tells me to."

On another evening he accounted for certain strange phenomena thus:—

"It is true that infidels often lead moral lives. They are good neighbors, good citizens, and just in their dealings with their fellow-men; but they are so because they are obliged to be, in order to maintain their position. They claim to be as good as Christians, and therefore must behave decently before the world. A Christian does right simply because God requires it."

One night, at the close of an exhortation, this same gentleman stepped forward, and, walking slowly up the aisle in a fruitless quest for symptoms of penitence, unlocked his heavy lips to proclaim: "This is a free country. 'Tis a very free country. You can go to heaven or hell, just as you like." He then passed on in silence, leaving his ponderous words to impress the audience. X.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE BARON DE PALM.

NEW YORK, May 28.

The funeral of Baron de Palm according to ancient Egyptian rites was the occasion for a gathering of nearly 4,000 people at the Masonic Temple this afternoon. The deceased Baron, who came to this country fifteen years ago, had expressed a wish that no Christian priest or minister should be allowed to take part in his obsequies. They were conducted by the Theosophical Society of this city, of which the deceased was a member. Only those having tickets, about 1,500 in all, were admitted to the building. The assemblage was well dressed and intensely curious in regard to the nature of the funeral rites. They were of a much simpler character than had been expected. The coffin containing the body was placed on a dais on the platform. On the coffin were seven lights arranged in the shape of a triangle. Colonel Olcott acted as master and conducted the ceremonies. With him were six others to make responses. They were habited in long black robes. After brief intervals of music the questions and responses began. They consisted of curiously-phrased questions and answers from a regular ancient Egyptian liturgy, in regard to the nature of God, the human soul, and a future state of existence. During the questions and answers incense was burned and a figure of a serpent, twisted round a wooden cross, stood beside the coffin. An old gentleman, who did not like the nature of the ideas put forth in the ritual, ordered his daughter to leave the organ, so part of the musical portion of the ceremonies had to be dispensed with. Colonel Olcott delivered a long address on the nature of theosophy, and said the deceased Baron, after a long life in courts and a career of ambition, finding nothing in the creeds to satisfy his inquiries in regard to a future state, found consolation in theosophy. After the rites were over the remains were removed to a vault in the Lutheran cemetery, and will, it is said, be cremated as soon as permission can be obtained from the authorities. The body was embalmed soon after death. The Times has the following description of the scene: The platform or altar was embellished by an incense-burner which, according to the offices of the society, was emblematic of the worship of fire, and a wooden cross bearing a serpent who seemed to be engaged in an honest but fruitless effort to bite his own tail. This was typical, according to a member of the association of "the evolution of matter." Between the cross and the vase of burning incense, and directly in front of the stage, appeared the coffin. It was a handsome ebony casket, bound with silver, and bearing the name, age, and titles of the dead gentleman. On it were placed seven lighted candles, five of them white, one of them red, and the other green; they were also intended to typify the worship of fire and light. Seated on the stage, in a circle behind the coffin, were the president and six members or fellows of the association. They were all clad in long flowing gowns of a heavy black woollen material, and each of them bore in his hand a bunch of green leaves, which signified their "good will and peace toward men."—Advertiser.

THE LOUISVILLE Courier-Journal tells of an impecunious tramp therewith, who offered a cancelled postage-stamp for sale at a high price as a sacred relic, declaring that it was from one of St. Paul's letters to the Corinthians. This is a hard winter.

A LITTLE half orphan, four years old, who has been taught that her papa is in heaven, and who was particularly annoyed by loud thunder one day, said: "I wish I could speak to my papa to ask God not to make so much noise up in heaven."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE
 INDEX ASSOCIATION,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CAULFIELD'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 1 vol.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig, and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Paraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrowska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede..... Romola..... The Mill on the Floss..... Felix Holt..... Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life..... The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols..... Middlemarch. 2 vols..... Wit and Wisdom of..... The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.40
Essays. Second Series.....	2.40
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. ("George Eliot's" translation.).....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.00
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe, 2 vols.....	3.00
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.00
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venustian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journey.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	3.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.25
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introduction by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	8.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskokee from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infants and the Finite.....	1.00
PEELER'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tricky Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S..... 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50 .50 .50 .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 35 vols.....	51.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jeans. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcombes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Deeds Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLE (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	5.00
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I. METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II. PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III. LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV. THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.
2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.
3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.
2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.
3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge..... 6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

DR. EDWARD E. DENNIS-TON'S

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

—AT—

BRINSTEIN, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

NUMBER LIMITED TO THIRTY.

T H E

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3 50.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham..... 1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd..... .75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald..... 1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck..... .75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid..... 2.00

FREDY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPH-

ER AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid..... 1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

T H E I N D E X

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60

cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13

and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one

hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred,

$3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing.

25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts.

each; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

THOMAS PAINE.

CABINET PHOTOGRAPHS

Of MORSE's Bust of Thomas Paine, for sale at the Office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston. Price, 50 cts.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETENICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)...$1.50

CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION..... 1.00

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS..... 1.00

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND

OTHER DISCOURSES..... 1.00

LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER..... 3.00

THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM

IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp.,

with steel portrait of the author) ... 2.50

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized,

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-offices addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and head-quarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

ALEXANDER LOOS,

ISAAC RHEN,

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,

H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1876.

WHOLE NO. 338.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE LATEST EDITION of the Encyclopædia Britannica estimates that within four centuries America will sustain a population of thirty-six thousand millions!

A NEW Liberal League has just been organized at Adel, Iowa, and Hon. Benjamin Green elected its delegate to the Congress of Liberals. We learn indirectly of other elections of delegates, but not officially.

THE NINTH Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, which imperative duties elsewhere forbade us to attend, is said to have been as interesting and enjoyable as ever. We are sorry to have received no report of the proceedings to supply the deficiency of personal participation.

AN ITEM is floating through the press, saying that a clergyman, being invited to open a State Legislature with prayer, uttered the following ambiguous petition: "May corruption and sin of every form be as far from every member of this Legislature as Thou art." We are almost in favor of appointing that clergyman a chaplain.

A VERY INTERESTING circular on "The Sacred Books of the East" was kindly forwarded to us by Professor Max Müller, just before he left England to secure a year's rest on the Continent. It gives valuable information concerning the great literary enterprise to which he intends devoting several years of toil, and is republished in full in this issue of THE INDEX. Every one interested in the religions of the Orient will wish for Professor Müller a renewal of health and vigor, and await with keen expectancy the final result of his indefatigable labors.

THE DESTRUCTION of the historic Old South meeting-house was actually begun last Friday, June 9. By permitting this act, Boston proves its "Centennialism" to be sheer vandalism, thinly varnished over with a pretence of reverence for the precious heirlooms of the Revolution. She is unworthy to have the custody of such things, and will soon be as bare of them as Chicago. But what a year to select for the display of her "cheap commercial spirit"! Boston as a city has sunk to the level of a miser who should sell his mother's coffin for the sake of a few silver-plated nails.

THE NATIONAL Woman Suffrage Association have opened "Parlors" at Philadelphia. On July 4 they propose to issue a "Declaration of Rights" for woman, and a "Grand Protest" against the Centennial celebration of "the Independence of the People" while one-half of the people are political slaves. They call upon all women, "in meetings, in parlors, in kitchens, wherever they may be," to join in this declaration and protest, and to send them copies of their utterances for preservation in a Centennial Book. They also announce a great mass-meeting in Philadelphia on July 19 and 20. For further particulars, address "The National Woman Suffrage Parlors, 1431 Chestnut St., Philadelphia."

THE LIST of subscriptions for the Centennial Congress of Liberals has swelled so rapidly this week that it bids fair to crowd our editorials over to the advertising pages! It is like an oak planted in a flower-pot, threatening to burst the confines of THE INDEX altogether. Very well: so be it! For two or three weeks longer we cheerfully yield all the space which is needed to tell the story of the generous enthusiasm of the friends of the National Liberal League. It is a story a thousandfold more eloquent and inspiring than any words of ours could possibly be. We exult in this proof that the liberals of America are baptized with a new spirit of earnestness for freedom and equal rights; and we believe that in the years to come every one whose name is there inscribed will point to it with pride and pleasure. That list is the Roll of Honor of this Centennial year; and our children, conning the records of the long conflict by which religious liberty in America was made forever safe from the crafty assaults of its enemies, will rejoice to read in it the names they hold most dear.

THE CHRISTIAN AMENDMENT party (misnamed the "National Reform Association") announce a great convention in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, beginning on Wednesday, June 28, and closing on Friday, June 30—just before the Centennial Congress of Liberals is convened. They publish a list of ninety-two Vice Presidents, all eminent in Church or State. On June 7, Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, presented in Congress numerous petitions, signed by 3,964 persons, "in favor of an amendment to the Constitution recognizing the Almighty God and the Christian religion." It is as easy to vote this Christianizing movement dead as it is to vote oneself a farm; and it is as easy in one case as in the other to execute the vote. The stubborn fact is that "the movement moves"—which is all that can well be expected of any movement. These persistent fanatics perfectly comprehend the situation; they perceive the necessity of making the national Constitution and the national administration harmonize; and they propose to do it by making the Constitution recognize Christianity. The Liberal League proposes to do it by making the administration recognize secular freedom. One or the other policy must triumph in the end: which shall it be?

JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, who is regarded as the ablest Catholic in England, has written: "Whatever be historical Christianity, it is not Protestantism. If ever there were a safe truth, it is this. And Protestantism has ever felt it. I do not mean that every Protestant has felt it; for it was the fashion at first, at least as a rhetorical argument against Rome, to appeal to past ages, or to some of them; but Protestantism, as a whole, feels it, and has felt it. This is shown in the determination of dispensing with historical Christianity altogether, and of forming a Christianity from the Bible alone; men never would have put it aside, unless they had despaired of it. It is shown by the long neglect of ecclesiastical history in England, which prevails even in the English Church. Our popular religion scarcely recognizes the fact of the twelve religion ages which lie between the Councils of Nicea and Trent, except as affording one or two passages to illustrate its wild interpretations of certain prophecies of St. Paul and St. John. It is melancholy to say it, but the chief, perhaps the only, English writer who has any claim to be considered an ecclesiastical historian is the infidel Gibbon. German Protestantism, on the other hand, has been of a bolder character; it has calmly faced and carefully surveyed the Christianity of eighteen hundred years, and it frankly avows that it is a mere religion of man, and the accident of a period. It considers it a syncretism of various opinions, springing up in time and place, and forming such combinations, one with another, as their respective characters admitted. It considers it as the religion of the childhood of the human mind, and curious to the philosopher as a phenomenon. And the utter incongruity between Protestantism and historical Christianity is true, whether the latter be regarded in its earlier or in its later centuries."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OKMOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kraschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAG CLAIR, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.
 DARIEN, WIS.—Crosby Carleton, President; Daniel Rodman, Secretary.
 SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—J. L. Hatch, President; A. J. Boyer, Secretary.
 ADRI, IOWA.—George B. Warren, President; T. R. North, Secretary.

The Catholic Peril in America.

REPRINTED FROM THE "LONDON FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW,"
OF MARCH, 1876.*

BY FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

No doubt can be left in the mind of any one who even superficially studies this subject, that the entire forces of the Catholic Church (excepting only here and there an isolated and half-liberalized Catholic, like Senator Kernan, of New York, or Mayor Kelly, of Richmond,) are gradually becoming massed in determined opposition to the public school system, or that their opposition, which is already arousing an aggressive Evangelical reaction, threatens to destroy even the present imperfect secularism of the schools, and thereby ultimately the public school system itself; for it may be safely said that American voters will certainly refuse to be taxed for the support of other men's religions, and that, if they cannot agree to support public schools independent of all religions, they will sooner or later refuse to be taxed for public schools of any sort. And the worst peril of the Catholic agitation at present is the possibility of its so inflaming the jealousy and bigotry of Protestants as to lead to a general adoption of church-schools, or (worse even than that) the effective and permanent fortification of the present sectarian features of the public schools by the adoption of measures which, as I shall show below, must involve a tremendous revolution in the whole theory of American politics.

SUCCESS OF THE ATTACK.

The degree of success already achieved by the Catholic clergy in alienating the affections of their flocks from the public school system may be seen by the public boast of Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, New York, who said, four years ago: "There are at the present time not far from one hundred thousand Catholic children in the Christian free schools of the State of New York"—i. e., in the parochial schools supported voluntarily by Catholics. Turning over the leaves of Sadler's Catholic Directory, in every diocese there is seen to be a long list of such schools, with a large number of pupils in each; but the labor of adding them all up, which would be herculean, is left to the reader. It is evident that the parochial school system is in a highly flourishing condition, and must be supported by the vast majority of the Catholic laity. Whoever imagines (and multitudes of otherwise intelligent persons in this country indulge the imagination) that the Catholic laity cannot be depended upon to follow the lead of their clergy in opposition to the public school-system, should devote a few hours to a careful inspection of this Directory. To select the very first list of parochial schools, that of the archdiocese of Baltimore, as an illustration, he would find 61 schools, with a total attendance of 13,016 scholars, and an average attendance of about 240. A similar showing is made in all the other archdioceses, dioceses, and vicariates apostolic. Of course there are not a few individual Catholics who are too lax in the faith to give up the substantial advantages of a public school education for their children, even for the threats or promises of the Church; and for the present the ecclesiastical authorities tolerate a certain amount even of open opposition. But it is the extreme of credulity to be deceived by such facts as these into doubting the fixity of the ecclesiastical purpose or the certainty of general lay compliance. The parochial system is so flourishing, and so well sustained by lay contributions, as already to have seriously reduced the attendance at the public schools in many places, and in a few (as in some parts of Brooklyn, I believe) to have almost broken them up. Bishop McQuaid declared, in 1871, that the city of Rochester, New York, in which he resides, had 4,000 children in the Catholic schools, and 5,500 in the public schools; and he added, in the same spirit as that of Bishop Gilmour's above-quoted Lenten Pastoral: "In the years to come we shall be more occupied with school-building, and with the education of our children, than the erecting of churches, although this work will not be permitted to stand still."

Bishop Ryan, of Buffalo, like every bishop who has spoken publicly on the subject, has declared the same policy, and avowed himself "a stern, avowed, and uncompromising enemy" of all schools in which positive instruction in the Catholic faith is not given. The result of this unanimous policy has been to tax heavily the pockets of the people, who have nevertheless cheerfully submitted in the main.

But the Catholic warfare against secular State education is not alone manifested by the establishment of a great independent system of Church schools: it adapts itself to circumstances. Wherever the Church can get control of the public schools, it does not scruple to do so; and, if the Catholics ever become the majority, as they confidently expect, their objections to State education will vanish: The Louisville, Kentucky, Catholic Advocate, of August 12, 1875, published the following letter:—

"EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., August 4, 1875.

"EDITOR CATHOLIC ADVOCATE:—

"Yours of the 28th ult. was received, but, being absent from home, I could not answer you ere this. The scrap of news hailing from East St. Louis is true. The Board of Education permits us to select our own teachers, and they are approved of by the Board according to law. Catechism is taught outside of school hours in the school-rooms. Our text-books are all right. You seem anxious to know how comes it that our schools are supported by the public funds. Well, it is this wise: the majority of our population are Catholics, and they elect Catholic directors. This is the key that solves the grant. You may make any comment you please. I simply give the facts as required.

"Yours very respectfully,
"P. J. O'FALLORAN, V. F."

Some of the comments on this letter, made by the editor of the Catholic Advocate, are so instructive, and throw so much light on the subject under discussion, that I must not omit them, considering that the original words are more satisfactory than any paraphrase of my own:—

"Catholics may from this plainly see for themselves that the settlement of this fretted question depends altogether on votes. In cities where justice to Catholics is most easy, there are always a sufficient number of Catholic voters to turn the tide of election in any way they please, if they will but unite and intelligently use their franchise, the only argument that can reach the non-Catholic public. It is by no means necessary that Catholics should be in a majority in a community to obtain a division of the school-fund,—a small return for what they yearly pay for this purpose into the public treasury. It is only necessary that they should allow politicians to divide among themselves, as their own ambition and pecuniary interest will always divide them, and then cast the weight of the Catholic vote in favor of every good man who is willing to support the Catholic claim for justice. In this way a comparatively small band of voters may elect to office men of their own principles."

THE POWER OF A MINORITY.

The whole world knows how New York city lay for years at the mercy of a gang of thieves and robbers called the Tammany Ring, who stole millions upon millions of the public money, and kept themselves in power by the Catholic vote, which was always ready to support such "good" men as Tweed, Sweeney, Connolly, Hall, Barnard, McCunn. In 1869, 1870, and part of 1871, under the régime of this precious set, sectarian appropriations out of the money raised by tax on the property of New York citizens were made to 103 Catholic institutions, including churches, hospitals, parochial schools, and so forth, to the amount of $1,390,339. During the same time, appropriations were made to Protestant institutions to the amount of $112,293, and to Hebrew institutions to the amount of $25,852: both together, $138,145. All this money was virtually stolen money. The Protestants accepted 7 per cent., and the Catholics 91 per cent. Over and above this, in 1869, the Catholics got $178,072, the Protestants $0,500, and the Hebrews and others $29,738 of excise money. And the same story must be told of the succeeding years, even after the downfall of the Ring, the amounts only being less, down to the 1st of January, 1875, when the exasperated people put a summary stop to all further sectarian stealings by an amendment to the State Constitution. But the debt of New York city, according to Comptroller Green's statement, amounted, on October 1, 1875, to $131,113,900.74; and for a very large, if not the major, part of this enormous debt the Catholic vote must be held responsible, since without it the rogues could not have committed their robberies, nor their insatiable party remained in power. In this manner, the Catholic Church, accepting largesses of money which it well knew to be stolen property, built up its costly parochial schools for the better training of its children in the elements of morals. If it should be held to be directly implicated in the thefts by which it so largely profited, and to be consequently unfitted for giving instruction in any morals but those of the pick-pocket, it might protest against the severity of such judgment, but would find it extraordinarily difficult to dispute its justice. So far as they shared in this public iniquity, the Protestants and Hebrews also must share in the public disgrace; but the chief offenders have the chief title to the unenviable distinction it confers. There is little cause for surprise, if the astonishing growth of the Catholic Church, and its relentless hostility to thoroughly honest education as given in the public schools, have excited grave disquietude in the minds of all American citizens, who do not favor a general corruption of public morals.

Perceiving, then, how easy it is in this country for an unprincipled minority to acquire controlling power, and how ready the Catholic Church is to aid and abet their plots for its own sinister purposes, and how mischievously it is already using its great political influence to compass the destruction of our only real safeguard, the public school system, every intelligent and sincere friend of free institutions must deplore the garrulous fatuity which so loudly and frequently urges that because the Catholics are only a minority they are not to-day dangerous. Is it so new a thing for a minority to govern? Did not a minority of 300,000 slave-holders conquer the whole United States, compelling us, for many decades, to obey their own imperious will? Did not a ridiculously small minority, the Tammany Ring, conquer the city and State of New York, ruling and robbing without check, because they were cunning and organized, while the great public were stupid, indifferent, and disunited? What gigantic and persistent efforts were necessary to break the sceptre of this half-dozen of treasury-pilferers, and how small has been the success of those who tried to punish the robbers and recover the plunder! Minority, indeed! But has not the world been ruled by minorities from time immemorial? The Catholic party is certainly a minority; nevertheless it is to-day winning victory after victory over the great helpless majority, and will continue to do so, fastening itself on the neck of the nation, like the Old Man of the Sea on the neck of Sindbad the Sailor, unless the majority have sense enough to open their eyes and enact the measures necessary for the preservation of their liberties.

THE ELEMENTS OF CATHOLIC POWER.

The elements of its power are chiefly these:—
 [The Catholic theory is, intellectually considered, a self-consistent and logically compacted whole; it can be understood, therefore, and over every mind untrained to see the falsity of its premises possesses that mighty power which grows out of this easy intelligibility. This is a cause of perpetual fidelity to Catholicism among intellectual people who can comprehend logic, but know little or nothing of science. Most Protestant theological arguments against Catholicism they see to be mere blunders,—failures to understand what is controverted; and scientific arguments against it they themselves fail to understand. A high degree of mental culture in certain directions is thus compatible with profound faith in Catholicism; while uncultured people, being relieved from the necessity of thinking for themselves, encounter no difficulty in submitting to a faith which is only presented to them in a simple, attractive, and harmonious manner. Few non-Catholics are able to appreciate this element of strength, from a lack of that logical imagination which is requisite to look at Catholicism heliocentrically, so to speak,—from an inability to discern the rigorous intellectual unity of a system the premises of which they themselves reject. But no one who is competent to comprehend Catholicism can fail to be struck with the logical power often displayed by Catholic reasoners, or to perceive the secret cause why so few Catholics become Protestants: namely, the fact that Catholics are logically more true to the premises of Christianity than are Protestants, whose system is an image of gold with feet of clay. What makes Catholics apostatize is very seldom the arguments of Protestantism: it is the demonstrations of science, the influences of secular civilization, the mighty fascinations of spiritual and political freedom. Its intellectual unity deserves to be considered as the great cause of the power of Roman Catholicism. With unerring logical sequence, the Church has drawn out of the original "Christian confession" its latent implications, and expressed them historically in her own career; and she has nothing to fear from Protestantism till Protestantism has advanced to the freedom and enlightenment of positive knowledge.]

The Roman Catholic Church is a universal, political power, foreign nowhere, but everywhere at home—a Theocratic Imperialism of the most absolute character, both spiritual and temporal—a system of government claiming and exercising the most despotic authority over the action of every one of its subjects, in political just as much as in private concerns. It commands the conscience and the suffrage of every Catholic citizen in support of every measure which it judges advantageous to its own interests, and thus lays an iron hand on the very roots of all political power. It wields this power solely with an eye to its own aggrandizement, and aims at a universal dominion which is hostile to every fundamental principle of the United States Constitution and of modern civilization.

* The introductory portion as far as the sub-heading, "ROME IN AMERICA," and also a passage bracketed under the sub-heading, "THE ELEMENTS OF CATHOLIC POWER," were omitted in this article as published by the Fortnightly Review, and are here supplied from the manuscript sheets kindly returned by the editor.

In America, where everything is done by voluntary association, and where Protestant organizations are forced to enter into competition with the Catholic Church, the superior efficiency of the latter as an organization is indicated unmistakably in the statistics of their relative growth given above. There is no "canon law," technically considered, which is recognized by the civil courts of the United States; and the priests enjoy none of the protection against the arbitrary authority of their bishops which the "canon law" itself confers. This is a so-called "missionary country," in which the dioceses, however, are governed by canonical bishops, not by vicars apostolic; and the sixty-four bishops constitute a close corporation, with absolute power over the priests, who are thus mere slaves of Episcopal domination. Further, the title to the entire Church property of each diocese is vested in the bishop in fee simple; and the laity are thus as powerless as the priests against him. Lastly, the Catholic press is as completely under Episcopal control as the priesthood and the laity. This absolute concentration of all substantial power, alike over pulpit, property, and press, makes the bishops the most thoroughly despotic body in the land, and gives them a degree of power greater than they possess in any other country. The appointment of Cardinal McCloskey has completed the structure of Catholic ecclesiastical absolutism, against which there is no powerful barrier except the general protective influences of free political and educational institutions. Whether this protection will prove adequate or not, or whether it must be supplemented by positive restrictive legislation, is a question for the future to decide. Unfortunately, the case is complicated by the existence of a rival, but much feeble, spirit of propagandism among Protestant sects, which dangerously retards the establishment of that absolute separation of Church and State which is the vital principle of American republicanism.

Again, the wealth of the Catholic Church, which is the great weapon of its ambition, is accumulating, as I have already shown, far more rapidly than the general wealth of the country. By their individual tenure of all Church property, the bishops are enabled to manage it as they please; and they are shrewd enough to invest it as much as possible in real estate, holding it untaxed in consequence of the policy of exemption by which the States are preparing a bitter future for themselves, and leaving it to rise in value by the labors of the outside world. In addition to the constant contributions they collect in small sums from servant-girls and other poor Catholics, they thus contrive to levy taxes on the general community, and put their hands into the pocket of every business man in the nation. History and experience go for nothing with the preoccupied and apathetic public, who submit to all this in the half-defined but insane notion that somehow or other the laws of Nature are not the same here as in the Old World. Meanwhile the process continues, and the Roman Catholic Church is fast becoming the richest corporation in the land, with all its despotic money power in the hands of an Episcopal "Roman Ring," who use it in making it greater and more effective still for the overthrow of free institutions.

But greater than all these sources of strength put together, is the weakness of the public conscience and the unsuspiciousness of the public intelligence. The people have too long submitted, half angrily, half lazily, to the control of caucus-managers, petty rings, and utterly selfish politicians, who are all ready to make any sacrifice for immediate partisan success, and therefore to make any bargain, however corrupt, with those who hold the balance of power. Here is the unguarded point in the defenses of the public freedom. It is this moral and mental weakness of the people themselves, their blindness to the duty of the hour or their criminal negligence in performing it, which makes the Catholic minority so dangerous to the country.

THE THREE PHASES OF PROTESTANT REACTION.

Such are the chief elements of power, though many more might be enumerated, possessed by the Roman Catholic Church in its assault on the public schools, and (through them) all free institutions. But the real peril lies less in the present actual extent of this power than in the character of the reaction excited by its direct assault on the system of State education. Catholic ambition is rousing Protestant Evangelical ambition to new and dangerous manifestations; and between these rivalries of religious fanaticism, each party aiming at political power, I believe that the institutions of the Republic are certain to be subjected to a strain severer than any they have hitherto experienced. There are three leading forms assumed by the distinctively Protestant reaction against Catholic assaults on the public school system:—

1. A movement to surrender State education altogether, and to fall back on a system of denominational schools. This movement, which adopts the Catholic premise that doctrinal religious education is paramount in importance to all other, and which has been to some extent carried out by the establishment of Church schools of various Protestant sects, has not been a very influential one hitherto. But its ideas have been stated with great force in the New York Tribune of December 9, 1875, by the Rev. John Miller, in a letter headed "State Schools a Mistake."

2. A movement to defend State education is now conducted, including reading of the Bible "without note or comment," and also Protestant hymns and prayers. This movement represents the fixed determination of the vast majority of Evangelical Protestants, as proved by the almost unanimous declarations of their ecclesiastical assemblages; although some influential journals whose orthodoxy is very imperfect—as, for instance, the New York Christian Union and Independent—are in favor of secular schools.

3. A movement to fortify the existing advantages of Evangelical Protestantism, both in the political and educational institutions of the nation, by securing the adoption of a doctrinal amendment of the United States Constitution, incorporating into its preamble a distinct national recognition of Protestant Christianity. This movement, of which I shall speak again, is numerically weak, but represents the logical necessity to which the Evangelical party will be driven by events, if the agitation of the Catholic question continues.

These are the three phases of Protestant reaction, as such, against the aggressive activity of the Roman Catholic Church. Of course there are a great many individual members of the Protestant sects who favor the principle of absolutely secular education in our public schools, and who will fail to act with their fellow-believers at the ballot-box. But, on the other hand, a great many persons who are totally disconnected with any Protestant sect, will be sure to vote in support of the Evangelical policy, whether from social, business, political, or other interested motives. Notwithstanding the wild and sanguine hopes of many liberals, and notwithstanding the loose boastfulness of superficial and flippant writers for the daily press, no intelligent observer can seriously doubt that the vast preponderance of political power is at present on the side of Evangelical Protestantism, whenever it chooses to assert itself at the polls; or that its strength lies chiefly in its rapidly consolidating organization, its wealth, its social supremacy, and its power to gratify or defeat political aspirations; or that its strength is relatively decreasing every day under the opposite encroachments of "Romanism and infidelity" on its domain; or that the instinct of self-preservation, together with the natural conservatism of all power and wealth, will drive it to give desperate battle in defence of its existing privileges rather than submit to deprivation of them by either of the foes that hem it in. While the great struggle over the slavery question continued, public attention was withdrawn from religious issues to a large extent. But now there is no longer any question of universal, absorbing interest before the people which can be compared for a moment with the question—What shall be the permanent religious character of American civilization? Every indication of the deeper currents of thought and feeling points to an approaching contest of unprecedented proportions in working out a practical solution of this mighty problem; and, roughly outlined, three great religious parties are now in the field, destined each to play a momentous part in the immediate future. The Centennial year of the national existence marks the beginning of a political epoch, of unknown duration, in which religion is evidently to take the lead of all public issues; and these three parties are slowly gathering themselves together for a struggle that must be forever memorable in the history of the race.

THE CATHOLIC PARTY.

The first of these parties—the Roman Catholic Church—I have already sufficiently described as it exists in the United States. Its power has been sufficiently proved by the fact that it has deliberately selected the field of battle for the first great shock of arms; namely, the public school system. It has also selected its own time, and made the first attack in force, and compelled its antagonists to assume the defensive attitude.

THE EVANGELICAL PARTY.

The second of the three parties is the Protestant Evangelical party, not compacted into one powerful organization like the Catholic Church, but composed of several great sects, and a swarm of minor ones, and weakened by mutual jealousies, discordant interests, and rival ambitions. But, politically considered, it is very likely to unite on some definite measure which shall be "unsectarian" as to its own component factions, yet "sectarian" as to both Catholics and "infidels," whom it dreads and hates as heartily as it does the Catholics. It has taken up the phrase "non-sectarian schools," as its watchword; but by this it means the schools as now conducted, with Protestant prayers, hymns, and scriptures. The studied ambiguity of this phrase (which, properly interpreted, would satisfy the friends of positive or secular education) is one of the dangerous elements of the situation. That the present school system is rendered in the large and true sense sectarian by the support of Protestant worship, would be stoutly denied by the vast majority of Protestant Evangelicals; but they are prepared to fight to the death in defence of this strictly sectarian worship, as the flag of Protestantism floating over the public schools. This was a leading issue in the Ohio campaign during the summer and autumn of 1875; and it promises to be a leading issue in the Presidential campaign of 1876. It is only by keeping the ambiguity of the word "sectarian" in mind that recent events can be understood in their full significance.

On September 29, at Des Moines, Iowa, President Grant made at the Reunion of the Army of the Tennessee one of the most important speeches ever delivered in this country, for it marked the definite introduction of the school question into national politics. Taking his cue from this speech, the Hon. James G. Blaine, late Speaker of the House of Representatives, and a well-known aspirant for the Presidency, wrote a private letter to an Ohio friend, under date of October 20th, proposing a form of amendment to the Constitution. This letter was not published till more than a month later, when it made a great sensation; and on December 13th, Mr. Blaine formally proposed his amendment in the House, with slight modifications, as follows:—

"No state shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor or any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; and no money or lands so devoted shall be divided among religious sects or denominations."

This amendment is a direct blow aimed at the Roman Catholic Church in the interest of Evangelical Protestantism; for, if passed, it will defeat the Catholic effort to get control of or else divide the school funds, and at the same time will leave the Protestants in undisturbed mastery of the schools themselves. Mr. Blaine's proposition is a pretty evident bid for the support of the Evangelical party in the approaching political contest. But the President, in his annual message to Congress, dated December 7th, had already recommended measures still more sweeping, which have astounded the country by their boldness, and perplexed all parties alike. They include, among other things, the taxation of all church property (with "possibly" the exception of church edifices), the establishment of compulsory education so far as to make illiteracy a cause of disenfranchisement after 1890, and the formal declaration that Church and State shall be forever separate and distinct. With reference to the schools, I quote his language:—

"As the primary step, therefore, to our advancement in all that has marked our progress in the past century, I suggest for your earnest consideration, and most earnestly recommend it, that a Constitutional Amendment be submitted to the legislatures of the several States for ratification, making it the duty of the several States to establish, and forever maintain, free public schools adequate to the education of all the children in the rudimentary branches, within their respective limits, irrespective of sex, color, birthplace, or religion, forbidding the teaching in said schools of religious, atheistic, or Pagan tenets, and prohibiting the granting of any school funds or school taxes, or any part thereof, either by legislative, municipal, or other authority, for the benefit, or in aid, directly or indirectly, of any religious sect or denomination, or in aid, or for the benefit of any other object of any nature or kind whatever."

It is at present uncertain whether the President means to include Protestant worship under "teaching religious tenets"; but the courts could hardly construe the phrase so strictly. His language, like Mr. Blaine's, is open to more than a single construction; and it would hardly be just to insist on any particular one. Unfortunately ambiguous phraseology is no new thing in American politics. But the flood-gates are opened, and the public must be prepared for a deluge of propositions to amend the Constitution. It is a grave and anxious time for patriots. The school question is now fairly up for discussion and decision, and the form it has inevitably taken—that of a constitutional amendment—cannot fail to call public attention to another proposed amendment, which has been lying for years like a lighted slow-match near a powder-magazine.

THE "CHRISTIANIZERS," OR EVANGELICAL RADICALS.

The Protestant Evangelical party are evidently determined not to consent to the thorough secularization of the school system; they are doggedly resolved to keep the Bible in the schools. Starting with this foregone conclusion, there is an extreme left wing of the party which discerns the defective legal guarantees for the perpetuation of religious worship in the schools, and is shrewd enough to see that there is no way to perpetuate it without some formal recognition of Protestant Christianity in the fundamental law of the land. Every great question, like the slavery question, must be finally settled in this country by a constitutional amendment. To "defend the existing Christian features of the government" (for, notwithstanding the theoretical separation of Church and State, we have many such "survivals" of a pre-national period), these long-headed men, with the enthusiasm which is easily generated by clear conviction in logical minds, declare the absolute necessity to their cause of some adequate change in the Constitution, which is, thanks to the wisdom of its heterodox framers, a purely secular document from beginning to end, and contains not a clause or word by which, in the United States Courts, the "Christian features" alluded to could possibly be defended against a strong effort for their abolition. Consequently they propose to amend the preamble of the Constitution, which is its enacting clause, so as "suitably to express our national recognition of Almighty God as the author of national existence and the source of all power and authority in civil government, of Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations, and of the Bible as the fountain of law, and the supreme rule for the conduct of nations."

"The birth of the movement for this purpose," says the Rev. David MacAllister, one of the leaders of it, "may be dated from the 4th day of February, 1863." Its first convention was held at Xenia, Ohio; and a similar convention, without any knowledge of the other, was held at Sparta, Illinois, on February 6th of the same year. Since then, numerous conventions have been held in different parts of the country on behalf of the movement, and have been usually largely attended and widely reported. United States Senators, Governors, Judges of the Supreme Courts of the United States and of many States and Territories, presidents and professors of colleges, bishops and clergymen of many denominations, and numerous dignitaries of all sorts, have been found to lend the sanction of their names to these conventions and the object for which they are held. A weekly journal is published in Philadelphia as the organ of the movement, called the Christian Statesman, and edited by the Rev. T. P. Stevenson, an able and earnest man. A National Reform Association is about to be incorporated for the more effectual prosecution of the cause. Public petitions for this "Christian Amendment," as it has been appropriately designated by those who perceive that its real object is to make Christianity the established religion of the United States, have long been circulating for signatures; and it has been declared that 2,000,000 signatures are to be collected and presented to Congress in its support by the next 4th of July. That this movement is a thoroughly vital one, and certain sooner or later to create a fanatical enthusiasm of a very dangerous character, I became more than ever profoundly convinced on attending the national convention of these men at Cincinnati in 1872. It is a movement strong with all the strength of fixed moral purpose and of logic applied unanswerably to the universally accepted premises of the Evangelical Protestant faith; and now that the time is evidently drawing near for amending the Constitution with reference to the religious issue, those who are determined to keep the banner of Protestant Christianity flying over the public schools will soon come to see that they cannot ultimately succeed except through the success of this Christian Amendment. All that is wanting is to "fire the Evangelical heart"; and if the aggressiveness of Rome cannot do this, nothing can. President Grant's proposed amendment is not enough; Mr. Blaine's is not enough; nothing but this thoroughgoing Christian Amendment will impregnably fortify the Bible in the schools. The brain and the soul of the whole Protestant party are in this body of extremists,—this squad of determined soldiers of the Cross, who have carried on undauntedly their weary thirteen years' warfare in the face of indifference and opposition, and now see the decisive hour approaching. I know the tone of intense moral enthusiasm, as every one does who ever heard Garrison and Phillips and their followers in the anti-slavery warfare; and it is a perilous thing for liberty when a manifest spirit like that of the "original abolitionists" can be enlisted in the cause of a Christian Amendment. For this measure means disfranchisement and disability to hold office for every conscientious freethinker; and that means the concentration of all political power in the hands of bigots with conscience, or hypocrites without it, and that must mean, in the end, a million-fold more cruel civil war than the one that so lately filled the land with blood and with tears. Need more be said?

THE CATHOLIC PERIL.

This, then, is the Catholic peril in America,—not alone that the Roman Catholic Church may become a ruling majority, or (what is worse) a ruling minority, with all the measureless miseries and mischiefs of such rule, but that, in order to strengthen the Republic against the possibility of such rulership, the great Protestant party may resort to measures involving a revolutionary subversion of the fundamental principle of the Republic itself. For a hundred years our national life has been slowly developing into a more complete accordance with the principle that the Church and State can be and ought to be wholly separate. To reverse this principle now would be national ruin—a melancholy failure of the experiment of establishing a great civilization on universal reverence for the rights of man. It would not be our loss alone, but the world's as well; for the vitality of American institutions is in their strictly universal and cosmopolitan character, and in their adaptability to every community which has reached a certain average of popular intelligence and independence of character.

THE LIBERAL PARTY.

To defeat all such changes, and to carry forward to a higher, fuller, and nobler realization, the national ideal of a purely secular government, is the one object of the third great party of which I spoke. By this term I mean the vast unorganized body of all those who accept in its fulness the conception of a State absolutely emancipated from all ecclesiastical dictation or influence, and who intelligently defend the total separation of State and Church. Many such may be found, doubtless, among the nominal Protestants,—a few among the nominal Catholics; but the great majority are unconnected with ecclesiastical organizations. In this age of slowly disintegrating beliefs, the positive conception of a purely secular or civil State finds a hearty welcome in many minds which are not yet wholly rid of all contradictory conceptions; the contradictions, however, may be unconsciously harbored and practically inoperative, so far as conduct is concerned. All such are Liberals, in the broad sense I intend; and the true Liberal party must be held to include all citizens who comprehend and embrace the principle of absolutely secular government, whatever their opinions may be in religious matters.

Now this great third party, being unorganized, is of yet undetermined strength. For the first time in our national history, questions are arising for solution at the polls which will reveal its actual numbers and power. But their political programme, enumerating the points on which reform is actually required in order to render the State totally secular in its administration as well as in its theory, has been drawn up as follows in the so-called "Demands of Liberalism":—

"1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

"2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

"3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

"4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

"5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

"6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

"7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

"8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of 'Christian' morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

"9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made."

These "Demands of Liberalism," originally published in the THE INDEX (a weekly journal now printed in Boston), on April 6, 1872, have been copied and scattered all over the country through other publications. Early in 1873, "Liberal Leagues" began to be organized on them as a basis of action, and now number at least thirty, and probably more; but they have accomplished little in the way of tangible results. In fact, the time is hardly yet arrived for opportunities of efficient action.

Although the actual organization of this party is as yet inconsiderable, no thoughtful man will from this circumstance draw any augury as to its future; he will rather study closely the principles it represents, and its necessary relation to the issues which, as I have shown, are already compelling the attention of President, Congress, and people. It is absolutely impossible that the religious agitation into which the Catholic attack on the schools has precipitated the people of the United States should long continue, without calling out from an immense party some powerful affirmation of the fundamental principle [of the Total Separation of Church and State]. I believe that this party will speedily be a majority of the whole people. Even the Protestant Evangelical party are accustomed to accept this principle verbally; what is wanted is to convince them of the necessity of its thorough practical application.

THE FIRST BATTLE-FIELD.

Two representative gatherings are to be held in Philadelphia, at the great Centennial Exposition of 1876, which will bring out in bold, dramatic, and almost startling opposition the antagonistic ideas now agitating the nation. The advocates of the Christian Amendment of the Constitution have called a great convention in support of that ominous measure, and will appeal to the now rapidly reviving bigotry of the Protestant party to take the only step which can perpetuate their present power. The advocates of the "Demands of Liberalism" and the "Religious Freedom Amendment," have also called a convention in support of the movement for thorough secularization of the State, and will appeal to the enlightened patriotism of all American citizens to carry out the measures which may be necessary to that great end. The one convention would undo the work of the forefathers, and prevail upon the children to abandon forever the great principle of the divorce of Church and State, by which the Republic has thus far prospered, in order to restore the antiquated mischief of a State taking its laws from the Church. The other convention would fulfil and perfect the forefathers' work, and prevail upon the children to complete the structure they have inherited, by carrying the same great principle to its consummation in a State whose fundamental law shall be the natural reason and conscience of the people, without a vestige of supernaturalism in its government or administration. In the vast crowd of other interests and excitements, both these conventions may pass comparatively without notice at the time; but the future student of history may yet point back to them as the negative and positive electrodes of a great battery of moral forces, and note here the first spark of a discharge destined to shake a continent to its foundations.

A CURIOUS CUSTOM still survives in North and South Wales and the Border. At a funeral a hireling, "who lives by such services, has handed over to him a loaf of bread, a maple bowl full of beer or milk, and a sixpence, in consideration of which he takes upon him all the sins of the defunct, and frees him or her from walking after death." The scapegoat is called a "Sin-eater." People who laugh at this absurdity think nothing of accepting the immoral doctrine of the Atonement, which has for its leading idea that one man can take upon himself the sins of others, who shall then go scot-free.—Liberal Christian.

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST,

TRANSLATED, WITH INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS, AND EDITED BY F. MAX MÜLLER.

Apart from the interest which the Sacred Books of all religions possess in the eyes of the theologian, and, more particularly, of the missionary, to whom an accurate knowledge of them is as indispensable as a knowledge of the enemy's country is to a general, these works have of late assumed a new importance, as viewed in the character of ancient historical documents. In every country where Sacred Books have been preserved, whether by oral tradition or by writing, they are the oldest records, and mark the beginning of what may be called documentary, in opposition to purely traditional, history.

There is nothing more ancient in India than the Vedas; and, if we except the Vedas and the literature connected with them, there is again no literary work in India which, so far as we know at present, can with certainty be referred to an earlier date than that of the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists. Whatever age we may assign to the various portions of the Avesta and to their final arrangement, there is no book in the Persian language of greater antiquity than the Sacred Books of the followers of Zarathustra, nay, even than their translation in Pehlevi. There may have been an extensive ancient literature in China long before Kung-fu-tze and Lao-tze; but among all that was rescued and preserved of it, the five King and the four Shoo claim again the highest antiquity. As to the Koran, it is known to be the fountain-head both of the religion and the literature of the Arabs.

This being the case, it was but natural that the attention of the historian should of late have been more strongly attracted by these Sacred Books, as likely to afford most valuable information, not only on the religion, but also on the moral sentiments, the social institutions, the legal maxims, of some of the most important nations of antiquity. There are not many nations that have preserved sacred writings, and many of those that have been preserved have but lately become accessible to us in their original form, through the rapid advance of Oriental scholarship in Europe. Neither Greeks, nor Romans, nor Germans, nor Celts, nor Slaves have left us anything that deserves the name of Sacred Books. The Homeric poems are national epics, like the Rāmāyana, and the Nibelunge; the Homeric hymns have never received that general recognition or sanction which alone can impart to the poetical effusions of personal piety the sacred or canonical character which is the distinguishing feature of the Vedic hymns. The sacred literature of the early inhabitants of Italy seems to have been of a liturgical rather than of a purely religious kind; and whatever the Celts, the Germans, the Slaves, may have possessed of sacred traditions about their gods and heroes, having been handed down by oral tradition chiefly, has perished beyond all hope of recovery. Some portions of the Eddas alone give us an idea of what the religious and heroic poetry of the Scandinavians may have been. The Egyptians possessed Sacred Books, and some of them, such as the Book of the Dead, have come down to us in various forms. There is a translation of the Book of the Dead by Dr. Birch, published in the fifth volume of Bunsen's Egypt, and a new edition and translation of this important work may be expected from the combined labors of Birch, Chabas, Lepsius, and Naville. In Babylon and Assyria, too, important fragments of what may be called a sacred literature have lately come to light. The interpretation, however, of these hieroglyphic and cuneiform texts is as yet so difficult that, for the present, they are of interest to the scholar only, and hardly available for historical purposes.

Leaving out of consideration the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, it appears that the only great and original religions which profess to be founded on Sacred Books,* and have preserved them in manuscript, are:—

1. The religion of the Brahmans.
2. The religion of the followers of Buddha.
3. The religion of the followers of Zarathustra.
4. The religion of the followers of Kung-fu-tze.
5. The religion of the followers of Lao-tze.
6. The religion of the followers of Mohammed.

A desire for a trustworthy translation of the Sacred Books of these six Eastern religions has often been expressed. Several have been translated into English, French, German or Latin; but in some cases these translations are difficult to procure; in others they are loaded with notes and commentaries, which are intended for students by profession only. Oriental scholars have been blamed for not having as yet supplied a want so generally felt, and so frequently expressed, of a complete, trustworthy, and readable translation of the principal Sacred Books of the Eastern religions. The reasons, however, why hitherto they have shrunk from such an undertaking are clear enough. The difficulties in many cases of giving complete translations, and not selections only, are very great. There is still much work to be done in a critical restoration of the original texts, in an examination of their grammar and meters, and in determining the exact meaning of many words and passages. That kind of work is naturally far more attractive to scholars than a mere translation, particularly when they cannot but feel that, with the progress of our knowledge, many a passage which now seems clear and easy, may, on being reexamined, assume a new import. Thus while scholars, who are most competent to undertake a translation, prefer to devote their time to more special researches, the work of a complete translation is deferred to the future; and historians are left under the impression that Oriental scholarship is still in so unsatisfactory a state as to make any reliance on translations of the Veda, the Avesta, or the Tao-te-king extremely hazardous.

* Introduction to the Science of Religion, by F. Max Müller (Longmans, 1873), p. 104.

It is clear, therefore, that a translation of the principal Sacred Books of the East can be carried out only at a certain sacrifice. Scholars must leave, for a time, their own special researches, in order to render the general results already obtained accessible to the public at large. And even then, really useful results can be achieved viribus unitis only. If four of the best Egyptologists have to combine in order to produce a satisfactory edition and translation of one of the Sacred Books of ancient Egypt, a much larger number of Oriental scholars will be required for translating the Sacred Books of the Brahmans, the Buddhists, the Zoroastrians, the followers of Kung-fu-tze, Lao-tze, and Mohammed.

Lastly, there was the most serious difficulty of all, a difficulty which no scholar could remove; viz., the difficulty of finding the funds necessary for carrying out so large an undertaking. No doubt there exists at present a very keen interest in questions connected with the origin, growth, and decay of religion; but much of that interest is theoretic rather than historical. How people might or could or should have elaborated religious ideas is a topic most warmly discussed among psychologists and theologians; but a study of the documents in which alone the actual growth of religious thought can be traced is much neglected. A faithful, unvarnished prose translation of the Sacred Books of India, Persia, China, and Arabia, though it may, interest careful students, will never, I fear, excite a wide-spread interest, or command a circulation large enough to make it a matter of private enterprise and commercial speculation.

No doubt there is much in these old books that is startling by its very simplicity and truth, much that is elevated and elevating, much that is beautiful and sublime; but people who have vague ideas of primeval wisdom and the splendor of Eastern poetry will soon find themselves grievously disappointed. It cannot be too strongly stated, that the chief and, in many cases, the only interest of the Sacred Books of the East is historical; that much in them is extremely childish, tedious, if not repulsive; and that no one but the historian will be able to understand the important lessons which they teach. It would have been impossible to undertake a translation even of the most important only of the Sacred Books of the East, without the support of an academy or a university which recognizes the necessity of rendering these works more generally accessible, on the same grounds on which it recognizes the duty of collecting and exhibiting in museums the petrifications of by-gone ages, little concerned whether the public admires the beauty of fossilized plants and broken skeletons, as long as hard-working students find there some light for reading once more the darker pages in the history of the earth.

Having been so fortunate as to secure that support, having also received promises of assistance from some of the best Oriental scholars in England and India, I hope I shall be able, after the necessary preparations are completed, to publish about three volumes of translations every year, selecting from the stores of the six so-called "book-religions" those works which at present can be translated, and which are most likely to prove useful. All translations will be made from the original texts; and, where good translations exist already, they will be carefully revised by competent scholars. Such is the bulk of the religious literature of the Brahmans and the Buddhists, that to attempt a complete translation would be far beyond the powers of one generation of scholars. Still, if the interest in the work itself should continue, there is no reason why this series of translations should not be carried on, even after those who commenced it shall have ceased from their labors.

What I contemplate at present—and I am afraid, at my time of life, even this may seem too sanguine—is no more than a series of twenty-four volumes, the publication of which will probably extend over eight years. In this series I hope to comprehend the following books, though I do not pledge myself to adhere strictly to this outline:—

1. From among the Sacred Books of the Brahmans I hope to give a translation of the hymns of the Rig-Veda. While I shall continue my translation of selected hymns of that Veda, a traduction raisonnée which is intended for Sanskrit scholars only, on the same principles which I have followed in the first volume,* explaining every word and sentence that seems to require elucidation, and carefully examining the opinions of previous commentators, both native and European, I intend to contribute a freer translation of the hymns to this series, with a few explanatory notes only, such as are absolutely necessary to enable readers who are unacquainted with Sanskrit to understand the thoughts of the Vedic poets. The translation of perhaps another Sanhita, one or two of Brāhmanas, or portions of them, will have to be included in our series, as well as the principal Upanishads, theosophic treatises of great interest and beauty. There is every prospect of an early appearance of a translation of the Bhagavadgītā, of the most important among the sacred law books, and of one at least of the Purānas. I should have wished to include a translation of some of the Jain books, of the Granth of the Sikhs, and of similar works illustrative of the later developments of religion in India; but there is hardly room for them at present.

2. The Sacred Books of the Buddhists will be translated chiefly from the two original collections, the Southern in Pali, the Northern in Sanskrit. Here the selection will, no doubt, be most difficult. Among the first books to be published will be, I hope, Sūtras from the Dīgha Nikāya, a part of the Vinaya-pīṭaka, the Dhammapada, the Divyāvadāna, the Lalita-Vistara, or legendary life of Buddha.

3. The Sacred Books of the Zoroastrians lie within a smaller compass, but they will require fuller notes and commentaries in order to make a translation intelligible and useful.

4. The books which enjoy the highest authority with the followers of Kung-fu-tze are the King and the Shoo. Of the former the Shoo King, or Book of History; the Odes of the Temple and the Altar, and other pieces illustrating the ancient religious views and practices of the Chinese, in the Shi King, or Book of Poetry; the Yi King; the Li Ki; and the Hiao King, or Classic of Filial Piety, will all be given, it is hoped, entire. Of the latter the series will contain the Chung Yung, or Doctrine of the Mean; the Ta Hioh, or Great Learning; all Confucius' utterances in the Lun Yu, or Confucian Analects, which are of a religious nature, and refer to the principles of his moral system; and Māng-tze's Doctrine of the goodness of Human Nature.

5. For the system of Lao-tze we require only a translation of the Tao-te-king with some of its commentaries, and, it may be, an authoritative work to illustrate the actual operation of its principles.

6. For Islam, all that is essential is a trustworthy translation of the Koran.

It will be my endeavor to divide the twenty-four volumes which are contemplated in this series as equally as possible between the six religions. But much must depend on the assistance which I receive from Oriental scholars, and also on the interest and the wishes of the public. Among the first volumes to be published will be translations by Prof. Cowell, Dr. Legge, Mr. A. Burnell, of Tanjore, Prof. Childers, Prof. Kielhorn, of Poona, Prof. Eggeling, and myself.

F. MAX MUELLER.

OXFORD, Easter, 1876.

IS SUBSERVIENCY the essence of Christianity, or even tolerable to it? Must a Christian empty himself of all manliness, and recognize God in the person of a man invested with external authority? That Catholicism demands this we all know, as witness the following rule from the Constitution of the "Christian Brothers of the Schools" in Germany: "They must always see in the person of their director God; and they must act toward him as though he were clothed with the presence of God. If the director chides or instructs a brother, that brother must rise up, if he be sitting, and take off his head-covering; if he be standing, he must fall on his knees, and must not resume his place without a sign from the director." And this relating to the "School Sisters": "They shall accustom themselves to regard their superior as the person of Jesus Christ. Their obedience shall be blind. They shall do as commanded, and they shall not ask why." They must "feel that they must be ruled in obedience as by divine authority, just as dead bodies are moved from side to side; they shall in blind subjection renounce every emotion and judgment, and be carried by their superiors as a corpse, or as the staff of an old man, which he holds in his hand, and which serves for any purpose to which he applies it." What moral degradation is involved in rules like these! Christianity, if it were capable of sanctioning or even tolerating them, would be the direst curse that ever afflicted the world. But it does not sanction them; it frowns upon them as cunning devices for crushing all manliness out of men, and making them the dupes and tools of priestly despotism.—Christian Union.

MISS KATE FIELD sends from London these anecdotes of John Bright, which she has from high English sources, to the Courier-Journal: "When Artemus Ward was here he gave a children's party, to which one of John Bright's sons was invited, and from which he returned aglow with delight. 'O papa,' exclaimed the little Bright, when asked by the great Bright whether he had enjoyed himself, 'indeed I did; and Mr. Brown gave me such a nice name for you, papa!' 'What was that?' inquired the father. 'Why, he asked me how that gay and festive cuss, the governor, was!' replied the child. Perhaps you think the great Bright was highly indignant at this taking of his name in vain. He laughed. He didn't laugh, however, on another occasion during our civil war, when the Prince of Wales, while smoking a cigar with him on the terrace of the House of Commons, said to him, 'Don't you think, Mr. Bright, that this war has rendered the Americans heartily tired of a republican form of government, and that they'll adopt a monarchy?' 'On the contrary,' answered Mr. Bright, 'the very struggle the Americans have gone through will render their institutions dearer to them than ever. The Americans are eminently fitted for a republican form of government. They will not abandon it; and the English will never abandon monarchy until they have a king whom they detest.' Comment is unnecessary."

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 10.

G. M. Rice, 10 cents; P. H. Brooks, 10 cents; Julius T. Frey, $3.20; J. R. Morley, $3; Ella Dozier, 80 cents; Parker Earle, $6.20; M. W. Moskley, $1.55; Mary Page, 25; E. W. Meddaugh, $1.00; J. M. White, $1.60; Henry Damon, $3.20; H. L. Houghton, $3.20; G. H. A. Morse, $3.20; M. C. Huling, $3.20; W. Cross, $3.25; Benj. Birdsell, $3.20; J. McMillan, $1.20; W. F. Johnson, $3.20; R. S. Perrine, $3; Robert Cleaves, $3.20; T. J. Crouse, $3.20; B. F. Buck, 10 cents; Wm. Shank, $1.60; T. W. Robbins, $1.60; J. E. Oliver, $1.25; N. C. Nash, 50 cents; George F. Talbot, $3.20; J. Gooding, $3; A. H. Roffe & Co., $2.70; W. L. Taylor, $3.25; R. D. Arnold, $3; J. Winslow, $1.20; Emeline Fowle, $3; A. B. Baker, 30 cents; F. B. Bigelow, 20 cents.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error therein.

A CLERGYMAN who had been staying for some time at the house of a friend, on going away, called to him little Tommy, the four-year-old son of his host, and asked him what he would give him for a present. Tommy, who had a great respect for the "cloth," thought it was his duty to suggest something of a religious nature, so he answered, hesitatingly: "I—I think I should like a Testament, and I know I should like a pop-gun!"

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	2.00
A. Schelling, Philadelphia	1.00
Richard Hackett, Philadelphia	1.00
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore	1.00
R. M. J. Vail, Fort Jervis, N.Y.	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.	5.00
Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	1.00
J. J. Hoopes, Philadelphia	1.00
Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
Warren Griswold	1.00
M. Hamberger, Piedmont, W. Va.	1.00
Wm. Slason, Fort Hope, Ontario	1.00
Chas. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
C. B. Feckham, Newport, R. I.	2.00
S. R. Hony	2.00
J. G. Mills, Goshen, N. Y.	1.00
Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
J. S. Bonsall, Salem, Ohio	.50
O. B. Frothingham, New York	10.00
Mrs. Ellen J. Hasker, Philadelphia	5.00
Mrs. Hannah Merley, Philadelphia	1.00
George Langford	1.00
Thos. Phillips	1.00
Carl Doerflinger, Milwaukee	1.00
Henry D. Maxson, Amherst, Mass.	1.00
A. Friend, New Bedford, Mass.	10.00
Chas. F. Steele, Brooklyn, N. Y.	10.00
Friends in Brooklyn, N. Y.	30.00
S. R. Koehler, Boston	2.00
John Carson, Troy Mills, Iowa	1.00
H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	1.00
H. C. Gray, Painesville, O., (collection)	5.50
J. Sedgbeer	.50
Through Banner of Light	15.50
Boston Investigator	16.75
New Age	5.50
M. Altman, New York City	20.00
F. A. Green, Boston	5.00
Friends in Boston	2.00
J. V. Blake, Boston	5.00
A Friend in	5.00
Geo. W. Park,	3.00
Chas. W. Wendte, Cincinnati	5.00
Robert Moore, St. Louis	10.00
James Eddy, Providence	5.00
W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.	.50
W. L. Foster, East Stoughton, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. Mary G. Thompson, Lancaster, Mass.	3.00
John Wise, Philadelphia	1.00
A Friend in New Jersey	10.00
John Gillies, St. Louis	1.00
Robert Collyer, Chicago	50.00
"An English Brother" (25)	27.25
J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa	1.00
Louis Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.	1.00
B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.	2.00
Mrs. Wm. Heine, Pleasant Hill, Mo.	1.00
Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.	2.00
Thos. H. Matthews, New Bedford	5.00
S. F. Spangler, Winthrop, Iowa	5.00
D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.	1.00
E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.	1.00
C. M. Dennison, New York	5.00
Mrs. Orrin Gillet, Parma, Mich.	5.00
M. Jacoby, St. Louis	2.00
O. W. Heyer, St. Louis	3.00
Philip Godheart, St. Louis	2.00
Mrs. Kotany, St. Louis	1.00
Kohn & Co., St. Louis	2.00
C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn	5.00
William Green, Brooklyn	5.00
Sidney H. Morse, Boston	100.00
Gilbert Cope, West Chester, Pa.	1.00
F. M. Vaughan, Middleboro, Mass.	1.00
E. R. McKenzie, Charlestown, Mass.	1.00
W. C. Fuller, Williamstown, Ct.	3.00
D. P. Wilcox, Yankton, Dakota Territory	1.00
Dr. J. N. Lyman, Columbus, O.	5.00
Daniel G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.	1.00
Geo. Lewis, Providence, R. I.	1.00
Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	1.00
Liberal League, Minneapolis, Minn.	30.00
David Ferguson, Waupun, Wis.	5.00
Matilda Goddard, Boston	5.00
Banner of Light , Boston	5.00
William C. Gannett, Boston	10.00
Geo. Dimmock, Cambridge, Mass.	2.00
Marcus F. Whitehead, Jersey City, N. J.	2.50
J. Farnsworth, Fort Scott, Kan.	1.00
J. L. Cutler, Quitman, Ga.	3.00
Friends in Dexter, Me.	2.00
Henry Damon, Boston	2.00
L. Kingman, Buffalo, N. Y.	2.50
Dr. L. P. Babb, Eastport, Me.	1.00
John Keppler, New Frankfort, Mo.	1.00
Job Angell, Providence	1.00
A Friend in Concord, Mass.	1.00
J. E. Oliver, Ithaca, N. Y.	5.00
Wm. J. Potter, New Bedford, Mass.	2.00
Lewis G. Jones, New York	1.00
Rabbi S. H. Sonneschein, St. Louis	2.00
Hon. John B. Henderson	5.00
Rev. J. C. Learned	2.00
James E. Yeatman	5.00
Rev. R. A. Holland	1.00
Hon. A. W. Kelsey	10.00
Jacob Hoffman, Cincinnati	5.00
Joseph Rosenthal, Granby, Mo.	1.00
William Barnsdall, Titusville, Pa.	2.50
Joseph Barnsdall	2.00
S. R. Urbino, Boston	2.00
L. Prang, Boston	5.00
W. H. Studley, Boston	2.00
H. C. Watson	1.00
W. Warren	2.00
A Friend	1.00
Wm. Dudgeon, New Hartford, N. Y.	5.00
Chas. Coffin, New Bedford	1.00
Elizur Wright, Boston	5.00
C. Whiteer, Boston	1.00
Mrs. E. B. Chace, Valley Falls, R. I.	10.00

JUNE 13.....$695.93

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

* Rig-Ve-Sanhita, The Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans, translated and explained by F. Max Müller. Vol. I. Hymns to the Maruts, or the Storm-Gods: London, 1869.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of	F. A. Angell, Passaic, N. J.	$5.00
" 13.	"	M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.	2.00
" 13.	"	W. Barnsdall, " "	2.00
" 13.	"	E. Whichee, Boston.	5.00
" 13.	"	J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.	1.00
" 21.	"	Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	2.00
" 21.	"	M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.	3.00
" 21.	"	R. H. Ranney, Boston.	6.00
" 21.	"	F. E. Abbot, Boston.	25.00
" 21.	"	C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N. Y.	50.00
" 25.	"	Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.	10.00
" 25.	"	S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.	5.00
" 25.	"	Jehu Blatt, Winchester, Ind.	5.00
" 25.	"	A Friend, " "	1.00
" 25.	"	C. H. Horach, Dover, N.H.	2.50
" 25.	"	Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston	15.00
April 1.	"	T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.	3.00
" 1.	"	Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.	5.00
" 1.	"	Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleve- land, O.	5.00
" 1.	"	S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.	2.00
" 3.	"	A Friend in New York City	50.00
" 3.	"	Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League	20.00
" 3.	"	R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.	5.00
" 8.	"	J. D. Lange, New York City	5.00
" 8.	"	Jane P. Titcomb, Boston	2.00
" 8.	"	Alex. Cochran, Franklin, Pa.	5.00
" 8.	"	B. E. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	10.00
" 8.	"	Warren Griswold, " "	5.00
" 8.	"	C. Nash and sister, Worcester, Mass.	4.00
" 8.	"	F. E. Nipher, St. Louis.	2.00
" 8.	"	K. Hoeh, La Crosse, Wis.	3.00
" 10.	"	H. K. Oliver, Jr., Boston	5.00
" 13.	"	S. R. Honey, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	"	A. S. Brown, Worcester, Mass.	5.00
" 13.	"	C. B. Peckham, Newport, R. I.	3.00
" 13.	"	Geo. W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.	1.00
" 13.	"	Alex. Risk, Winthrop, Iowa	2.50
" 13.	"	Jas. Eddy, Providence, R. I.	10.00
" 13.	"	G. P. Reynolds (for "Liberals of Shelley, O.")	8.00
" 17.	"	J. O. Bentley, Philadelphia	5.00
" 17.	"	J. W. Sullot, Salem, Ohio	5.75
" 17.	"	J. S. Bonsall, " "	.90
" 17.	"	M. Schlesinger, Albany	5.00
" 17.	"	O. B. Frothingham, New York	25.00
" 25.	"	Friends in Bristol Co., Mass.	90.00
" 25.	"	Mrs. N. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O.	5.00
" 25.	"	W. H. Crowell, " "	5.00
" 25.	"	J. F. Ruggles, Bronson, Mich.	1.00
" 25.	"	Mary E. Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.	2.00
" 25.	"	C. Doerflinger, Milwaukee	2.00
" 25.	"	J. A. Heintzelman, Phila.	5.00
May 1.	"	D. G. Grandon, Chelsea, Mass.	1.00
" 1.	"	S. R. Koehler, Boston	3.00
" 1.	"	Geo. M. Murray, Jersey City	1.80
" 1.	"	H. T. Marshall, Brockton, Mass.	5.00
" 1.	"	C. A. Simpson, Saxtonville, "	5.00
" 1.	"	J. Copeland, Humboldt Basin, Oregon	5.00
" 15.	"	B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.	5.00
" 15.	"	"An English Brother" (25)	27.25
" 15.	"	John Gillies, St. Louis	1.00
" 15.	"	J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa	4.00
" 15.	"	L. Löwenthal, Rochester, N. Y.	5.00
" 15.	"	Dr. Max. Landsberg, N. Y.	5.00
" 15.	"	A. Walther, Brooklyn	2.00
" 15.	"	E. R. Brown, Elmwood, Ill.	2.00
" 15.	"	M. Altman, New York City	20.00
" 15.	"	R. E. Grimshaw, Minneapolis, Minn.	5.00
" 15.	"	Adam Wolfe, Port Byron, N. Y.	3.00
" 15.	"	F. P. Hicks, " "	1.00
" 15.	"	Benj. Gerrish, Jr., Bordeaux, France	5.00
" 15.	"	W. L. Foster, East Stoughton, Mass.	5.00
" 15.	"	W. Eysenbach, Lima, O.	.50
" 15.	"	C. H. Phillips, Boston	3.00
" 15.	"	W. P. Phillips, " "	1.00
" 15.	"	H. S. Williams, " "	5.00
" 15.	"	Mrs. Orrin Gillett, Parma, Mich.	5.00
" 15.	"	D. Sandman, Barre Mills, Wis.	2.00
" 22.	"	C. M. Dennison, New York City	5.00
" 22.	"	James McArthur, Chicago	20.00
" 22.	"	C. H. Shepard, Brooklyn	5.00
" 22.	"	Liberal League, Toledo, Iowa.	10.00
" 22.	"	" " " " " "	Boston	25.10
" 22.	"	Mrs. A. L. Richmond.	5.00
" 30.	"	L. Scott, Waynesburgh, O.	1.00
" 30.	"	E. R. McKenzie, Charlestown, Ma.	1.00
" 30.	"	C. K. Whipple, Brookline, Mass.	1.00
" 30.	"	E. B. Moore, Charlestown, Mass.	1.50
" 30.	"	E. H. Warren, Chelmsford, Mass.	2.00
" 30.	"	D. Deming, South Bend, Ind.	1.00
" 30.	"	S. C. Mason, Moberly, Mo.	1.00
" 30.	"	H. C. Hanson, Barnesville, Ga.	.50
" 30.	"	A. M. Dent, Weston, West Va.	1.00
" 30.	"	F. M. Vaughan, Middleboro, Mass.	1.00
" 30.	"	M. P. Barber, Pleasantville, Pa.	1.00
" 30.	"	"Cash," Phoenix, N. Y.	1.00
" 30.	"	G. Cope, West Chester, Pa.	1.00
" 30.	"	Wm. Dudgeon, New Hartford, N. Y.	5.00
" 30.	"	H. Andriessen, Beaver, Pa.	2.00
" 30.	"	E. A. Spring, Perth Amboy, N. J.	.50
" 30.	"	A. Morrison, Braintree, Mass.	5.00
" 30.	"	G. Lieberknecht, Geneseo, Ill.	1.00
" 30.	"	Sophia B. Carter, Andover, Mass.	2.00
" 30.	"	"Widow's Mite," Portage City, Wis.	2.00
" 30.	"	H. C. Southworth, Stoughton, Ms.	1.00
" 30.	"	B. Hollowell, Sandy Spring, Md.	2.00
" 30.	"	E. P. Hassinger, Brodhead, Wis.	5.00
" 30.	"	D. B. Hale, Collinsville, Ct.	1.00
" 30.	"	Rev. J. S. Richards, Liberty, Me.	.10
" 30.	"	H. D. Maxson, Amherst College	1.00
" 30.	"	W. H. Studley, Rockland, Mass.	5.00
" 30.	"	J. W. Marshall, Plattsmouth, Neb.	2.00
" 30.	"	Dr. C. Wesselschaff, Boston.	1.00
" 30.	"	C. A. Greenleaf, Chicopee, Mass.	.50
" 30.	"	L. Goepfer, Union Village, O.	1.00
" 30.	"	W. C. Fuller, Willimantic, Ct.	5.00
" 30.	"	Dr. G. E. Francis, Worcester, Ms.	1.00
" 30.	"	W. W. Baker, Boston.	5.00
" 30.	"	James Parton, Newburyport.	25.00
" 30.	"	Dr. J. D. Thorley, Steel Works, Pa.	1.00
" 30.	"	H. S. Bacon, Milford, Mass.	5.00
" 30.	"	E. C. Darling, Ipswich, " "	2.00
" 30.	"	"Friend," Chelsea, " "	1.00
" 30.	"	Matilda Goddard, Boston	10.00
" 30.	"	"Cash," Boston	1.00
" 30.	"	Dr. W. P. Wesselschaff, Boston.	2.00
" 30.	"	P. A. Chamberlin, Wauseon, O.	1.00
" 30.	"	Albertina von Arnim, Long- wood, Mass.	3.00
" 30.	"	D. P. Wilcox, Yankton, Dak. Terr.	1.00
" 30.	"	C. Lohmann & Son, Edwards- ville, Ill.	1.00
" 30.	"	J. Blain, St. James, Mo.	2.00
" 30.	"	H. T. Wright, Washington Hts. Ill.	2.00
" 30.	"	P. H. Macgill, Baltimore, Md.	10.00
" 30.	"	C. T. Pratt, Pawtucket, R. I.	3.00
" 30.	"	J. N. Clark, E. Somerville, Mass.	3.00
" 30.	"	T. J. Atwood, Albion, Wis.	1.00
" 30.	"	L. Prang & Co., Boston	10.00

April 30.	Received of	W. S. Cunningham, Vienna, O.	1.00
" 30.	"	C. F. Paige, Boston	2.00
" 30.	"	D. E. Mayo, Chelsea, Mass.	2.00
" 30.	"	Jos. Post, Old Westbury, Mass.	2.00
" 30.	"	Louise M. Thurston, Lynn, Mass.	2.00
" 30.	"	J. G. Richardson, Lake City, Minn.	5.00
" 30.	"	G. M. Wood, Washington, D.C.	1.00
" 30.	"	Liberals of Defiance, O.	17.00
" 30.	"	Liberal League, Medina, O.	25.00
" 30.	"	Liberal League, Minneapolis	20.00
" 30.	"	J. W. Cabot, Boston	10.00
" 30.	"	D. Ferguson, Waupun, Wis.	10.00
" 30.	"	Mrs. H. Grinnell, New Milford, Pa.	1.00
" 30.	"	Arethusa Hall, Northampton, Ms.	2.00
" 30.	"	J. Scott, Dighton, Mass.	2.00
" 30.	"	G. M. Wood, Washington, D. C.	1.00
" 30.	"	Thos. Curtis, St. Louis	1.00
" 30.	"	F. Fradley, Brooklyn	2.00
" 30.	"	S. R. Smith, West Winfield, Ct.	5.00
" 30.	"	Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Godfrey, Brooklyn	10.00
June 5.	"	Noah Green, New York	1.00
" 5.	"	P. Sidebotham, Fall River, Mass.	2.00
" 5.	"	Mary H. L. Cabot, Boston	1.00
" 5.	"	L. Kingman, Buffalo	2.50
" 5.	"	M. A. Blanchard, Portland	1.80
" 5.	"	C. M. Dennison, Brooklyn	1.00
" 5.	"	J. Damon, Ipswich, Mass.	3.00
" 5.	"	Cash, Haverhill, Mass.	.50
" 5.	"	Dr. L. P. Babb, Eastport, Me.	2.90
" 5.	"	Isalah West, New Bedford, Ma.	1.00
" 5.	"	Thos. Nye, Ridgeville, O.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. W. Braley, New Bedford	5.00
" 5.	"	J. Keppler, New Frankfort, Mo.	2.00
" 5.	"	Beth Hunt, Northampton, Mass.	2.00
" 5.	"	Dr. E. B. Foote, New York	5.00
" 5.	"	C. M. Waddell, Argillite, Ky.	2.00
" 5.	"	W. R. Morgan, New York	10.00
" 5.	"	C. M. Cuyler, Albany	2.00
" 5.	"	Elizur Wright, Boston	10.00
" 5.	"	B. B. Griswold, Madison, N. J.	2.00
" 5.	"	C. Graeter, Vincennes, Ind.	2.00
" 5.	"	W. Coleman, Leavenworth, Kan.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. L. Cutler, Quitman, Ga.	5.00
" 5.	"	J. Farnsworth, Fort Scott, Kan.	2.00
" 5.	"	M. F. Whitehead, Jersey City, N. J.	2.50
" 5.	"	G. Dimmock, Cambridge, Mass.	3.00
" 5.	"	H. Lieber, Indianapolis	5.00
" 5.	"	D. B. Morton, Groton, N. Y.	5.00
" 5.	"	F. Plimpton, Florence, Mass.	2.00
" 5.	"	A. R. Hinchey, Burr Oak, Mich.	2.00
" 5.	"	Z. S. Wallingford, Dover, N. H.	2.00
" 5.	"	Dr. G. F. Matthes, New Bedford	2.00
" 5.	"	A. Schüller, Keokuk, Iowa	5.00
" 5.	"	M. Peckham, Utica, N. Y.	2.00
" 5.	"	F. Loesser, Brooklyn	5.00
" 5.	"	J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa	5.00
" 5.	"	J. Chappellsmith, New Harmony, Ind.	1.00
" 5.	"	Mrs. M. Chappellsmith, New Harmony, Ind.	1.00
" 5.	"	Susanna E. Hinkly, New Harmony, Ind.	1.00
" 5.	"	Margaret Burns, New Harmony, Ind.	1.00
" 5.	"	C. H. White, New Harmony, Ind.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. C. Wheatcroft, New Harmony, Ind.	1.00
" 5.	"	Wm. Green, Brooklyn	5.00
" 5.	"	M. Fleischmann, New York	10.00
" 5.	"	E. Eising, New York	5.00
" 5.	"	O. O. Friedlander, New York	1.00
" 5.	"	F. Dessaur, New York	2.00
" 5.	"	C. Dessaur, New York	1.00
" 5.	"	G. Biker, New Philadelphia, O.	3.00
" 5.	"	Rabbi M. Samfield, Memphis	2.00
" 5.	"	M. S. Devereux, Irvington, N. Y.	2.00
" 5.	"	E. B. Wolcott, Milwaukee	2.00
" 5.	"	R. M. Whipple, Chicago	2.00
" 5.	"	S. D. Bardwell, Shelburne Falls, Mass.	1.00
" 5.	"	Mrs. L. C. Bardwell, Shelburne Falls, Ms.	1.00
" 5.	"	W. D. Pitt, Groton, N. Y.	2.00
" 5.	"	H. L. Green, Syracuse, N. Y.	1.00
" 5.	"	E. D. Cowperthwaite, Washingt'n	1.00
" 5.	"	J. Wright, Rock Falls, Ill.	1.00
" 5.	"	B. Breed, Lynn, Mass.	1.00
" 5.	"	W. E. Lukens, Rock Falls, Ill.	1.00
" 5.	"	A. Skinner, Ceresco, Mich.	1.00
" 5.	"	F. H. Guivits, Avoca, N. Y.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. T. White, New York	1.00
" 5.	"	J. Maddock, New York	1.00
" 5.	"	B. Lindsey, Boston	1.00
" 5.	"	G. Billings, Chicopee, Mass.	1.00
" 5.	"	O. K. Crosby, Syracuse, N. Y.	.50
" 5.	"	J. Marsh, Northampton, Mass.	1.00
" 5.	"	M. Shore, Litchfield, Ill.	.50
" 5.	"	Dr. S. Wolfenstein, St. Louis	1.00
" 5.	"	Cash, Indianapolis	1.00
" 5.	"	I. P. Greenleaf, Boston	1.00
" 5.	"	J. Ahrens, Monticello, Ark.	.50
" 5.	"	H. Ahrens, Longview, Ark.	.50
" 5.	"	L. G. Jones, New York	.50
" 5.	"	J. Consalus, Troy, N. Y.	1.00
" 5.	"	A. Keen, Duplain, Mich.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. E. Sutton, Olathe, Kan.	1.00
" 5.	"	R. B. Miller, Utica, N. Y.	1.00
" 5.	"	H. H. Chace, Union City, Mich.	.50
" 5.	"	T. Lamory, Concordia, Mo.	.50
" 5.	"	T. Tibbetts, Augusta, Me.	.50
" 5.	"	F. Goodeyar, Cortlandville, N. Y.	1.00
" 5.	"	John Orth, Boston	1.00
" 5.	"	Henry Damon, Boston	2.00
" 5.	"	Jos. Warbasse, Newton, N. J.	5.00
" 5.	"	E. E. Chapin, Rockford, Ill.	.25
" 5.	"	T. Martin, W. Boylston, Ms.	1.00
" 5.	"	H. H. Fletcher, W. Boylston, Ms.	.50
" 5.	"	Nath. Little, Newbury, Ms.	1.00
" 5.	"	E. R. Sanborn, Leavenworth, Kan.	1.00
" 5.	"	W. H. Farrell, Leavenworth, Kan.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. Reedy, Toledo, Iowa	3.00
" 5.	"	B. F. Horton, Dexter, Me.	1.00
" 5.	"	W. F. Johnson, Cleveland, O.	6.80
" 5.	"	T. J. Crouse, Clinton, N. Y.	1.00
" 5.	"	R. S. Perrin, New York	2.00
" 5.	"	L. Lamott, Groton, N. Y.	2.00
" 5.	"	F. G. Johnson, Towanda, Pa.	1.00
" 5.	"	Rabbi A. Rosensplitz, Nashville	1.00
" 5.	"	E. D. Stark, Cleveland, O.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. S. Thomson, Bloomington, Ill.	1.00
" 5.	"	Mrs. J. N. Lyman, Columbus, O.	2.00
" 5.	"	John Alexander, Shelby, O.	1.00
" 5.	"	R. Pritchett, Fort Madison, Iowa	2.00
" 5.	"	Peter H. Clark, Cincinnati	1.00
" 5.	"	Geo. Lewis, Providence	1.00
" 5.	"	B. S. Hopkins, Providence	2.00
" 5.	"	J. S. Bonsall, Salem, O.	1.00
" 5.	"	W. T. P. Menefee, Crittenden, Ky.	1.00
" 5.	"	H. W. Gilbert, Philadelphia	1.00
" 5.	"	A Friend in Concord, Mass.	1.00
" 5.	"	J. E. Oliver, Ithaca, N. Y.	5.00
" 5.	"	Wm. J. Potter, New Bedford	3.00
" 5.	"	R. Wilkin, San Buenaventura, Cal.	2.00
" 5.	"	W. S. Shepherd, San Buenaventura, Cal.	2.00
" 5.	"	Jacob Hoffer, Cincinnati	5.00
" 5.	"	A. Braasch and friends, Mishi-	5.00
" 5.	"	cott, Wis.	5.00
" 5.	"	W. F. Allen, Madison, Wis.	5.00

June 13.	Received of	L. J. Burch, Modoc, Col.	.25
" 13.	"	G. A. Hill and friends, San Francisco	5.00
" 13.	"	E. Bentley, Morgan City, La.	1.00
" 13.	"	L. A. Harbaugh, Toledo, Iowa.	3.00
" 13.	"	Cash, Cambridge, Mass.	.50
" 13.	"	E. Z. Penfield, New York.	5.00
" 13.	"	R. O. Old, Georgetown, Col.	1.00
" 13.	"	L. Liebmann, Brooklyn.	2.00
" 13.	"	W. Barnsdall, Titusville, Pa.	2.50
" 13.	"	Miss H. S. Ware, Boston.	5.00
" 13.	"	Eben Turk, Chelsea, Mass.	2.00
" 13.	"	W. H. Saxton, Oberlin, O.	1.80
" 13.	"	J. Miehli, Decatur, Ill.	.60
" 13.	"	D. H. Schofield, Baker City, Or.	1.85
" 13.	"	J. C. Ruud, San Francisco.	.50
" 13.	"	Jos. Barnsdall, Titusville, Pa.	3.00
" 13.	"	Cash, Delphos, O.	1.00
" 13.	"	H. Frederic, Utica, N.Y.	1.00
" 13.	"	H. Brown, Mondovi, Wis.	.25
" 13.	"	L. Markham, Madison, Ga.	1.00
" 13.	"	G. Frauentstein, New York.	5.00
" 13.	"	A. Loos, Germantown, Pa.	1.00

izing a NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, and of promoting the organization of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues throughout the country.

"Resolved, That we heartily coöperate with the Freie Gemeinden of North America, who propose to meet there in general convention at the same time and for a similar purpose."

At the same convention Francis E. Abbot, Damon Y. Kilgore, Alexander Loos, Isaac Rhen, B. F. Underwood, and H. S. Williams were appointed as a General Centennial Committee "to make all necessary arrangements for the general Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia in 1876, and also to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for a NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE"; and it was further ordered that "said Constitution and By-Laws [should] provide for the formation of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues throughout the country, and be submitted for approval to said general Congress of Liberals."

In obedience to these instructions, the General Centennial Committee now beg leave to announce the following arrangements and general programme of proceedings, subject to such modifications as may be rendered inevitable by circumstances or by the action of the convention itself.

The Centennial Congress of Liberals will be convened at Concert Hall, on Chestnut Street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth Streets, Philadelphia, on Saturday, July 1, at 2 o'clock, P.M. Concert Hall will seat about two thousand people, giving each a cushioned chair. It has a large stage and two large ante-rooms, and is excellently adapted to secure the comfort and convenience of a large convention.

Railroad officials refuse to make any other reduction in fares than the excursion rates agreed to by all the principal companies, of which all delegates and members can avail themselves. A local committee is at work to secure a list of cheap boarding-places for the accommodation of members. The necessary price will not exceed $1.50 per day, nor be less than $1.00. All who wish to avail themselves of these accommodations should write without delay to D. Y. Kilgore, Secretary, 605 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

In order to enjoy the rights and privileges of membership, it will be necessary for delegates from Liberal Leagues, or other Liberal Societies desiring to join in the Liberal League movement, to be provided with proper credentials signed by their own local officers. Individuals not delegates can receive a certificate of membership on writing for, filling up, and returning a blank form of application which can be obtained by addressing F. E. Abbot, Chairman, 1 Tremont Place, Boston. It can also be obtained at Concert Hall, July 1, at 1 P. M.; and all who may not previously have received their certificates should not fail to present themselves promptly at that time. This is the only way to prevent confusion and vexatious delays to all concerned. Over five hundred certificates have been already issued to applicants for membership; there is every indication of a great increase of this number; and immediate application will save trouble and time in organizing the Congress when it meets.

The following order of business has been adopted by the Committee, subject to ratification by the Congress itself:—

Saturday, July 1: Afternoon Session, 2 P. M.

1. Temporary Organization.
2. Appointment of Committee on Membership, and reception of credentials.
3. Address of Welcome, by the President of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
4. Reply, by the Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.
5. Report of the Committee on Membership.
6. Report of the General Centennial Committee.
7. Appointment of Committees on Permanent Organization, on Finance, on Resolutions, and on Address to the People.
8. Consideration of the General Centennial Committee's Report.
9. Consideration of the Constitution of the National Liberal League.

Evening Session, 7 1-2 P. M.

1. Consideration of the Constitution of the National Liberal League, continued.
2. Report of the Committee on Permanent Organization: election of officers of the National Liberal League.
3. Short speeches.

Sunday, July 2: Morning Session, 10 1-2 A. M.

1. Reading of extracts from letters by distinguished citizens.
2. Address by F. E. Abbot: "The Liberal League Movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope."

3. Address by Mrs. C. B. Kilgore: "Democracy."

4. Short speeches.

Evening Session, 7 1-2 P. M.

1. Address by James Parton: "Cathedrals and Beer."
2. Address by B. F. Underwood: "The Practical Necessity of Separating Church and State."
3. Short speeches.

Monday, July 3: Morning Session, 10 1-2 A. M.

1. Address by Charles F. Paige: "Is Christianity a part of the Common Law?"
2. Report of the Committee on Resolutions: free discussion of the proposed methods and measures of the National Liberal League; action of the League on the Resolutions taken singly.

Afternoon Session, 2 P. M.

1. Address by Damon Y. Kilgore: "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions."
2. Continuation of the discussion and action on the Resolutions.

Evening Session, 7 1-2 P. M.

1. Address—[probably by Charles D. B. Mills].
2. Reports by Delegates from various Liberal Leagues throughout the country.
3. Short speeches.

Tuesday, July 4: 9 A. M.

1. Report of the Committee on Finance.
2. Report of the Committee on Address: "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States."
3. Action on the Report.
4. Adjournment.

According to this general programme, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday will be devoted mainly to business, and Sunday to addresses. It is hoped that all who propose to attend will be on hand punctually at the first session of Saturday, in order to participate in the important proceedings of that day. The Committee have labored assiduously for months to bring the business of the Congress into shape to be acted upon without unnecessary delay, and to render the sessions in the highest degree effective; but whatever is done will be done by the Congress itself in the exercise of its own independent judgment. The Committee's only object has been to facilitate, not to forestall; and they have been governed throughout by the conviction that the Congress will be composed of members representing the best practical wisdom and most earnest spirit of the liberals of the country. Whether this conviction is well-grounded, or not, can be shown only by the ultimate result. But the importance of a full attendance, in view of the momentous subjects on which the Congress will be called to act, is sufficiently obvious. Let every one who values the fortification of religious liberty and the establishment of equal religious rights be present.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Chairman.

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Secretary.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The prospects of the several candidates at Cincinnati is the most exciting theme of the hour, and promises to become more and more exciting until about the time that this number of THE INDEX is mailed to our readers. Mr. Blaine's friends are confident of his success; Mr. Morton's friends are sure that he will obtain the nomination; and Mr. Conkling's friends know that he will carry off the prize; and yet we suppose that none of our readers need to be assured that there is very little likelihood that any one of these gentlemen will reach the longed-for goal, and this fact is probably pretty well understood by some of those who talk the bravest and about the loudest for their acknowledged favorites. We hardly dare to prophesy that no one of the three will be nominated, for the reason that we have very little faith in the wisdom of the practical politician, and cannot tell in advance, therefore, what he may be persuaded to do; but we have good reason to believe, nevertheless, that the party leaders will labor to prevent any nomination which would surely be followed by consequences disastrous to the organization. The Republican party can carry the next election, without doubt, if it will only adopt a sufficiently explicit reformatory platform and nominate a man of the purity and firmness of character requisite to carry out reformatory principles; but it will certainly lose the next election if it nominate a man who, like Blaine, or Morton, or Conkling, has long been a necessary part of the thing to be reformed.

The notorious letters of Blaine to Fisher were made public early last week. Had we been aware of their contents, at the time of writing last week, the knowledge would only have intensified the opinions then expressed concerning Mr. Blaine and his character. The letters, notwithstanding Mr. Blaine's pretended explanation of them in the House, prove conclusively that he was mixed up with the affairs of the Union Pacific, Northern Pacific, Kansas Pacific, and Little Rock & Fort Smith Railroads at a time when these roads were before Congress for legislation; that he held stock and bonds in them, "controlled interests," and advised his friends to invest in them, and wrote to their managers in order to remind them of the services he had rendered and could render them. We are willing to admit that Mr. Blaine, in all probability, has never been guilty of safe burglary or highway robbery, and that he may never have taken money as a bribe in the vulgar way in which it was taken by Belknap or Orville Grant; but his own admissions, as well as these letters and his actions, show that he utterly lacks the high standard of honor which should be necessary at all times in a President of the United States, and which is especially necessary at the present time in the man who will have to encounter the political corruptions which are sure to assail the coming President.

Blaine's deficiencies have nothing whatever to do with the fairness or unfairness of Proctor Knott and the Judiciary Committee, with the misconduct of the Democrats or the maliciousness of late secessionists, and the attempt of Blaine's friends to divert attention from his past conduct to the present methods of his enemies shows a sad lack of apprehension of the requirements of a candidate for the Presidency. A curious instance of this kind of judgment was exhibited the other day by the Rev. L. I. Townsend, a professor in the Boston University, in giving an address before the graduating class of the Theological Department. His subject was Christian heroism as illustrated by John the Baptist, and among modern illustrations of the same quality he actually referred to Blaine "routing the riff-raff of secession on the floor of Congress." Some little time ago, when commenting upon Bishop Haven's droll advice to pray for the reflection of Grant, we warned the Methodists that they seemed to be in especial danger of moral deterioration. We think our words are quite likely to be confirmed when already one of their leading divines and professors can behold a Christian hero in a railroad-operating and stock-jobbing political wire-puller, and another clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Mallalieu, can refer to the same man as one "who has been lied about and who has suffered from malicious detraction" but who yet "stands up true to our churches, true to our schools, true to the old flag." This kind of talk, especially from religious teachers, is very sad stuff. A man may be able to "rout the riff-raff of secession," or may be "true" to church, school, and flag, and yet—as we have learned from those pious men, Howard, Harlan, and Smith—may be a very sorry rascal.

Some of the scenes in Congress during the past week have been very peculiar, and the House has presented more than once an appearance about midway between that of a bear-garden and a circus. Notwithstanding the tumults, however, a considerable amount of work has been got through with by both Houses. The Senate agreed to listen to evidence in the impeachment trial July 6th; resolved to favor a common unit of money and accounts for the United States and Great Britain; passed the Legislative Appropriation Bill; the Fortification Appropriation Bill, without amendment; the Post-Office Appropriation Bill; and a bill relating to the jurisdiction of Circuit Courts; accepted the report of a conference committee with reference to a bill appointing receivers of national banks; increased the number of army officers detailed to teach military tactics; and accepted, from the State of Vermont, a statue of Ethan Allen. The House passed a resolution allowing the Committee on Banking and Currency to report at any time,—a vote favoring the soft-money men and intended to permit a repeal of the Resumption Act; passed also the Indian Appropriation Bill, retaining the clause which transfers the Indian Bureau to the War Department; and a bill intended to expedite the sale of public lands in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida; prohibited lottery circulars from passing through the mails, and provided a penalty for the circulation of obscene books; discussed the Geneva Award Bill; passed the Post Route Bill; and a bill to prevent "straw" bids; accepted the report of a conference committee on the appointment of receivers of national banks; passed two Senate bills,—one amending the Bankruptcy law, and one reducing the Medical Corps of the Army; passed a bill to facilitate the philosophical, mechanical, and scientific exhibition at the Centennial; and passed also two "silver" bills,—one authorizing the issue of $10,000,000 of silver coin now in the Treasury in exchange for legal tender notes, and one authorizing the coinage of $20,000,000 of silver coin, to be issued in the ordinary disbursements of the Treasury.

Rapidly-accumulating evidence goes to show that Secretary Robeson was well-fitted to be a companion of Belknap, and that he may yet be obliged to accompany the latter in his retirement from the Cabinet. The evidence against him, although purely circumstantial, is, nevertheless, terribly damaging. Of late years he has been growing rich with astonishing rapidity although living in a very expensive manner upon a salary of only $8,000 per year. During the same time he has had very intimate business relations with and received large sums of money from A. G. Cattell & Co., who were also comparatively poor men a few years ago. During the same time, also, Messrs. A. G. Cattell & Co. have had a strange amount of influence in the Navy Department, and have been steadily bleeding contractors at an enormous rate. Some of the connecting links of this evidence are lacking, the Cattells having destroyed their accounts, and having conveniently forgotten what they did with a great deal of their money; but no one doubts the character of their relation to Robeson, which was openly talked about, in fact, long before suspicions were entertained of the guilt of Belknap.

Speaker Kerr has given an apparently candid and satisfactory explanation of his appointment of Green, and it is to be hoped that Harney's testimony, if true, may receive additional confirmation, or that, if untrue, its falsity may be fully demonstrated. It is difficult to believe, or at least would be so in ordinary times, that a man of Kerr's reputation and ability would sell out his honor for so small a mess of pottage. The Committee will report, unanimously it is said, in Kerr's favor.

Secretary Fish's reply to the last letter of Lord Derby, with reference to the extradition of Winslow, makes the neat point that in 1886 "when it was proposed to amend a bill to carry into effect the treaty with France by requiring a stipulation similar in its purport to that now asked of the United States, his Lordship at the time Lord Stanley, and then as now Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, opposed the amendments, saying that in a 'case like this international courtesy demanded that the treaty should not be materially altered without communication with the other party.'" After further comment Mr. Fish states finally that "the United States has in due form, and after complying with every requirement of the treaty, demanded the surrender of Winslow and the other criminals in London, and it is for Her Majesty's government to decide whether Great Britain will or will not perform her treaty obligations." In the mean time, Mr. Hoffman, our Chargé d'affaires at London, had agreed to an amendment to the treaty of 1842, which amendment, in the opinion of Secretary Fish, yielded the very point in controversy in the Winslow case, and was, moreover, identical with one previously rejected by the United States. Mr. Hoffman was immediately informed by telegram that his conduct in this respect was "unauthorized, regretted, and disapproved," and the English government was assured that Mr. Hoffman, so far as relates to the extradition treaty, is strictly limited to conveyance of specific instructions from his government. As the case now stands, Winslow will be released on the 15th inst., unless the English government recedes from its present ill-advised position.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, in a very excellent speech in favor of public parks in Boston as means of reducing the high annual death-rate of the city, calls attention to facts which cannot help being of interest to all parents during the hot weather; namely, that the most prevalent disease among children from June to October is cholera-infantum, and that the very best medicine for cholera-infantum is fresh air. Children may be cured, when all drugs fail, by a ride in the open air or a sail upon the water, which latter may be obtained simply by crossing and recrossing a ferry upon a steamboat. He quotes from statistics, and from eminent physicians, and gives facts of personal observation, in support of his statements.

Servia, under the pressure of Russian influence, is reported to have accepted an armistice of six weeks proposed by the new Sultan who desires to enter upon direct negotiations with the insurgents. Disraeli has stated, in Parliament, that Murad will be recognized immediately by all the great powers. The insurgents are divided upon the question of accepting the armistice proposed by the Sultan, but there is little danger of any immediate outbreak. Russia seems determined to preserve peace, if possible, and as no other nation would be helped by a general European war at present, the evil day for Turkey may be for a short time postponed.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, May 10, 1876.

The British, Continental, and General Federation for the Abolition of Government Regulation of Prostitution, have just been holding their first annual conversazione and conference at the Westminster Palace Hotel. For many years past an earnest and devoted band of laborers have been agitating in England for repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, and have struggled bravely on, amid much obloquy and bitter attacks. Many men, who show no indignation against the evil of prostitution, have no words harsh enough for those who speak about it, and while they appear to consider that some women are in their necessary sphere in the streets, they think that other women are out of their sphere when they protest against the degradation. It ought to be clearly understood that the real immodesty lies with those who make the social evil, and not with those who strive to remedy it. There is too much of the false shame which hides a wound, and too little of the real shame which would shrink from inflicting it.

The English society for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts may congratulate itself on having made it impossible that these Acts should be extended over the country. Mrs. Josephine Butler, as noble and gallant-hearted a woman as ever breathed, has been the life and soul of the movement. She has sacrificed to it comfort, health, worldly admiration. Universally courted, she resigned the flattery of society for a crusade which has made her the mark for every unmanly taunt and bitter sneer which could be uttered by those whose vice she assailed. Hooted at, howled down, exposed sometimes to personal danger, she has gone on with tireless courage; only the pain and the toil are seen in the ravages they have wrought. They have not daunted the brave heart, but they have shattered the health, and on the once exquisitely lovely face they have stamped the signet-mark of suffering, which will never again pass away. Mrs. Butler deserves the reverence and the homage of every one who knows how to honor self-devotion, and to admire heroism. In the prosecution of her labors, Mrs. Butler was naturally led to examine into the working of similar legislation in the countries where it prevails, and some months ago it struck her that it would much strengthen the hands of her co-workers if it were possible to bind together into one strong union those in every country who sympathized with the movement for repeal. Right through Europe she travelled, lecturing as she went, until in the various towns the seed she scattered sprang up and bore fruit, and men and women banded themselves together to work in the ranks of abolition. At last an international federation was formed, and this is the body which has just held its first annual gathering. It was intended to add to the conversazione and conference a great demonstration in St. James' Hall, and M. Loyson—better known as Père Hyacinthe—came over to England specially to speak at this meeting. Unfortunately our charming English climate prostrated the French orator, and an attack of congestion of the lungs made any work from him impossible. The demonstration has consequently been postponed, in the hope that M. Loyson may speedily recover, and may afford an English audience the opportunity of hearing the eloquence which in days gone by crowded the cathedral of Notre Dame, and swayed the Parisian world.

The conversazione last night was well attended, Mr. Stansfeld, M. P. and ex-minister, sharing with Mrs. Butler the duty of receiving the guests. When I arrived there, accompanied by Mr. Bradlaugh, the large room was just full enough to look sociable, but not too full for pleasant sauntering. Among the first faces we saw were those of Mr. W. E. and Mrs. Ernestine Rose, and it was pleasant to see Mrs. Rose looking better and stronger than she has been for some time past. She reports herself as more in love with America than ever, her foreign travel only raising higher in her eyes the great Republic. Passing on after a few minutes' friendly chat, we met outstretched hands in every direction, finding ourselves among a number of people who knew us better than we knew them, and a pleasant feature was the kindly greeting of several clergymen, who begged permission to introduce themselves to Mr. Bradlaugh. Two of the cloth, less liberal, fled from the room profaned by the presence of the Atheist leader, but their defection did not seem to cause great regret, as we were gleefully informed of the fact by a member of the reception committee. Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Bright, Mr. Peter Taylor, Mrs. Pennington, Dr. Channing, and Professor and Mrs. Sheldon Amos were among the guests, nor should we omit the foreign guests, M. de Pressensé and M. Aimé Humbert, who came as representatives of the French and Swiss branches of the society. Needless to say that the bright face of Madame Venturi was also to be seen, the Madame Venturi who was one of Giuseppe Mazzini's closest friends, and who, in dangerous days, when Italy's unity was only a dream, proved a staunch envoy and trusty messenger to the patriot conspirator.

The conference was held to-day in the same room, Mr. Stansfeld in the chair. He opened the proceedings by referring to the present aspect of the movement, urging increased effort, as legislation of the character they were agitating against could not stand still; it must either be repealed or extended. Two or three letters were then read from sympathizers who were unable to be present, among others a rather foolish one from M. Theodore Monod, who remarked that the statement that "prostitution was a necessary evil was a libel upon God and man." One wondered drearily why God permitted it if it were an unnecessary evil. Professor Stuart then read a report, relating to the formation and progress of the international society, and specially drew attention to a work published by the society, entitled The New Abolitionists, which gives the details of "the mission undertaken to the Continent of Europe by Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, and of the events subsequent thereupon." This formal business over, Mr. Stansfeld called upon M. de Pressensé to address the meeting; M. de Pressensé is a pasteur of the Gallican Reformed Church, and was formerly deputy for the Department of the Seine. He is, perhaps, best known to foreigners as the author of a Life of Jesus, written against the more celebrated work of M. Renan. M. de Pressensé spoke fluently and with considerable power. He warmly urged that it was a degradation to the State to become, as it were, the guarantor and vendor of the human bodies and souls which filled the market of prostitution. In reply to the suggestion that the women of the streets were so degraded as not to be worthy of consideration he pithily answered: "le vice qui se vend est abominable, mais que dites-vous du vice qui achète?" A point of view curiously lost sight of by legislators on this subject. Most certainly there would be no supply if there were no demand. There was also true oratorical power in a picture he drew of a repenting prostitute "qui se précipite vers Jésus de Nazareth, mais le police dit: Arrêtez, vous n'êtes pas autorisée de quitter les rangs." Less happy was his appeal to mothers to use on their sons' behalf the weapon of prayers and tears employed by the mother of St. Augustine. Readers of his "Confessions" will be inclined to seek some preventive more rapid in its action. When M. de Pressensé sat down, Mr. Stansfeld announced that a translation of his remarks would be given, and a gentleman stepped forward, armed with a voluminous MS., and commenced to read monotonously an English version of the impassioned French to which we had been listening. It was too much. Though several speakers remained that I desired to hear, I rose and fled, anathematizing inwardly so wearisome a proceeding, and remarking to Mr. Bradlaugh that people who only knew their mother-tongue had no business at an international conference, however useful they might be in other walks of life.

Communications.

GLASGOW LETTER.

GLASGOW, May 21, 1876.

DEAR INDEX:—

In English-speaking countries May seems to be the sacred month. Accordingly during the past week there have met in Edinburgh the annual assemblies of our three chief Presbyterian churches. For you must observe that the Presbyterian Church of Scotland is, unlike the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost of the Athanasian Creed, not one church, but three large churches, together with a number of smaller unimportant ones. Englishmen have long ago given up trying to understand the distinctions (with a difference, it is to be presumed) which divide "the Church of Christ in our land." And Scotchmen, it seems to me, are beginning to follow in their wake; for of late the talk has been all of union. But as yet the result is "much cry and little wool," as the following résumé of recent Scotch ecclesiastical history will show.

About the year 1837, two or three of the various Presbyterian denominations then existent in Scotland joined to form the United Presbyterian Church which was to be run on voluntary principles; i. e., the advocacy of the separation of Church and State. In pursuance of their purpose this united body in the year above mentioned made an onslaught by speeches and discussions on the Established Church, which is also, of course, Presbyterian. The defence of the State-church was mainly, if not solely, sustained by that portion of it which afterwards in 1843 seceded from it, on the occasion of the State supporting a patron in imposing a distasteful minister on an unwilling congregation. These seceders styled themselves the Free Church, and avowed as their distinctive principle that it is the duty of the State to support the church, both by finding her in funds, and enforcing her decrees; but that it is not the duty or the right of the State to claim, in return for this support, any interference with or control over the Church,—the ultramontane claim, as Cardinal Manning not long ago pointed out. But twenty years' experience of the perverse obedience of the State to the first half of its demand, in endowing a rival church which was willing to take the State's pay without claiming to be the State's master, converted the great majority of the Free Church to the opinion that it is not the duty of the State to connect itself in any way with the Church. This point reached, there seemed no reason why an amalgamation with the United Presbyterian Church should not take place. Feelers were accordingly put forth on both sides, resulting in open negotiations for union, which were protracted through a long, weary course of years, but resulted in nothing, though the stubborn inability of a minority of the Free Church to see that "circumstances alter cases."

As this union, if consummated, would have dangerously threatened the existence of the national Church, seeing that the three bodies are pretty nearly equal in numbers, wealth, and influence, the break-down of the negotiations was hailed with joy by the Established Church, the more sagacious leaders of which immediately set themselves to the task of trying their hand at union. Accordingly, with the aid of the conservative government, patronage in the Church of Scotland was abolished about a year ago, and the congregations are now left to choose their own ministers. Of course this action was adopted in the hope that it would bring back a number of the Free Church laity, on whom the outlay in keeping up a church supported by voluntary contributions pressed hardly. It was followed by another astute but rather unhand-some stroke of policy further to weaken the Free Church. The ministers of that Church may be called by any Established Church congregation, and will be instituted to the charge without any troublesome procedures in the Church courts such as were formerly required in receiving a minister from another denomination. Up to the present time there have been but two instances of defection from the Free Church on the part of her ministers, and in neither case was the man a man of any weight or reputation. But the howls of rage on the part of the Free, and the crowings of joy on the part of the Established Church over these two events were such as would have induced a stranger to believe that they heralded the immediate downfall of the dissenting community. It is difficult, in fact for the unconverted simply impossible, to discern what locus standi is left the Free Church now that patronage is abolished. But the manner in which the Established Church and the Tory party have gone about to undermine a Church which seceded for an appreciable grievance, and which has worked for the ends it cherishes in the most earnest and successful way, provokes the contempt and merits the denunciation of every lover of fair play.

While the negotiations for union between the Free and the United Presbyterian bodies were pending, the United Presbyterians ceased from urging in any pressing way their voluntary principles. But since the break-down of these negotiations the United Presbyterian body is again taking up the disestablishment cry. Two acts on the part of that body lately, however, would make one believe that the real motive of the crusade is jealousy of a sister church, not loyalty to civil or religious liberty. They approved the exemption of church-property from taxation, which, as all readers of THE INDEX know, is nothing more nor less than direct endowment by the State; and still more recently at the school-board election they approved of the teaching of the Bible and the catechism in the public (which ought to be strictly secular) schools. Their defection from principle on these occasions is only another instance of what you are constantly preaching,—that it is useless to look to any church to carry out consistently and to the final issue the conflict for LIBERTY.

If anything worthy of note should occur in the proceedings of the assemblies, you shall have a report of it next week.

Yours very heartily, JAMES BOYD.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—If the religion of a people corresponds to its collective intellectual development, and this in turn may be determined by its progress in art and science, no better opportunity could be desired for the study of the comparative value of the various religions of the civilized nations of the earth than is afforded by the Centennial Exposition. Further, if the religious and social development of a people depends upon the climate, temperature, and material products of the country which they inhabit, here is ample opportunity to trace these varied religions to their real causes. Yet, strange as it may seem, a very exciting contest is going on in Philadelphia as to whether this Exposition, with all its instructiveness on this great subject, shall be opened to the public on the first day of the week,—the day set apart by common consent for rest from physical toil and for the more thorough study of the great problem of life. One would suppose this day above all others to be the most proper time for the advantageous and, if you please, religious study of this wonderful collection of the products of Nature and art from all quarters of the globe.

The Centennial Commission, assisted largely by the Board of Finance and the Women's General Centennial Committee, have evinced much foresight, sagacity, and breadth of character in the management of this Exposition, and not only should be well paid for their labor, but deserve the thanks of the American people for the comparative study of the nations of the earth here afforded. Their action in determining to close the Exposition on Sunday is so thoroughly short-sighted and at variance with the intellectual appreciation of freedom which they have exhibited, and yet so far-reaching in its consequences to the American people, that one is led to inquire what could have been the impelling motive.

It is a difficult task to divine the motives of individuals, and there is much danger of injustice; therefore, while others conjecture that the closing of the Exposition on Sunday is General Hawley's bid for the Christian vote of the community for the Presidency, I prefer to speak only of facts and their consequences. Certain it is that the individual members of the Commission do not especially care for the Sabbath as a religious institution, but a very strong pressure has been brought to bear upon them from the Church to close and keep closed the Exposition on Sunday. Add to this the fact that, when this question was under consideration by the Commission, one of their number made an earnest, emotional speech in which, after stating that he had lived for many years in the extreme West where the Sabbath was unknown and almost forgotten, he referred to his early education received kneeling by his pious mother's side, and told them how this question brought before him not only his early lessons of the Sabbath and of Jesus, but the loved memory and influence of that Christian mother long since deceased; until two-thirds of the Commission, amid their tears, voted for the sustaining of that religion so precious to their mothers. Perhaps statesmen will yet learn that it were wiser to enfranchise the mothers of the nation, and make them intelligently responsible for the powerful influence which they ever must wield in its destiny. Liberals will do well to note the power of a thoroughly organized religious superstition and the comparative weakness of freethought.

In Philadelphia, clergymen, Jewish Rabbis, and the Liberal League, in their respective meetings, are considering this question; and large mass-meetings have been held both in favor of sustaining the action of the Commission, and also to induce them to reconsider their determination. Eminent lawyers, clergymen, and individuals of high standing have participated in these meetings, and it is well said that talent, culture, and purity are about equally divided upon this question. But outside of Philadelphia the Church, from Maine to Texas, and the Atlantic to the Pacific, as with one united voice, have sent to the Commission resolutions, earnest appeals, and promises of support and sympathy to sustain them in their action, while the freethought of the nation is dumb, having no regularly organized channel through which to communicate its demand to the Commission.

In this question is involved the whole question of the union of Church and State, and this contest is a trial of the forces of the Church and the liberal element of the nation. The Church makes bold to state that "this is a Christian country," and that the majority of citizens, being Christians, have the right to demand a national recognition of whatever religious opinions they may agree upon.

The Commission, even if now conscious of the difficulties in which their hasty and emotional decision may involve them, cannot well reconsider this question without some formal expression from the liberal element of the country. A voice should come up from every town and hamlet, demanding still that liberty of conscience guaranteed by our forefathers one hundred years ago. Can we afford to delay action? I think not. Our public buildings, newspaper offices, places of business, and private dwellings are decorated with the flags of all the nations of the earth, expressive of our feeling of kinship and welcome to all peoples of all nationalities and religions at our jubilee. Anything that savors of national action in favor of enforcing an observance of our religious institutions upon our foreign guests is inhospitable to them and humiliating to any citizen jealous of our national reputation for justice, honor, or politeness.

But I started to write you of the Centennial Exposition. First let me say that it is a marvel, to which no pen has yet done justice. So much is there to be seen that for the first few days the visitor sees nothing minutely; but his expressions are constantly those of wonder and surprise at the vastness and magnificence of the display.

As an education to our people the Exposition is invaluable. Here are exhibited the natural products, mineral, agricultural, horticultural, and floral, of all quarters of the globe; the machinery, scientific and philosophical instruments used for the utilizing of these products; the fabrics, utensils, and articles of both utility and beauty made from them, showing the designs, workmanship, and industries of the different peoples and ages; also their works of art and literature, historical, scientific, and religious. In short, the Exposition is an epitome of civilization itself, representing the governmental, educational, social, industrial, and religious institutions of almost every land. These are hard times, but the thinker cannot afford to stay away. The result of the Exposition must be enlarged thought and a feeling of unity with and charity for all nations, peoples, and ages.

I have passed the day in Egypt. The exhibit of Egypt is situated a little to the south-east of the centre of the main Exposition Building. Her frontispiece bears the following modest and expressive inscription: "Egypt, the oldest people in the world, sends its morning greeting to the youngest nation." To be thus reminded of our exceeding youthfulness, and of course ignorance and inexperience among nations, is not flattering to our Centennial vanity, but nevertheless instructive. But on second thought we may congratulate ourselves upon this greeting, for to be counted worthy at our first Centennial to receive the greetings of the oldest people in the world, who, after having existed thousands of years as a nation, still regard themselves as in the morning of their national life, is evidence of amazing growth.

On entering Egypt, the first object on the right which attracts your attention is a model of the Pyramid of Cheops, and just back of it, hung upon the wall, is a bird's-eye view of Cairo, with the Pyramids of Cheops and Ghizeh visible in the distance. Upon the left of the doorway is the door of the sanctuary of a Cairo mosque of the fourteenth century, beautifully carved and inlaid with ebony and ivory. Just in front of it stands a statue of the original Pharaoh of Moses, claimed to have been modelled after a statue found in Egypt many hundred years before Christ, which represents the king as a young man. From the pleasant, genial countenance which the artist has given him, I conclude that the Lord had not yet hardened his heart. Here is also a statue of King Khafra, or Khephres, who lived four thousand years before Christ and was the builder of the second of the three greatest Pyramids, and another of Ameniritis, Queen of Ethiopia, B. C. 300; also photographic representations of ancient temples, mosques, obelisks, the tombs of the Califs and of the Mamelukes and the Mokattan, the statue of Ibrahim Pacha. These objects are especially dear to the Egyptian, because held in religious veneration by himself and his ancestors; while to us they are monuments of the ancient Egyptian's superstition and the modern Egyptian's knowledge of the art of photography.

I observed also a tiny pen-and-ink representation of the citadel of Cairo, which for its artistic beauty is not easily surpassed. In the furnished apartment are found Arabic carved doors, inlaid dressing-cases, book-holders, stands, and other articles of beauty and comfort; but I was most interested with the three-legged stands for candlesticks two and one-half feet high, and beautifully inlaid with mother-of-pearl and lead. The candlesticks on exhibit are of solid silver, the pedestals being representative of ancient Egyptian deities. The kitchen and toilet utensils are made of gold, of silver, ivory, tortoise-shell, the horn of the rhinoceros, and red and yellow clay. Here is also a writing-desk of solid silver, and chess-boards inlaid with ebony and ivory, showing the workmanship and social life of the Egyptian.

The wearing apparel and tapestry, consisting of window and door-curtains, tray and table-covers, are of unusual richness, mostly of silk or velvet, and embroidered in gold and silver. A blue velvet tray-cover, richly embroidered, is valued at $2,000. Some of the Egyptian cloth upon exhibition is made from the bark of the wild fig, which grows south of the Nile,—the bark being rolled and beaten until of the proper thickness and evenness.

The models from the Polytechnic School of Cairo are of especial interest; also the specimens of the natural woods, grains, and plants of Egypt, including its lentil, wheat, maize, barley, rice, peas, beans, tamarinds, and pomegranates, its acacia, mahogany, etc. Its cotton and wool are of a fine quality; its cocoons of different shades and conditions are especially fine and very tastefully arranged,—some of them perforated by the insect eating through are still upon the leafy branch upon which they were formed. Its musical instruments are exceedingly crude; so are its implements of warfare, as Egypt, not being a Christian nation, has not for many centuries felt the necessity of extending its religion by the use of the sword.

Very truly,

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE.
PHILADELPHIA, June 5, 1876.

MIRABEAU'S DEATH.

The "leap-in-the-dark" story, told of Mirabeau by Rev. J. P. Newman in his last printed sermon on "Science and Religion" (p. 153), has been related also of Hume, Gibbon, Voltaire, and perhaps others. When a clergyman finds a good "infidel death-bed" story, he can make it do as well for one of these noted heretics as for another. The reverend doctor puts it in this way: "The dying words of Mirabeau must be the dying words of every man who relies on science rather than religion: 'Cover me with flowers, banquet me with music, delight me with perfume, for to die is to take a leap in the dark.'"

The following account of the last hours of Mirabeau (Honoré Gabriel Requette, 1749—1791) is from the American Cyclopædia:—

"After a night of terrific suffering, at the dawn of day he addressed Cabanis [his physician]: 'My friend, I shall die to-day. When one has come to such a juncture, there remains only one thing to do; that is, to be perfumed, crowned with flowers, and surrounded with music, in order to enter sweetly into that slumber from which there is no awaking.' He ordered his bed to be brought near the window and looked with rapture on the brightness of the sun and the freshness of the garden. His death was mourned by the whole nation; every one felt that the ruling spirit of the revolution had passed away."

The reverend gentleman's version has just enough truth in it to enable one to determine positively its falsehood on the very point he desired to emphasize; namely, the "leap in the dark." To Mirabeau death was evidently no "leap in the dark," but a calm sinking into eternal sleep,—annihilation. "Science cannot light up the tomb," says Dr. Newman. To Mirabeau this was the light it shed upon it; not as theatrical as that which Dr. Newman's theology throws on it, perhaps, but quieter, and better calculated for unselfish minds. Dr. Newman's blue and red lights are vouchsafed to every criminal who is jerked into eternity from a rope's end, and how naturally they all seem to take to it! It does not require a Mirabeau, a Hume, a Mill, or a Huxley to do that. Brimstone and blood—a damning God and a saving Christ—hell and damnation—heaven and (to quote Dr. Newman) "the crown, the palm and the harp"—to say nothing of the New Jerusalem with its streets paved with gold.

"That prophet ill fulfils his holy call
Who makes not heavens to suit the tastes of all."

Clergymen often forget that the idea of a future existence is centuries older than Christianity, and they could not learn that it will probably endure centuries longer.

There are those, however, who think that science will "light up the tomb"; not with the false lights and uncertain colors that tradition and superstition have sought to shed upon it, but with the clear light of knowledge. These so-called light-bearers under the name of religion pretended to "light up" the origin of things. Science has shown that the light led only to illusion. These, under the same holy name, declared the origin and form of the earth. Science has proven the declarations false. These, still dogmatic and self-satisfied, have sought to teach the origin of beings, and the issue of the battle now raging on this point can be foretold from the issue of the others. These, too, unfortunately, because science has not yet reached that field, assume to tell the fate of the dead. But some profit by human experience, and look to the sun for light, and if it be not yet risen, await. A want of information is always better than misinformation. Those who nobly leap in the dark, with the darkness confessed, have nothing to unlearn beyond; but those who shroud life in delusion, and leave it with false ideas and expectations of the hereafter, must there have all the pain and misery of throwing off an incubus of ingrained falsehood.

G. M. W.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

JAMES H. COTIER.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Friend,—I have received, as a result of the article in the columns of THE INDEX, seven dollars from unknown parties for James H. Cotier; five dollars from one, two from another, for which I would thank them in behalf of Mr. Cotier. I would further state that more than a week ago the young man in question left the hospital, hoping to be able to go back to his business; but he has been obliged to return to the hospital to submit to another operation upon his eye, and may have to remain for weeks. He ought not to have left as he did; but, having no means to pay expenses, he was obliged to do so. There surely are many who will, if they can, spare him a little, that he may remain a sufficient length of time to enable him to enter upon his accustomed labors in a condition suited thereto. There is great danger of his losing his sight, if he is not favored; and, in view of all he has suffered in the past, and his great efforts to stand a man among men, weakening naturally weak eyes by reading proof day and evening, and studying often till two or three in the morning to gratify his thirst for knowledge, there certainly must be among those who remember his honest, open countenance some who will aid him at this his most trying hour. Hoping this will meet the eyes of many who can help him, I remain

Yours sincerely, M. S. WETMORE.

31 CROSS ST., CHARLESTOWN, Mass., May 28.

A LADY, in describing the attempt at singing of a gentleman who had no voice for it, and who had an uncouth peculiarity in his gait, said: "He walked up and down the room like a bear in a cage, making a noise like a choked earthquake."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON.

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, E. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mrs. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Printer.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England, and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties. Uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Groves, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Idgins and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Idgins, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	3.00
Essays. Second Series.....	3.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Cosmogony of Energy. By Richard Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautes. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
